WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED "THE REVIVAL."

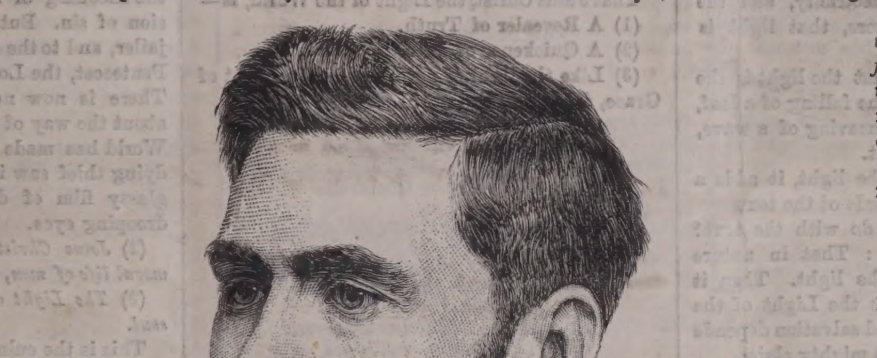
No. 832.] LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. THURSDAY, JANUARY 7, 1886. REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. [ONE PENNY. POST FREE, 1½d.

REV. T. EYNON DAVIES.

THIS young minister to the Congregational Church at East Finchley hails from that nursery of preachers, the principality of Wales. He was born in the town of Cardigan in 1854. In early life he made a public profession of faith in Christ, and was received into membership of the Welsh Independent Church in his native town. All his early surroundings were Welsh, and he has been heard to say that he had not heard half a dozen English sermons for the first twenty years of his life. The religious surroundings of his youth were of the kind usual in Wales. His Welsh Sundays began with a prayer-meeting at seven o'clock in the morning, and there was no rest from the day's delightful labour until about nine o'clock in the evening.

The quaint little town offered none of the facilities for mental culture now within the reach of every young man, so that Mr. Davies found an outlet for his energy more particularly in religious and temperance work. Since his fifteenth year he has been privileged to work and speak for the Master: at seventeen he was an ardent temperance worker, and was President of a Temperance Band of 200, many of whom stand firm to this day.

Yielding to the desire—thrice expressed—of the church with which he was connected, he gave up his secular work, and prepared for the Christian ministry. He passed through Brecon College in due course, and settled down in an important Welsh Pastorate, at Cwmaman and Cross Inn, in Carmarthenshire, where about 800 members attended his ministry, and where for three years he laboured with success, both in the pulpit and out of it. During his brief Welsh career he preached and lectured again and again in every county in Wales.



(From photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons.)

He has been for years a regular contributor to the Welsh Press. On leaving the Welsh for the English ministry he was offered some of the best pastorates in Wales, but in pursuance of his great object he accepted a temporary pastorate at the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, Swansea, as successor to his brother (Rev. J. Ossian Davies, of New Court, Tollington-park), and in July of 1884 he commenced his ministry at East Finchley, where the Lord has much blessed his work. Every sitting in the spacious edifice has been let long ago, and the additions to the church since the commencement of the pastorate have been very numerous. All the societies are in good working order. There is a flourishing Young Men's Society, of which Mr. Davies is president, and altogether the Lord has greatly blessed his settlement in his present pastorate.

His style of preaching may be judged by the sermon which follows. He is a Puritan in sympathy and in spirit, and, like the great Apostle to the Gentiles, seeks to "know nothing" in his preaching "save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Like all Welshmen, he is a lover of his native land, and spends a part of every year preaching in his mother-tongue to Welsh audiences.

He appears regularly at some of the Welsh cymanfaow and is never happier than when preaching to the multitudes, which always crowd to these great assemblies, the unsearchable riches of Christ.

CHRIST THE LIGHT.

By Rev. T. EYNON DAVIES.

"I am the Light of the World."
JOHN viii. 12.

WE all know what is meant by the familiar word "light." For all that, light itself is a mystery—a puzzle.

It has provoked the curiosity of the scientific man. It has excited the admiration of the savage, sometimes to such a pitch that admiration has become downright worship.

Look at our days of the week, and in the very names of those days we find traces of the light worship of antiquity. The first day of the Christian week is called after the Sun—Sunday, and the next after the Moon—Monday, and the last after Saturn—Saturday. These point to the light worship of antiquity in its various forms; and among the fantastic dreams of superstition and heathenism in reference to light, there are some of them exceedingly beautiful.

In Arabia, long ago, a child of the desert with a poetic soul looked up at a rainbow arching the clouds, and said it was the angels' bridge over which they took the souls of the blest home to God. The beauty of that idea is undeniable, but there are others that can only provoke a smile.

Ask Science to tell you what light is, and the science teacher will say, in a somewhat roundabout way, that the universe is filled with ether, and some force (which is mysterious) starts vibration in this ether. These vibrations enter the eyes, touching nerves there which carry impressions into the brain, and we see! Ask for more particulars, and you will be told that light is a force—an all-pervading force, and that so many billions of the vibrations referred to produce the colour red, and so many produce violet, and so on. Now all this is very interesting and valuable in its way, but the ordinary man is none the wiser, and he feels, that though a great deal has been said about light, his question has not been touched; and if he persists in repeating his question and demanding a reply, true science will honestly say, "I don't know."

Very well. If we cannot find out what light is, we can find out what the light can do, and that will help us on with the text.

The light is a marvellous traveller. Sound is not a slow traveller, but it is nowhere in the race with light. From the sun to the earth it is about ninety-eight millions of miles. The light can speed over it in eight minutes; sound must have fourteen years. Then the light is the parent of colour and of electricity, and the photophone hints, if not more, that light is the parent of music.

Modern science will say that the light is the mightiest force in nature. The falling of a leaf, the floating of a cloud, the heaving of a wave, are due to the energy of light.

If all this be true about the light, it adds a world of meaning to these words of the text.

But what has all this to do with the text? My point is to show, first: That in nature everything depends upon the light. Then it follows, second: If Christ is the Light of the world, everything in grace and salvation depends upon Him who has made this mighty claim.

Now we go back to the narrative. These words were spoken by our Lord in the Temple. The Pharisees—taking upon themselves the functions of a moral police—found some poor woman in sin, and brought her to the Master. Were they so extremely holy themselves? Were they anxious for the opinion of the Lord Jesus Christ? No! this was simply one of the many ingenious traps set by the Pharisees to catch Him. As usual, they did not succeed, and they came out of the conflict (as they always did) second best! When the story of her shame had been told, Jesus invited one of their number to cast a stone at her; but not one of the holy men ventured to do it. The challenge fell like a bombshell among them, and they dispersed. By and by they return, and they were the first to hear the words of the text, "I am the Light of the World."

This is no mean claim. No prophet, no priest, had ever dared to say this. The prophets were lights in Israel, shining with a holy radiance in those dark and terrible times. But the light they shed was borrowed light. Correctly speaking they were reflectors.

But this claim of the Lord Jesus goes far beyond that. "I am the Light of"—what?—"of the world." Not one light out of a thousand, but the Light of the World—past, present, future.

The claim is so vast and comprehensive that it could not fall with decency merely from human lips. This claim, like nearly all the claims of the Messiah, must have God behind it, for out of the mouth of man it would be profanity of the deepest dye.

There are, as we know, men—good and honest men—who listen to the claims of the Redeemer; they will admit the beauty of his life and teaching, say that he was a model man, but they deny the Divinity of his person. We fail to see how Jesus Christ, if only a man, can be a good man at all. One of the Latin Fathers has well said: "Christ, if not God, is not good." If not God, these great claims of his must be false, and if the claims be false, the man who makes them must be false likewise. "Christ, if not God, is not good," and on this Rock we stand!

This is a grand theme, and the difficulty in dealing with it is not to decide what to say, but what not to say. The landscape is so vast, so crowded with beauties, that in looking at it we are bewildered and lost. Christ, the Light of the World!

Well, let us consider for a moment the attributes of natural light. What does the earth owe to the sun? It owes its order, beauty, stability, purity, and life; and we owe to the sun indirectly all that helps to make our natural life endurable and happy.

The light of Nature then is the source of order, beauty, stability, purity, and life. Each of these points opens up a mine of truth, but I shall ask your attention to three points.

That Jesus Christ, the Light of the World, is—

(1) A Revealer of Truth.

(2) A Quickener of Life.

(3) Like the light of nature so is the Light of Grace, free to all the world.

(1) Christ is a Revealer of the Truth.

Pilate's question has no need to puzzle any man now. Christ gives the reply. Indeed He is the reply—Truth made flesh. We thank God for reason, but that is not infallible. Witness the Spartan and theft. The Hindoo widow and suicide. Yonder mother throwing her child into the Ganges. The Mahommedan and polygamy. The philosophers with their disputes about Matter and Mind. Reason cannot lead to the whole truth. It may lead to error, and see no wrong in it. But now, in the face of Jesus Christ, the truth stands fully revealed, and we have a Guide infallible.

Christ reveals the whole truth. As the light of nature reveals beauty and deformity, the rose-bank and the cesspool, so the Lord, in the sacred volume, reveals the malignity of vice, and the wiles of Satan as well as the beauty of holiness.

Satan plays havoc with us because he is an arch deceiver. Sin wears a mask, and the mask wears a smile, and by this bewitching smile we are mesmerised, forgetting all the while that it is a smile on the devil's face. Sin is an arch deceiver. It will talk to you about bread, and give you a stone. Talk about a fish, and hand you a hissing snake. Talk about heaven, in the very act of rushing you off to nethermost perdition.

Sin has generally two parts: there is a body and a soul; there is the outward appearance of sin, which is often enchanting, and there is the hidden nature of sin—always infernal.

Sin often seems harmless enough. Just like gunpowder. Keep the fire away from gunpowder, and it is harmless enough. Harmless, why? Harmless, because it has no chance to be otherwise. And that black, powdery sand gives you no idea of what gunpowder really is. Gunpowder in a cask is gunpowder asleep! If you want to see the dangerous thing awake, go with me to the quarry, where it shivers the ribbed rocks and shakes the hills with its awful thunder. Just so with sin. It is deceptive. It will promise a fair wage, but when the day's service is over the sinner wakes up to the dreadful truth that the wages of sin is death. Jesus knew the nature of this mighty fraud, and He has shed a light upon sin, so that we have no excuse at all for any moral leaps in the dark.

And, again, Jesus Christ has shed a light upon salvation. That question came thundering down the centuries: How can man be justified before God? And there was no clear reply.

There were confused suggestions. The Jewish altars pointed to a sacrifice required. The victims on those altars pointed out that without the shedding of blood there could be no remission of sin. But to the cry of the Philippian jailer, and to the cry of distress on the Day of Pentecost, the Lord Jesus has given a full reply. There is now neither haziness nor ambiguity about the way of salvation. The Light of the World has made the matter so clear that the dying thief saw it at a glance—saw it when the glassy film of death was spreading over his drooping eyes.

(2) Jesus Christ has quickened the mental and moral life of men, and

(3) The Light of Christ is free to every human soul.

This is the culmination of my message to-day. And if there be any poor man or woman here short of this world's goods they will be prepared to say that the best wine comes last. That the gift of God is free—"without money and without price."

But do you think God has elected me to be saved from eternity? Don't trouble yourself about that. Life is too short to be used in vain attempts to fathom the unfathomable. Ah, but has God elected me to be saved? I don't know, but God has not elected you to be lost, or it is solemn mockery to be always inviting you in his name, and with his authority, to accept the free gift of eternal life.

The Light of Grace, like the Light of Nature, is free. "Whosoever will" may come. All the world knows how saintly Richard Baxter used to bless God for that all-inclusive word. It is far better, said he, than if the Lord had put my own name down in the book of revelation, for if I found Richard Baxter's name there, I am so vile a sinner I would have imagined He must mean some other Richard Baxter, and not me. But God's "whosoever" includes the vilest of all.

We pay for our artificial light. The gas companies and electric light companies and the rest reduce light into a matter of £ s. d., but we pay nothing for the light of the sun.

Natural light and spiritual light, like all the gifts of God, are free. God has given open rivers, where poor men may fish without a license. It is not Heaven's fault that the poor fisherman is taxed. Old Zebedee and his sons never paid for a license. And so of the heavens; God has filled the air with birds of all colours and qualities, and He gives no assent to grinding farm-laws. God's gift of water is free. It goes up in the vapour from a hundred seas, and the clouds carry it gratis, showering it upon the rich man's park and the poor man's garden-patch. The water bubbles up from a million wells, filling the laughing torrents, swelling the rolling rivers, and Nature asks no water-rate.

But God can afford to do this. And among his countless mercies see how He sends forth the light of the morning. It goes to the Queen's drawing-room, and the Queen is glad to see it. But though the light is on visiting terms with royalty it does not scorn to cheer the pauper's dying chamber. The light! It beautifies the foliage of the tropics, bathes with life the mighty cedar and the stately palm, not forgetting, however, the daisy on the village green, or the snowdrop on the little child's grave. Beautiful type of God's everlasting love! He is the God of the rich and of the poor, and, if Jesus Christ came back to live on earth, I am not sure that He would stay at any palace or mansion in the aristocratic West. Perhaps he would find his happiest Bethany in a garret in the East-end of London.

Solomon, the great Oriental monarch, Lazarus, the wretched Oriental beggar, are of equal rank to-day. One has forgotten that ever he was a king; the other that he was a beggar; and as they walk on the golden streets they are there on equal terms, knowing very well that neither would have reached heaven at all had it not been for the redemption wrought by the Lord Jesus, the Life and the Light of men.

"Lead kindly light amid th' encircling gloom,
Lead thou me on.
The night is dark, and I am far from home,
Lead thou me on.
Keep thou my feet, I do not ask to see
The distant scene: one step enough for me"——

"One step," and that step into Christ, and all's well, for time and for ever.

PREVENTION of CRUELTY to CHILDREN.

THE excellent Society having this object has issued its first report. Containing as it does many revelations of cruelty practised upon children by parents and others, it will be read with painful interest by all who rejoiced in the Society's inauguration eighteen months ago. During the first year it had under its consideration 95 cases of cruelty, involving 175 domestic victims, beside a much larger number in public institutions. Of these, 53 were cases of aggravated assault. Many were cases of "deliberate starvation and horrible neglect." The Society's Shelter, 7, Harpur-street, Theobald's-road, W.C., is not in any sense a home for children, but "simply a temporary roof pending trials and permanent disposals." Here 779 nights' lodging were given, and 2294 meals. The committee's attention has been called to cruelties practised upon child-acrobats, but as yet have failed to induce eye-witnesses to give evidence. The entire report should be read with care; much valuable information will be gained relative to the definite aims as well as to the scope and limits of the Society. The hon. sec. is Rev. B. Waugh. The Shelter is open day and night.

SOLDIERS' HOME, DOVER.—A large gathering of the soldiers' wives "off the strength" and their children was lately held in the Soldiers' Home, Dover, where a tea was provided for them. The mothers (who compose the mothers' meeting held weekly at the Home) received parcels containing blankets and clothing, kindly contributed by ladies, while the children were delighted by gifts from a splendid Christmas tree. We cannot too highly speak of the work of this Home, and of the indefatigable zeal of Miss Wright, the Lady Superintendent. E. F.

Poems for the New Year.

A HYMN.

WITH no untouched and silent heart,
The new-born year let us receive,
Else Thee, our Father, we shall grieve,
And act a cold, ungrateful part.

This year, like those of ancient time,
From thine eternity has sprung;
Be thy most glorious praises sung
With thanks sincere and hopes sublime.

Both life and death are thine, and they
Who live in Thee can never die:
Do Thou our highest needs supply,
And teach us how to watch and pray!

Days make the years, and moments days;
May all our moments, Lord, be thine—
Then shall our days with beauty shine,
And all our lives be hallowed lays.

Each year shall then an angel be,
To speed us on our heavenward race,
Till we behold our Saviour's face,
And join the white-robed company!

Dawson Burns, D.D.

CHANGING YEARS.

"We shall all be changed."

ONWARD, still onward, busy days are fleet-
No halting by the way; [ing,
The year is changed, another gives us greeting,
As dawns our new year's day.

And, with the years, our life is changing ever—
New hopes, new aims, new fears,
Perchance new sorrows, nearest ties to sever—
Temptations, toils, and tears.

Our homes are changing—seeking friendly faces
We enter other doors;
And some have quitted dear familiar places,
And sailed for distant shores.

And dearest friends are changing—heads are
And active hands are still; [whiter,
With some the evening-time is growing brighter
As they go down the hill.

The children, changing, meet life's sternest duty,
And join its rushing tide;
That little maiden, full of health and beauty,
Is now a happy bride.

And we ourselves are changing—are we reaping
Some fruit of early years, [weeping,
Springing from precious seed we sowed with
Some recompense for tears?

Has earth less hold upon our fond affections?
And are they set above?
And do we recognise our Lord's corrections
As from a Hand of love?

Thank God for changes—still with changes ever
He will his work complete;
Change night to day, and good from evil sever,
And bitter change to sweet.

Change unbelieving prayer to glad thanksgiving,
And make the feeble strong,
That we may, even here, by faith be living
A life of tuneful song.

Like weaver's shuttle, or a fleeting story,
Our changeful years we spend;
But change us, Lord, from glory into glory,
In years that have no end!

Our feeble body change from earthly framing,
And fashion it like thine;
And, for Thyself the ransomed spirit claiming,
Bid it more brightly shine.

Then, whether we may pass death's shadowy
Or wait till Christ appears, [portal,
We shall be changed, and raised to life immortal
Beyond these changing years.

Lucy Taylor.

LIFE'S THRESHOLD.

O LITTLE feet, as yet untired
By any steps on Life's rough way!
O sweet blue eyes, undimmed by tears!
O dimpled hands, stretched out in play!

Love longs to lead those little feet
Through sunny meadows, bright with flowers;
Where all is fair, and glad, and sweet—
An azure sky that never lours.

Love longs to teach those laughing eyes
To see with clear and earnest sight
Each turning page of Life's great book,
Where few, alas! can read aright.

Love longs to give those little hands,
Stretched out to us in merry play,
Blossoms to hold, that have no thorns,
And treasures none can take away.

And yet how powerless, at the best,
Is human love. Through hopes and fears
Those little feet must walk alone,
And those blue eyes shed many tears.

Those little hands may have to yield
Up treasures they will toil to gain;
And they must find earth's flowers have thorns,
For every joy is fraught with pain.

But, Love Eternal, Thou art near;
Around our restlessness, thy rest!
Those Thou dost guard, and guide, and teach
Are now and ever fully blessed.

Oh, may these feet walk in thy ways;
May these sweet eyes look up to Thee;
These little hands receive thy gifts:
Thus blessed to all eternity.

A. M. Charlesworth.

EASTWARD HO!

O LAND of the sunrise, and uttermost isles,
Where morning in Asia the earliest smiles;
The eldest of countries, the greatest, the last,
Enchanted, enchained as the slave of the past;

Where idols, dumb idols, are worshipped alone
In temples of error, and Christ is unknown;
I mourn for thy millions, all, all but ignored,
Still living and dying afar from the Lord.

With the knowledge of Jesus distinguished and blessed,
To whom the dear record of life has been given
To bear it to all that are found beneath heaven.

Up, up with the sail! to the eastward away!
No languor, no lingering, no selfish delay;
Haste, haste to the rescue, swift traverse the seas;
Give, give ye the words of salvation to these!

They wait for the message, neglected they wait—
Shall it come? But for millions, alas! 'tis too late;
They droop, they despair, they descend to the grave,
They perish, though Jesus is mighty to save.

They perish—they perish! their blood at thy hands
O preacher, O Christian, the Saviour demands;
For yet at his coming, for soon at his seat,
The neglecter of souls the neglected shall meet.

But their children are yonder! Hark! hear you their
Come over and help us, come soon, or we die! [cry?
'Tis you they are calling—'tis you and 'tis me;
Let us go to them, brother, their brothers are we!

O land of the Bible and sweet Sabbath bell,
O land of our fathers, we bid thee farewell;
To follow the Saviour, and publish his word
To the heathen who never of Jesus have heard,

H. G. G. in "China's Millions."

THE HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE, INVERNESS.—We have before us the fifth annual report of the Highland Orphanage, an excellent institution carried on by Mr. George Walker and Mr. Matthew Elliot. At present there are fourteen children in the Home. The report says:—"Seeing that no collectors are sent out to collect for any of the funds connected with the Orphanage, we trust that other friends may be added to those who have hitherto given substantial help, so that the daily requirements of another year may be provided for, and the deficit of £130 wiped off." We commend the object to all who have money to spare, as one of the best to which they could subscribe.—Inverness Courier.

WHOLLY FOR CHRIST.

A CHRISTIAN'S MOTTO FOR THE NEW YEAR.

By Dr. THEODORE CUYLER.*

WE never like to find fault with our "Authorised Version" of the Scriptures, unless we are compelled to do so. But the common rendering of the twelfth verse of the third chapter of Philippians gives a very weak idea of a very strong passage. Paul really means to say, "I press on" (for the prize), "if I may seize that for which I was seized on by Christ Jesus." Dean Alford's rendering is: "If I may lay hold on that for which I was laid hold of by Christ Jesus." Paul realised that the crucified Saviour had grasped him on the road to Damascus and appropriated him to his glorious service. When we contemplate the prodigious vigour and the splendid dialectic skill of the man, we do not wonder that Christ coveted him for the Apostolate, and "seized on" him by his converting grace.

Bearing this in mind, we understand better why Paul's motto should have been "this one thing I do." He lived for one great purpose, and to that he bent all his powers and consecrated all his faculties. In the best sense of the term, Paul was a man of one idea. The "hold" of his intellect (if we may use a nautical simile) was abundantly stowed with resources of learning, argument, and rich mental gifts; but a single holy purpose trod the quarter-deck and floated its ensign from the peak. "Go a little deeper," said a wounded French soldier at Austerlitz, to the surgeon who was probing his left side for the bullet—"go a little deeper, and you will find the Emperor." So the great Apostle might say, Go deeper, go to the inmost core of my heart, and you will find the crucified Jesus. Other feelings I am possessed of, but this one possesses me. Other affections lie near the surface, but this master passion lurks and lives in the inmost centre of my soul. For me to live is Christ. This one thing I do; forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

All the men and women who have made their mark in this world and have achieved the best results have kept the eye clear and single toward one noble purpose. The master passion with Newton, the prince of Christian philosophers, was science. He attributed his splendid successes in discovery to the simple principle of "always intending my mind" upon the one thing in hand. Luther jarred all Europe by continually hurling the great revealed truth of "justification by faith" against its old ramparts of superstition. Such men swing their whole being into one direction. The effective Christian is the man who unites all his powers into a single pile or package, and then binds them round with this strong cord—"The love of Christ constraineth me." So Paul bound up his, and hurled the mass with such momentum that it burst through, and has come bounding on even into these modern centuries.

A man of moderate talent may achieve blessed results for Christ by consecration. George Müller is a striking illustration. He lives and acts every day as if the loving Jesus had seized on him for a single purpose—viz., to house and feed and instruct thousands of little orphans. Instead of letting his life waste itself into numberless little twigs, he, like a wise gardener, has pruned them off, and allowed the whole sap of his spiritual being to flow into one or two bountiful boughs, laden with precious fruit. I can name, within the circle of my acquaintance, several men and women of wonderful effectiveness for good who are not gifted with remarkable talents. Their single talent is to love Jesus and to serve Him thoroughly. More than half the battle with Moody is that he aims all his powers, every moment, at one target. Alas! how many lives of professed Christians are utterly wasted by being frittered away into scores of channels, instead of being condensed into the single purpose of doing Christ's will, and thereby being of some service in the world. With all such the pulse of love to Jesus beats low and feebly. They need a reconversion, a thorough pruning away of the limbs which steal the heart's-blood from their Master. The first step must be the penitential prayer: "Lord, I am a cumberer of the ground. What wilt Thou have me to do?" And when they have taken the new departure, let them put their soul into it. This process, well begun and well carried out in all our churches, would soon quadruple the power of our Christianity. It would be hard to discover what is the "one thing" for which thousands of church members are living, unless it be for money-making or some respectable form of self-indulgence.

To "get on" in the world is the uppermost thought; and if by "getting on" no more is meant than industrious thrift and honest provision for life's necessities, then is it not only innocent, but commendable. God's Word honours industry and frugality. Would that both of them were more practised as Christian virtues. But while a Christian is striving to get on, ought he not to be still more earnest in his endeavour to get up? Ought he not to make life's chief aim to "press toward the prize of a high-calling"? to attain to a higher spiritual stature? to ascend toward the fuller, stronger, clearer likeness to his Master? My brother, are you getting up every day?

President Van Buren is reported to have remarked, when he heard that his son, a lawyer, had married a lady of large wealth: "Well, he is ruined! She is very rich. Now he will give up his profession, for which he has great ability, and become merely a rich man—the least useful of human things." This is too true. Merely to absorb and enjoy a large amount of God's silver and gold, without holding any of it in trust for God's service and the good of humanity, is one of the lowest forms of human existence. For a Christian, redeemed by Calvary's blood, to have no higher aim, is treason to Christ, and is spiritual suicide. I know of wealthy followers of Jesus Christ who consecrate their purses to bountiful charities, and their drawing-rooms to the uses of a Christian sociality and the promotion of Bible philanthropies, and their personal influence to winning sinners to the Saviour. While getting on, they get up, and lift others with them.

This is too wide a topic for a single chapter. But the gist of it lies in this truth: Christ must have the whole heart and give the casting-vote in every decision, or else we cannot be full-grown Christians. This is the "one thing." Write six ciphers in a line, and they amount to nothing. Put the figure 1 before them, and they amount to a million. All human talents and possessions are but ciphers until you put the name of Jesus at the head of them. Then they make their owner a millionaire for heaven.

THE NEW YEAR:

ITS SUPREME LESSON.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST.

IN what is termed, "The Muratorian fragment on the Canon" of the New Testament, and which scholars conclude was written in the second century, there is an interesting and beautiful record concerning the Fourth Gospel. It states that this Gospel was written by the Apostle John at the suggestion of his fellow-disciples, and of the overseers of churches. When the proposal was made, John advised that they all, before any step was taken, should fast three days; waiting, with prayer, the revelation of the Spirit; and then tell each other whatever might be revealed to any. During the time it was revealed to Andrew, who had survived till that period, that under the revision of all, John should, in his own name, write the Gospel. It is impossible to say with certainty that this interesting tradition is true; it had manifestly been handed down, and was recorded in the above genuine fragment less than a century after the time cited. The early Christians clearly regarded such an act of waiting upon the Spirit, who at Pentecost came to abide with the Lord's disciples, as an ordinary expression of the Church's attitude.

THE FIRST CHRISTIAN WITNESSES.

Believers at the beginning of the Christian era realised that they were out of sympathy with all things around them. They had become followers of Him who had declared of Himself that He was not of the world. They lived among the customs of the world, and were hated because they were separated from them. They mingled with the business and occupations of the age, but witnessed for a heavenly life. They bore part in the world's interests, and at the same time taught man's real destiny. They were encompassed by a cold and shameless selfishness, and testified for a reign of self-forgetting love. Sure I am, after long studies of Church history, that the Apostolic teachings had a far greater influence on the lives of the first Christians than it is the habit nowadays to believe. Their unearthly lives, and their self-sacrifice unto death, won a footing for Christianity in a corrupt world; while, as a great writer has said, "their faith made them all eager to risk everything for those who lived in the gloom outside, and also made so many who lived in that gloom gaze wistfully at the new centre of light."

Thus hath it been again and again through these past Christian centuries. The pen has not been found that could narrate the powerful influence upon the moral energy and forces of the world that the servants of Christ have originated. It is not, however, my province, in this second paper, to follow these blessed impulses. As the new year begins, the Christian believers, whom I still address, are called to consider

THE PRESENT STATE OF THE CHURCH.

Doubtless there are now to be found, as ever, the Lord's consecrated ones. Nay, more: never were there so many of them, and never more to whom the cause of the Lord Jesus Christ was the paramount interest in life. But never were the faithful so much hindered. No new thing is false profession: but this is new: for the unscriptural profession no longer to pretend to be what it is not, but to defend its falsity by a denial of the true ideal of Christian life. When Israel came out of Egypt, a "mixed multitude" followed them, and caused them to sin continually. Godly ones now no longer see a "mixed multitude" in the rear, but in numbers and influence in the midst of the camp and possessing the very tents of the host of the Lord. What do the faithful witness? They see those who would be leaders, ambitious for the gains and advantages of the Church's advanced position. They hear the cry of a "new theology," not merely preached in the pulpit, but hailed by professors in the pews, because it dispenses with separation from the spirit of the world. They find that with many who call themselves by the Christian name, the spiritual has ceased to be an aim or aspiration. They behold such disintegrations created among those who profess to be of Christ's Church as no longer to provoke the wonder, "See how these Christians love," but, "See now how these Christians distrust one another." They witness these alienations and faithless practices growing like rank weeds on a goodly soil, and poisoning all the atmosphere about them. And what is

THE EFFECT ON THOSE WITHOUT?

Christianity, instead of being regarded as a new and vital emotion of moral and spiritual life, has largely come to be regarded as a mere habit and a legendary thing. The circulation of cheap Bibles is made void, because multitudes have come to think of it as a book of precepts which those who profess belief in it do not even attempt to carry out. A Gospel of free grace is preached in mission halls, but those who are impressed are repelled from different churches by the icy welcome given to them. In foreign mission fields the spectacle is witnessed of Christians refusing to meet together; and, while the Jew, Mohammedan, or Hindoo will worship with co-religionists in the same temple, the men who will not do this are those who have come to teach a religion of benevolence and brotherly love. Oh, awful contradiction and scandal; and thus it is that in the East the old idolatry is being cast off, and a new generation is adopting infidelity in its place.

But, distressing as all this is, the Spirit moves us to hope. The false profession and apostasy are awakening a wide-spread

CRAVING FOR A NEW LIFE.

There are none more driven by misgivings and self-reproaches than those who are trying the impossible conjunction between the confession of Christ and fellowship with the people of the world. They have made a border territory to walk in, and have found it a wilderness. They have felt as one thinks a branch must feel that is only glued on to a living tree, instead of being in a life-giving union. On the other hand, in all communions there are numbers of men and women who are crying out for seasons of humiliation and confession; who are sick of ecclesiastical pretensions and priestly separations; who are pained to their heart by the adolescent experiment of making church rooms places to entertain the Christless, and who long yearningly, though inarticulately, to get out of the fetters of a false Church life, and into the healthier atmosphere of the more earnest days of their fathers. The preachers who bring them an accommodative Gospel know not how much less they are in favour than such preachers conceive. But if Scripture has foretold latter day defections, there is not to be acquiescence in them. What then is

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR?

(1) The monitions of the Spirit must be obeyed.—It may seem a difficulty which grows into the impossible for the true Church to shake off the baleful influence of the "mixed multitude," which has been fatally quenching its life. It may seem hopeless to attempt to restore to the modern Church the true ideal of Christ. Nor can any man find a solution of the difficulty. But union and communion with the Holy Spirit will avail. He is among us to glorify Christ. The Master began this great work of "spoiling" Satan's house with the word, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me." There are on every hand in our days evidences that, after prayerful and obedient waiting on the Spirit, works are done which to man seemed impossible.

(2) Christian sanctity must be maintained.—There is no more plausible, no more formidable temptation which assails faithful men, than that of regarding public work as an excuse for contracted devotions. Why is it sometimes the case that evangelists become feebler in the later days of their ministry than in the earlier? Because engagements outwardly to diffuse thesalt of holy influence have kept them from guarding the savour of its internal purity. Why do devoted mission workers sow much and reap little? Because they forget the Master's example of prolonged prayer. A past spiritual experience corrodes if it be not added to. Vital force is the indispensable condition of effective Christian service. What clever preaching we now have, and how powerless, because unctionless. We cannot with our human philosophy explain it, but we know that, as Pentecost approached, although Jerusalem was filled with strangers, the Lord forbad the preaching of Apostles until they had received the power from on high. It is waiting on God that secures the single eye; empties the vessel of false incentives; and makes it meet for Divine use. It is meditation on the truth that kindles right emotion, so that brain and heart move together; words gush spontaneously and with freshness from the soul; and the men, who are appealed to, are controlled and persuaded.

(3) Christian fellowship must be reaffirmed.—A time of conflict is at hand, which will test the Church, and separate the chaff from the wheat. The human in all Church arrangements will be shaken as by the breath of Jehovah. This will not be the time for Pharisaic exclusiveness and sectarianism under the pretension of higher piety. There are wide fields, where, to use the words of Jesus, there are sheep without a shepherd, and no Christian man can stand in cold aloofness from the brave workers in these fields, without hindering the full blessing of the Spirit in his own soul. Times have come when piety may not feed itself in an isolated separateness. Standing off from those who love Christ, because they differ in minor things from ourselves, we shall be left to grow in our natural life of evil speaking and misjudgments.

(4) The Scriptural idea and type of Christian character must be asserted.—Truly has it been said that what told and what lasted in Apostolic times was a "whole character, reflecting, with whatever imperfections, all that was Christ's—his love and his severity, his meekness and lofty strength, his communion with his Father and his interest in the ways and welfare of men." Two grave evils are now menacing Christ's cause. On the one side a theological nihilism that is diffusing a moribund coma through once earnest churches, and on the other, a most defective evangelical preaching that has taught a belief on the Saviour, which has not carried the devotion of the life. The one class inculcate a Unitarian legality, without the need of Christ; the other, a Nicolaitane antinomianism, without the demand of loyalty. Scripture strongly condemns both of these extremes. Its language is, that through the Great Sacrifice the conscience is purged from dead works, in order that men may serve the living God. The disposition that adopts but half of the teachings of the Spirit has no promise of salvation made to it.

Let us not forget, however, to proclaim the freedom and simplicity of the Gospel. No words can be adequately emphatic in relation to this demand. Peace and a new life come through Christ alone. Not a few in these weary days go into places of worship in the spirit of Lord Tennyson's lines:—

> "Oh for a man to appear in me,
> That the man I am might cease to be."

Surely, it is to incur an unutterable guilt, if we, who know how sinful ones can become "new creatures," should send these hungry ones empty away.

To tens of thousands, it may be added in closing, the new year brings one word,

PERSEVERE.

"The coming of the Lord draweth nigh." The darker the aspect of the times, the nearer the Advent of the Deliverer. We are sure of these two great Providential facts. The long ages antecedent to history looked onwards to the appearance of man. The ages after were a like preparation for the Incarnation of the Son of God. These are profound certainties. Times of trouble are dawning. Conflicts such as England has only known at rare intervals are before us. The human purposes will appear to be in chaos, and the nations will be shaken. The earth "polluted under the inhabitants thereof shall mourn," the transgression shall be heavy upon it; and "the high ones on high" shall be punished. The "few" who have found "the narrow way" will find the battle going hard with them. Compromises will be their temptation. But the witnesses in the midst of the earth among the peoples shall know that the hour hastens when the mighty Son of Man shall put down all rule, and authority, and power, and deliver the kingdom to his Father. Great is the recompense of reward which awaits those who are labouring in patience for that consummation.

The supreme lesson of the hour, therefore, comes to every disciple of the Crucified, and that lesson is unfaltering and paramount devotion to his cause who gave Himself for us. Day by day let us say—

> "My glorious Victor, Prince Divine,
> Clasp these surrendered hands in thine;
> At length my will is all thine own,
> Glad vassal of a Saviour's throne.
>
> My Master, lead me to thy door;
> Pierce this now willing ear once more;
> Thy bonds are freedom; let me stay
> With Thee, to toil, endure, obey."

MISS DE BROEN'S BELLEVILLE MISSION.

HELP may be rendered to this Mission by sending donations and yearly subscriptions, however small, for the general work; by organising drawing-room or other meetings to make the work known; by taking collecting cards; by coming to help us personally, or providing means for a worker who cannot afford her own expenses (voluntary workers are greatly needed); by forming associations for collecting in different parts of England, Scotland, or elsewhere; by placing in booksellers' or stationers' shops in different towns and villages "The Story of the Belleville Mission," first published at 2s. 6d., now at 1s.; by placing, when travelling, papers of the Belleville Mission in different hotels and establishments; by preparing patchwork for the sewing classes; by making flannel or other warm garments for our poor and sick men and women; by sending special funds for printing papers for distribution, such as those for the funerals of Gambetta and Victor Hugo; and by knitting stockings for the Orphanage.

Communications may be addressed to Miss Mary Douglas, 1, Rosebery-crescent, Edinburgh, or to Miss de Broen, 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

A CARD FROM MR. D. L. MOODY.

TWO fine buildings, a dormitory, dining-hall, and kitchen, have been erected by the friends of the Mount Hermon School, at Gill, Massachusetts. These buildings are to be occupied by 200 boys and young men in addition to the 100 now on the place. The buildings are all complete, except the furnishing. To enable them to be occupied will require about ten thousand dollars. It will cost about fifty dollars to furnish each room.

We have now more students than the buildings will hold, waiting for admittance, many of them young men of great promise. Will not some of your readers who are friends of Christian education help in this work? They can remit to William F. Lee, Treasurer, 679, Madison-avenue, New York, or to myself, at Northfield, Massachusetts.

NEW YEAR ASPIRATIONS.

"BAPTIZE me, O Lord, this year with love and light and power; and let me see the King's face." What a year of grace 1886 would be if every reader of these words were to adopt this prayer, offering it daily, resolutely and expectantly, and seeking the Lord, through his Word, with all diligence! Will you, whose eyes now scan this paragraph, join us in this great petition? "Then shall we know if we follow on to know the Lord." "Every one that seeketh findeth."

"Graciously condescend, O Lord, to help me this year to bring at least one of my fellow-creatures to penitence and faith in Thee!" Let every reader adopt this prayer also. Let it be taken up thoughtfully, with understanding of the difficulty and delicacy of the task; humbly, in full acknowledgment of the entire dependence of the worker, and also of the splendid privilege of such work; and with full purpose of heart, for the King's commandments require haste, and if any work requires our best energies, it is that of persuading others to faith in our Lord and Saviour. Let each reader determine forthwith that, whatever else he may become this year, he will at least be a soul-winner. "If ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

Nearly ten years ago we heard the now famous Professor Drummond preach in the Barclay Church, Edinburgh, from Matt. vi. 33. To us the chief interest of his sermon lay in its opening sentence; and, as that sentence has remained with us through all these years vivid and fresh, and as it seems especially appropriate to New Year thought and feeling, we pass it on to our readers:—"There is a very large class, and a tolerably happy one, as they think, who never seek the kingdom of heaven; there is a tolerably large class, and a very unhappy one, who seek it, but not 'first'; and there is a very small class, and a very happy one, who seek the kingdom of heaven, and seek it 'first.'" In which of these classes does the reader elect to be found throughout this year?

A TENNESSE PASTOR.—DEAR SIR, — There are several of your readers who very kindly send me your paper occasionally. I am grateful to them. At our Conference held this week, the Bishop appointed me pastor of our Church in Trenton, Tennesse. Will your readers kindly note this, and address accordingly.—Yours truly,

DAVID LEITH.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND at NORWOOD.

THIS honoured evangelist concluded on New Year's Day an eight days' mission at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Upper Norwood. Although Mr. Hammond and his work are well and most favourably known to your readers, a good many Christian people in all the churches are somewhat suspicious of, and prejudiced against, his methods of dealing with the young. Allowing for and respecting honest differences of opinion among those who love the Lord Jesus in regard to the particular way in which His lambs should be fed, I cannot but think that if the cautious Christians who stand afar off and smite this honoured brother with their criticism, were to draw near enough to see the grace of God in the numbers believing and turning to the Lord, they would begin to smite their own breasts and to say, "God be merciful to me, for I have neglected, if I have not despised, these little ones for whom Christ died."

In "feeding the lambs" Mr. Hammond presents only the "living bread which came down from heaven." He preaches the Lord Jesus Christ and Him crucified; not, as he himself puts it, "A Christ without the cross, or a cross without the Christ," but the living One who was dead and is alive for evermore. His addresses are full of the teaching and spirit of these great words of the Lord, "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed."

But he does not go beyond the range of his young hearers. These rows of eager eyes, not a few wet with tears, and some bright with hope and joy, show what a hold the truth as it is in Jesus has taken, or is now taking, of their minds and hearts that shine through them. But are not these representations of the physical sufferings of the Holy One too realistic? Not more so, we think, than the Gospel narratives; not more so, certainly, than is needful to make young and old see and feel that the sufferings were very real and very terrible to the Divine Sufferer. I confess to having had some misgivings at first as to such vivid and painful pictures of the crucifixion of Jesus, lest natural sympathy should supplant conviction of sin, and hearers should, like the daughters of Jerusalem, weep for Him, instead of for themselves and their children. But these misgivings soon disappeared. For the preacher never fails to impress the truth that, great as were his bodily sufferings, "the sufferings of Christ's soul were the soul of his sufferings." And always emphasising, as he does, along with this, the truth that "Christ bore our sins in his own body on the tree," he makes very clear these two great truths: God's great love and our great sin.

I have listened to few preachers who press home with more power on the conscience and the heart the claims at once of the righteous law and the rich grace of God; and more than anyone I have since heard has Mr. Hammond, in some moods, recalled to me that great home evangelist and foreign missionary, Mr. William C. Burns, as he was when I used to listen to him, Sabbath after Sabbath, in Edinburgh, forty-five years ago. I cannot better describe the spirit and effect of Mr. Hammond's preaching than by saying, that many who listen are led by it to the experience thus described in a well-known hymn:—

> "Upon the cross of Jesus, mine eye at times can see
> The very dying form of One who suffered there for me;
> And from my smitten heart, with tears, two wonders I confess—
> The wonder of his glorious love, and my own worthlessness."

Pardon this long preface, and let me now note a few illustrative facts. The meetings began on Christmas Day. In common with some others, I had doubts as to the wisdom of an inquiry-meeting on that day. But we, of course, deferred to the evangelist, leaving him without remonstrance, or even suggestion, to conduct the work in his own way. And his wisdom was justified by the result. A large number professed then and there to accept Jesus, and to give themselves to Him; and every day since we have been meeting with some who when asked when they found Jesus, answered with a bright smile, and joyous tones, "On Christmas Day."

Many touching and beautiful instances of renewing grace might be given. When the second meeting began, and the Christian workers present, just like so many earnest Sunday-school teachers in their classes, began to speak to the children in little groups, or one by one, most of them could tell, meeting after meeting, of one or more who had given themselves to Jesus. Here is a Christian mother in tears of joy as two of her children, weeping, yet happy, accept the Lord Jesus. There is a Christian father, with head bowed in prayer. When he was asked to speak to some anxious ones near, he said, "I have been praying for my own boy, and the Lord has so far answered my prayer, for an earnest Christian is dealing with him." That boy then and there decided for the Lord; and it was an inspiration to see his bright, but chastened look when he calmly said he had done so. The many young ones, some only seven years old, that were pressing into the kingdom, gave new force to our Lord's words about receiving it as a little child.

One evening a thrilling incident occurred. Mr. Hammond gave an account of the conversion of a young man, who had been utterly given over to drunkenness and other forms of sin, in one of his meetings in New York some years ago. The audience was profoundly moved by the wonderful story of grace. And then Mr. Hammond paused, and placing his hand on the shoulder of a stranger who sat next to him said, "And here he is; he will tell you his own story." The young man rose, and amid a stillness only broken by signs of emotion not to be suppressed, in words few but well chosen bore his testimony to the grace of the Lord, who had redeemed and saved him. His visit was entirely unexpected. He had only arrived in London that day, and having learned where Mr. Hammond was working, came to Norwood to see him.

I may record one illustration of the terrible influences at work upon some young people in our day. One boy of about fifteen boldly said he was no Christian. He claimed, however, to be a Theist, while another only a very little older boldly professed Atheism, and even blasphemously said he would rather go to hell than heaven!

Many here will follow dear Mr. and Mrs. Hammond with their prayers, and will not cease to entreat the Lord that He may direct their way to us soon again.

ROBERT TAYLOR.

MR. THOS. P. SINEL.—In our recent notice of Gospel work from this earnest brother labouring in France we omitted to give his full address, which is Deanville, near Trouville, Calvados, France. He is now unattached to any organised mission, and would be thankful of the sympathy of other Christians.

DANBURY, BY CHELMSFORD.—Mr. E. G. Butler writes:—We have arranged to buy a small chapel here, and should be glad of the help of any earnest Christian friends. We have had meetings almost every night since we came here last July—in a tent, and afterwards in our kitchen. We get an audience of twenty to forty working youths and men—very few women. Miss Birch, from Mildmay, Mr. C. King, Miss E. Parker, Gipsy Smith and wife, and Mr. Pericles Green, have all helped us in the work.

MONTREAL.—A Canadian reader writes:—After long and persistent effort we have succeeded in getting Mr. Moody to come for four days after January 3, and the following clip from one of our papers shows the kind of welcome he gets from good Bishop Baldwin's successor: Rev. Mr. Norton said that his influence had recently been asked in favour of an unsectarian missionary, whom it was proposed to bring to that city, it being represented that he would say nothing which would conflict with the doctrines of any denomination. He had asked by what authority this missionary was coming—whether he represented himself or Christ. If he represented Christ, by what authority did this apostle of unsectarianism stand on the platform delivering God's message, and yet never referring to the Holy Eucharist, baptism, confirmation, and other sacraments.

WAGES AND MORALS.

IN a recent paper in The Nineteenth Century, upon "Prevention," the Dowager Countess of Shrewsbury illustrates the statement that "the number of girls employed in London in various occupations is so great as to be perfectly appalling," by quoting the figures furnished by the Inspector of Factories for the Central District of London. It certainly is startling to find that in that single district there are over sixty-nine thousand girls engaged in various occupations, including nearly 8000 in tailoring, nearly 7000 in bookbinding, and in box-making over 4000. If all the members of this vast army were paid "a fair day's wage for a fair day's work," the social and moral condition of the female workers would still remain a most important and pressing subject; but when it is remembered that thousands of these girls are in receipt of the merest pittance; that their frames are weakened and debilitated by their scanty and indifferent food, and by the impure and vitiated atmosphere in which (Factory Acts notwithstanding) they are in only too many cases required to work, and that numbers of them have neither parents nor other relatives in the huge city, the subject of their position becomes one, the magnitude and importance of which it would be impossible to over-estimate.

We deplore the condition of our streets by night, and we have many noble movements for the reclamation of the fallen, but it is open to question if we are doing sufficient in the endeavour to stop the supply by removing the causes which are so potent in creating the social evil. Mr. Lakeman, one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Factories, has stated that in the Central Metropolitan District he never saw a Bible in a factory or workship, save in three instances. Those three factories were the best in the district, each girl employed in them being the subject of careful supervision and friendly interest, the employers considering themselves, to use Mr. Lakeman's own words, "as units in the world of Providence to work for God's cause, to act as if they were trustees of social justice, and to sanction only what is right."

If all employers of female labour resembled these three, doubtless there would be less sin and suffering in our midst, fewer women and girls forced to decide between vice and starvation, and fewer consumptives in our great hospitals. Unfortunately, however, many employers are exactly the reverse, and, therefore, instead of the Bible, and the wholesome and kindly regulation without which the presence of the inspired volume would seem a bitter jest, there are starvation wages, criminal neglect, and consequent evil.

SEAMEN AT MARSEILLES.—Through the kindness of Mr. Cheyne Brady a meeting was lately held in his drawing-room at the Villa Asquasciati, 2, San Remo, on behalf of the Strangers' Rests "Mission to Foreign Seamen at Marseilles." On the following Sunday afternoon it was my privilege to speak of the progress of the Gospel in Spain since 1868. In the kind allusion made to this meeting by Rev. Alex. Robertson in your issue of December 24, 1885, I am reported as having stated that 1 per cent. only of the Spanish people could then read. What I said, was, that only 1 per cent. of the women in Cordoba, the field of my first missionary labours, could do so. Since the last report of the Marseilles work was issued, the deficiency of £120 has been sensibly diminished, but I still need £50 to enable me to close the year free of monetary hindrances. I am the more desirous for this as, when so free, "The Lighthouse" that is still closed will be reopened.

CHRISTIANS AND POLITICS.

By SAMUEL SMITH (late M.P.), Liverpool.

I HAVE read with much interest the recent correspondence in your columns as to whether it is right for Christians to take part in politics. It is easy on this, as on many controverted questions, to quote a string of passages from Scripture that seem to favour either the one side or the other.

I was at one time thrown among pious Plymouth Brethren, who held strong views as to the unlawfulness of a Christian taking any share in public life. They applied these principles not only to national politics, but to all associated action of citizens for the common good. They objected equally to working on school boards, town councils, boards of guardians, hospitals, benevolent societies, &c. They held that all these belonged to "this present world," which passeth away, and that the Christian has to "come out, and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing."

It has long seemed to me that this view proceeds from a one-sided and overstrained interpretation of Scripture, and if widely acted upon would be fatal to the best interests of nations. It is very analogous to the view which for centuries led the holiest men and women to immure themselves in cells, and live as anchorites and ascetics in deserts, in order to escape the pollution of the world. History tells us how signally the conventual mode of life failed to secure immunity from corruption. It was commenced in the second and third centuries, in all sincerity, and in obedience to the literal commands of Christ, as they were then interpreted, and we know what ruinous effects it had upon the life of Christendom.

I think hardly less ruinous would be the effect of the withdrawal of the salt of religion from all the public departments of a nation's life. Does not the history of Israel show how intimately the life of a nation is bound up with that of its rulers? So long as Moses and Joshua lived, and the elders that were their contemporaries, the people prospered; but when these died out, and ungodly men succeeded them, corruption came in like a flood. What a prodigious difference it made to the nation whether Ahab or Hezekiah was on the throne, whether Manasseh or Nehemiah set an example to the people.

Human nature is much the same now as then, and the difference is enormous to a nation whether the seats of authority are filled by righteous or unrighteous men. "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." What a strange contradiction it would be if He who said, "By me kings reign and princes decree justice," should insist that any king on becoming a Christian should forthwith abdicate his throne; that every pious and upright judge should retire from office; and that every God-fearing legislator and every upright public servant should make way for corrupt and unprincipled substitutes. Surely this would be to enthrone Satan with the full consent of God! The thing is too monstrous to be true.

It is only going a shade further to hold that no act of life, however necessary, can be right unless it is authorised by an express text of Scripture. Railways, steamboats, telegraphs, and factories, must all be forbidden, because the Bible does not expressly sanction them. I believe there are some who hold these opinions.

Surely the error that underlies all these narrow systems of interpretation is that the Bible is put to a use it was never intended to serve. It was not designed to supersede man's judgment, but to guide it; not to prescribe minutely for every act of life, but to show the spirit in which all acts are to be done. "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Many good people live by applying to the whole Christian world the rules which they find needful for their own life. They forget that there are innumerable ways in which God may be served. Men's faculties and liability to temptation vary indefinitely. What is safe for one man is dangerous, perhaps fatal, to another.

The dangers of public life are very great. There are many Christians called to other kinds of service; for them it would be wrong to leave the sphere where God has placed them, but let them not judge censoriously other Christians who have done great and laudable public work. God has need of a Wilberforce, a Shaftesbury, and a Garfield, just as much as of a Carey, a Livingstone, and a George Müller. We have all need to remember the precept, "Judge not one another any more, but rather judge this, that no man put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in a brother's way."

The same principle that the Apostle applied to disputes about meats in his day, applies to this dispute about mode of service. The burden is placed upon the conscience of each believer: "to him that esteemeth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

ITALIANS IN MARSEILLES.

A MOST interesting and useful work of evangelisation has been done among the Italians of Marseilles. The late evangelist, Virgilio Pierallini, founder of the mission, died last March, and since then Mr. Augustus Lenzi, for two years his collaborateur, has continued to work in that field. The committee who supported the mission have been obliged to cease their subvention. Nevertheless, Mr. Lenzi, seeing the Lord's blessing upon his work, continues to evangelise without any remuneration, except what Christian friends casually send him. The director of the McAll Mission in Marseilles, and a Christian lady who works among women, have allowed him the use of various rooms, where he regularly preaches the Gospel various times a week to numerous audiences. He has a flourishing Sunday-school. The Italians converted since the beginning of this mission regularly meet every Sunday morning for worship, and themselves defray all expenses connected therewith, although all of them poor workmen.

There are 60,000 Italians in Marseilles, and Mr. Lenzi is the only evangelist among them. Being poor, he is obliged to do some bookbinding to pay for his maintenance; but it would be desirable to liberate him from this necessity, that he might be able to give all his time to that immense field of labour. A Christian gentleman promises a certain sum yearly to Mr. Lenzi if others will join. £100 annually would pay for the rent of a room, the salary of the evangelist, and all the small expenses. Mr. Lenzi is a zealous, painstaking, devoted worker, well gifted for his vocation. His address is Villa et Avenue Belle-vue, Belle de Mai, Marseilles. M. le Pasteur Ed. Monod, Rue Grighan, Marseilles, will be happy to receive any gifts for this mission.

ENGLISH GOVERNESSES IN PARIS.—An exceedingly interesting little book, descriptive of the work carried on by Miss Pryde among her countrywomen in Paris, has been written by Miss S. Copeland, Staindrop, near Darlington, who will be glad to give any information and to receive help for this good work.

MR. SPURGEON'S "TREASURY OF DAVID." *

A NEW YEAR'S WATCHWORD FOR CHRISTIANS.

PSALM CXXXIII.

"A SONG of Degrees of David."—We see no reason for depriving David of the authorship of this sparkling sonnet. He knew by experience the bitterness occasioned by divisions in families, and was well prepared to celebrate in choicest psalmody the blessing of unity for which he sighed. Among the "Songs of Degrees," this hymn has certainly attained unto a good degree, and even in common literature it is frequently quoted for its perfume and dew. In this Psalm there is no wry wood, all is "sweetness and light"—a notable ascent from Psalm cxx., with which the pilgrims set out. That is full of war and lamentation, but this sings of peace and pleasantness. The visitors to Zion were about to return, and this may have been their hymn of joy, because they had seen such union among the tribes who had gathered at the common altar. The previous Psalm, which sings of the covenant, had also revealed the centre of Israel's unity in the Lord's anointed and the promises made to Him. No wonder that brethren dwell in unity when God dwells among them, and finds his rest in them. Our translators have given to this Psalm an admirable explanatory heading, "The benefit of the communion of saints." These good men often hit off the meaning of a passage in a few words.

EXPOSITION.

1. Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!

2. It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard: that went down to the skirts of his garments;

3. As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion: for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore.

1. "Behold." It is a wonder seldom seen, therefore behold it! It may be seen, for it is the characteristic of real saints, therefore fail not to inspect it! It is well worthy of admiration; pause and gaze upon it! It will charm you into imitation, therefore note it well! God looks on with approval, therefore consider it with attention.

"How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" No one can tell the exceeding excellence of such a condition; and so the Psalmist uses the word "how" twice: Behold how good! and how pleasant! He does not attempt to measure either the good or the pleasure, but invites us to behold for ourselves. The combination of the two adjectives "good" and "pleasant" is more remarkable than the conjunction of two stars of the first magnitude: for a thing to be "good" is good, but for it also to be pleasant is better. All men love pleasant things, and yet it frequently happens that the pleasure is evil; but here the condition is as good as it is pleasant, as pleasant as it is good, for the same "how" is set before each qualifying word.

For brethren according to the flesh to dwell together is not always wise; for experience teaches that they are better a little apart, and it is shameful for them to dwell together in disunion. They had much better part in peace like Abraham and Lot, than dwell together in envy like Joseph's brothers. When brethren can and do dwell together in unity, then is their communion worthy to be gazed upon and sung of in holy psalmody. Such sights ought often to be seen among those who are near of kin, for they are brethren, and therefore should be united in heart and aim; they dwell together, and it is for their mutual comfort that there should be no strife; and yet how many families are rent by fierce feuds, and exhibit a spectacle which is neither good nor pleasant!

As to brethren in spirit, they ought to dwell together in Church fellowship, and in that fellowship one essential matter is unity. We can dispense with uniformity if we possess unity: oneness of life, truth, and way; oneness in Jesus Christ; oneness of object and spirit—these we must have, or our assemblies will be synagogues of contention rather than churches of Christ. The closer the unity the better; for the more of the good and the pleasant there will be. Since we are imperfect beings, somewhat of the evil and the unpleasant is sure to intrude; but this will be readily neutralised and easily ejected by the true love of the saints, if it really exists. Christian unity is good in itself, good for ourselves, good for the brethren, good for our converts, good for the outside world; and for certain it is pleasant; for a loving heart must have pleasure and give pleasure in associating with others of like nature. A church united for years in earnest service of the Lord is a well of goodness and joy to all those who dwell round about it.

2. "It is like the precious ointment upon the head." In order that we may the better behold brotherly unity, David gives us a resemblance, so that as in a glass we may perceive its blessedness. It has a sweet perfume about it, comparable to that precious ointment with which the first High Priest was anointed at his ordination. It is a holy thing, and so again is like the oil of consecration which was to be used only in the Lord's service. What a sacred thing must brotherly love be when it can be likened to an oil which must never be poured on any man but on the Lord's high priest alone! It is a diffusive thing: being poured on his head the fragrant oil flowed down upon Aaron's beard, and thence dropped upon his garments till the utmost hem was anointed therewith; and even so doth brotherly love extend its benign power and bless all who are beneath its influence. Hearty concord brings a benediction upon all concerned; its goodness and pleasure are shared in by the lowliest members of the household; even the servants are the better and the happier because of the lovely unity among the members of the family. It has a special use about it; for as by the anointing oil Aaron was set apart for the special service of Jehovah, even so those who dwell in love are the better fitted to glorify God in his Church. The Lord is not likely to use for his glory those who are devoid of love; they lack the anointing needful to make them priests unto the Lord.

"That ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard." This is a chief point of comparison, that as the oil did not remain confined to the place where it first fell, but flowed adown the high priest's hair and bedewed his beard, even so brotherly love descending from the head distils and descends, anointing as it runs, and perfuming all it lights upon.

"That went down to the skirts of his garments." Once set in motion it would not cease from flowing. It might seem as if it were better not to smear his garments with oil, but the sacred unguent could not be restrained, it flowed over his holy robes; even thus doth brotherly love not only flow over the hearts upon which it was first poured out, and descend to those who are an inferior part of the mystical body of Christ, but it runs where it is not sought for, asking neither leave nor license to make its way. Christian affection knows no limits of parish, nation, sect, or age. Is the man a believer in Christ? Then he is in the one body, and I must yield him an abiding love. Is he one of the poorest, one of the least spiritual, one of the least lovable? Then he is as the skirts of the garment, and my heart's love must fall even upon him. Brotherly love comes from the head, but falls to the feet. Its way is downward. It "ran down," and it "went down:" love for the brethren condescends to men of low estate, it is not puffed up, but is lowly and meek. This is no small part of its excellence: oil would not anoint if it did not flow down, neither would brotherly love diffuse its blessing if it did not descend.

3. "As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion." From the loftier mountains the moisture appears to be wafted to the lesser hills: the dews of Hermon fall on Zion. The Alpine Lebanon ministers to the minor elevation of the city of David; and so does brotherly love descend from the higher to the lower, refreshing and enlivening in its course. Holy concord is as dew, mysteriously blessed, full of life and growth for all plants of grace. It brings with it so much benediction that it is as no common dew, but as that of Hermon which is specially copious and far-reaching. The proper rendering is, "As the dew of Hermon that descended upon the mountains of Zion," and this tallies with the figure which has been already used; and sets forth by a second simile the sweet descending diffusiveness of brotherly unity.

"For there the LORD commanded the blessing, even life for evermore." That is, in Zion, or better still, in the place where brotherly love abounds. Where love reigns God reigns. Where love wishes blessing, there God commands the blessing. God has but to command, and it is done. He is so pleased to see his dear children happy in one another that he fails not to make them happy in Himself. He gives especially his best blessing of eternal life, for love is life; dwelling together in love we have begun the enjoyments of eternity, and these shall not be taken from us. Let us love for evermore, and we shall live for evermore. This makes Christian brotherhood so good and pleasant; it has Jehovah's blessing resting upon it, and it cannot be otherwise than sacred like "the precious ointment," and heavenly like "the dew of Hermon."

O for more of this rare virtue! Not the love which comes and goes, but that which dwells; not that spirit which separates and secludes, but that which dwells together; not that mind which is all for debate and difference, but that which dwells together in unity. Never shall we know the full power of the anointing till we are of one heart and of one spirit; never will the sacred dew of the Spirit descend in all its fulness till we are perfectly joined together in the same mind; never will the covenanted and commanded blessing come forth from the Lord our God till once again we shall have "one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Lord, lead us into this most precious spiritual unity, for thy Son's sake. Amen.

JESUS IN THE SHIP.

A MEDITATION FOR THE NEW YEAR.

By M. C. FRANCE.

THERE is a prevailing air of festivity thrown around the Christmas and New Year's season by earthly gifts, and love, and greeting. But there is also, to every thoughtful Christian, a consciousness of deep solemnity as the threshold of a new year is reached. It would be well if the rush and whirl of modern life permitted a longer pause, a quieter review of the past, and a more prayerful outlook on the future, than we generally allow ourselves—a kind of spiritual stock-taking, somewhat troublesome, no doubt, but of great importance and value.

Perhaps a glance at this well-known scene on the Lake of Galilee may suggest some helpful thoughts as we enter upon the New Year. There had been a night of toil; well-directed, we are sure, and energetic. Men who from boyhood had been familiar with those waters had cast their nets, and done all that human skill could do to secure a draught of fishes, but the morning light fell on faces lined and furrowed by disappointment and surprise. The nets were hauled in, and the result of the night's work was "nothing."

But there was no paralysis of energy; the nets, useless though they had been, must still be washed, and the bluff, stalwart fishermen, knee-deep in the water, were at work with them, keeping up their spirits perhaps by some Galilean fishing chant, when Jesus of Nazareth came near, and, entering Simon's boat, seated Himself there. It might have been that when the gentle voice "prayed" Simon with such magical courtesy to thrust out a little from the land, the thought of his night's lost labour might have roughened his spirits and brought a surly answer, and how disastrous that would have been! But there was an immediate compliance; and then, as the words of Him who spake as never man spake fell on the morning air, and the fisher folk clustered on the shore to listen, Simon's spirit, if it had been ruffled, would be stilled into peace as he too heard those wonderful words of life, and more than ever would he understand his brother's conclusion, "We have found the Messiah!"

But after the sermon there came a test of obedience most unexpected and perplexing. "Put out to sea again, Simon, take those clean nets of thine, and cast them into the deep for a draught." Ah, those were the words that should have given Simon confidence, coming as they did from lips that always uttered truth. Perhaps they did. But it would have been too much to expect of blunt, outspoken Simon that he could forbear to show up the apparent absurdity of the position. "Fishing in broad daylight! when night has brought no spoil! But it is the Master who bids it, and at thy word, Lord, casting all responsibility on Thee, I will let down the net." A limited obedience after all, the result perhaps of an unspoken thought; or it might have been expressed in a brief aside to his brother: "One net, I am sure, will be enough for all the fish we are likely to catch this morning; it would be a pity to get them both dirty again." And all the while the Master sat calmly watching and waiting, and the only excitement in the whole scene comes in direct consequence of the flaw in Simon's obedience. The net, overweighted by the tremendous draught of fishes, "brake," and there was danger of the valuable haul being partially lost, and the "partners" hastily summoned to help, could only save the fish by pulling them out of the broken net (in contrast to this see the manner of bringing a heavy draught of fish to land, John xxi. 8), and hurriedly filling the boat until they were so overladen as to begin to sink. Then Peter, his whole nature swept by the conviction that He who sat there was indeed "Master and Lord," cast himself at his feet with the startled cry, "I am a sinful man, O Lord." Ah, Simon, many as have been and will be your mistakes, you never made a greater than to find in that discovery a reason for beseeching Christ to "depart" from you! The Friend of sinners knew better, and henceforth this "sinful man" was to be kept by the Saviour's side, the rough "stone" that contained such veins of valuable ore to be hewn and shaped and quarried until after the volcanic fires of Pentecost the "converted" Peter stood forth to "strengthen his brethren," and to see on two wonderful days eight thousand souls added to the Church under his preaching.

And now for some New Year's lessons for ourselves from this story of Bible truth. Let the night represent the Old Year. We have not been idlers, we are conscious of having toiled, and now, as the morning of a New Year breaks, we have drawn in our nets, and the examination into spiritual progress has been made. We began the last year so earnestly. We recognised some besetment of temper, or indolence, or wilfulness that we determined to overcome; we saw barren tracts that we could cultivate into fruitfulness; unconverted neighbours, members of our own family, school-fellows, associates in daily work and business, whom we would bring to Jesus. What is the result? We cannot take so just an estimate as Peter did of the issue of his night's fishing, for spiritual gains are more difficult to compute, and often Satan helps us to arrive at a wrong conclusion because he knows how easily discouragement degenerates into despair.

But even if we are driven to admit "we have taken nothing," there surely is great encouragement for us here. Jesus has come down to the shore of life's sea, all amongst the emblems of toil and the weary toilers themselves. He sees the blank faces of those who have caught nothing, and in the quiet pause and hush that is upon our spirits He sits down beside us to teach us, not from some height of emotional feeling, but out of the ship, just on the level of our simple every-day experiences and duties. He teaches us of his interest in us, of his longing to make us so one with Him that our concerns and his would be identical; and then, as we yield ourselves to the influence of his teaching, we find that when He comes near, it is to make everything better, to put success for failure, joy and victory for disappointment and defeat. Hitherto we have toiled, but far too much in our own strength; now we are sent to our work again—the same work, but at his word. We may cherish the same purposes we had last year, direct our attention to the same besetments, set our hearts on the same services, only linking the work to some word of promise, and then we shall realise that the responsibility of success is no longer ours, but his.

Our one question as we face the possibilities of the New Year should be, "What are the Master's orders?" "His biddings are enablings," and when He points to the empty nets and bids us fling them forth once more, we may joyfully remember that Omnipotence has united itself to our weakness, and so there should be no thought of failure.

But let us be very careful of a half-hearted trust leading to a partial obedience. In family religion or church life how often we fail in heartily believing that what He has promised to the obedience of faith He is able to perform, and so we do not bring into use all our nets in eager co-operation with his purposes. One net used at his bidding, another kept for some little plan of our own. We are not quite sure that such entire coming out from the world is not going a little too far. Our ear becomes dull to his word, "Come out and be ye separate, and I will receive you."

We cannot leave the subject without pausing to recognise again its central thought, Jesus with us in the ship. Some of us know what it is to enter the New Year with a gift that has shed unutterable gladness over our whole being, a new friendship, a new love, to be henceforth a strength and stimulus to our life. We may so enter the new year with Christ, knowing his love, rejoicing in his salvation, believing his promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end." Will not that lift us into a higher moral atmosphere, infusing light, and strength, and courage, until with St. Paul we can say, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me."

There may be some whom this New Year Jesus will find in the ship alone, bereaved of the sweet companionship that made all labour a joy, looking forward with a sick heart to a New Year which can bring no "touch of a vanished hand, or sound of a voice that is still." Dear sorrowing one, He is fulfilling his promise: "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you." And as He sits down beside you in the ship, you will find that He is still anointed and sent by the loving Father "to heal the broken-hearted." You have tried human sympathy, but the very tenderest and wisest falls far short of your needs. Earthly friends do not know, they cannot understand. But when you turn to Jesus you feel the difference at once. He knows all with an infinite knowledge. He feels all with an infinite tenderness, and thus He "is able to succour." And realising this, you rest in his love, soothed and comforted, and can say, even amidst your tears:—

> "Well may thy own beloved, who see
> In all their lot their Father's pleasure,
> Bear loss of all they love save Thee,
> Their living, everlasting treasure."

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE IN BANFFSHIRE.

THIS evangelist has concluded a most successful three weeks' mission at Cullen, in Banffshire. Meetings were held every night, except on Saturdays, in the Town Hall, a preliminary payer meeting being held in the Council-room, and from the beginning a deep interest was manifested in the work. At the close a short after-meeting was held, and anxious ones were invited to go to the Council-room, which had been set apart for inquirers. During the first week no one expressed a desire to be spoken to. In a small town where everybody knows everybody it requires more courage to enable one to profess anxiety about the way of salvation than it does in a large town where one can go into an inquiry room without attracting much notice.

On the second Sunday, however, the shyness and unwillingness to make a stand fairly gave way, and at the close of the meeting a number of inquirers sought Christ, many of them with tears; that night fourteen professed to find peace with God. Since then there have been anxious seekers after the Saviour every night, and it is estimated that over a hundred, most of them being young men and young women, have taken Jesus to be their Saviour and Master since the meetings began.

Towards the close of Mr. Scroggie's visit the Town Hall was unable to accommodate the number of peeple who wished to get in, and the meetings were removed to the Free Church. Last Sunday morning twenty-one new names were added to the roll of members of the Y.M.C.A., and on Tuesday evening a meeting of ladies was held, when it was resolved to form a Y.W.C.A., to meet for praise, prayer, and study of the Word of God.

There has been no movement like the present since Duncan Matheson was here in 1860, and it is said by those who remember his visit, that the present work is much greater than the work that was carried on then. All the three ministers in the town have taken part in the meetings, and the excellent singing of the choir has been of the greatest service in carrying on the mission. The meetings are still being continued, and the interest does not appear to have abated in any degree. The Lord is doing great things for us, whereof we are glad. Alex. Soutar, M.A.

Cullen, December 30, 1885.

UXBRIDGE.—On Saturday and Sunday last, a mission was held in the Town Hall, Uxbridge, by Mr. James B. Wookey. On Saturday evening, Mr. Wookey preached from Jonah i. 8. He pressed the message home on the consciences of the congregation, beseeching them not to endeavour to flee from but to God. The four services on Sunday were largely attended. The solos by Mr. Wookey and Mr. Charles James were no less effective than the stirring addresses by Mr. Wookey. There were several interesting cases of anxious inquirers, and at the earnest request of several friends the mission is continued during this week.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN BROOKLYN.

THE Moody and Sankey meetings in Brooklyn, which began Tuesday, December 8, continuing until Monday, December 20, Mr. Moody giving place to Mr. E. W. Bliss during the latter half of the series, are, in some respects, unique; not because they are restricted to young men, for such gatherings are not now very infrequent, but in the special and thorough methods employed by the Y.M.C.A., under whose auspices, and in whose building, the meetings are held, to reach not only young men, but a particular class. Non-church-going young men are those sought after, in general; but the invitations have been conveyed especially to the mechanic, artisan class. Twenty-five thousand circulars were carried, by specially-appointed messengers, to the various factories and machine shops of Brooklyn, and placed in the hands of the male operatives and workmen, inviting them to attend the proposed meetings, each inclosing a ticket of admission. No one is admitted without a ticket, which, however, is easily procured. Since the meetings began ten thousand similar invitations have been sent forth each day in the same careful manner.

As a consequence, Messrs. Moody and Sankey have had the gratification of looking into the faces of about fifteen hundred young men each evening, who have gathered in the new, chaste and elegant hall of the Y.M.C.A. Probably one-half of these are literally non-church-goers, judging from the appearance of the audiences and the strangeness of the service and the scene to them, which is apparent in the conduct of some of the men as they pass in and out of the building. Many stare about upon entering, and wear the half-embarrassed, cat-in-a-strange-garret air, which distinguishes them at once from the habitual church-goer.

Very few grey heads are seen, probably not fifty in the entire audience. Very many decidedly ill-dressed, and ill hair-combed men are also seen; so that Mr. Moody has actually accomplished in these meetings what he intended. He has reached non-church-going working-men, and that will be conceded as a considerable triumph, as it is precisely what so many other ministers are not successful in doing; mainly, perhaps, because they cannot be what Mr. Moody is, or do what he does to that end.

One feels, in looking at the many unkempt shocks of hair before him, and hearing the hearty laughter which greets Mr. Moody's humorous passages, usually all in the first half of his sermons, which grow serious, and sometimes very solemn toward their close, how different this audience largely is from the ordinary church congregation, and rejoices in the difference, and is thankful that this man, with his direct ways, homely talk, and practical sense—qualities exactly adapted to the "common people"—has arisen to do what so many equally devoted and earnest servants of the Lord Jesus cannot, simply cannot, do.

Our readers are so familiar with Mr. Moody's methods that they need only to be told, in order to call the nightly scenes fully before them, that the usual ushers, with their blue badges; the male choir of seventy-five to one hundred voices, led by Mr. Geo. C. Stebbins; Mr. Sankey sitting at his little organ; Mr. Moody—hearty as ever and more rotund—now in his chair, now on his feet, telling stories as he gives out hymns, directing the ushers how to seat that clump of persons standing by the door, speaking a word in the ear of that minister at his right or left—the same Mr. Moody; the many hymns sung by the choir, congregation, Mr. Stebbins, alternately or in unison, before the sermon begins; one or two prayers, short, if by Mr. Moody, long, if not, giving him the fidgets; the sermon, the after-meeting for prayer, and the inquiry room—all these familiar features characterise the Brooklyn meetings.

Probably one hundred or one hundred and fifty men pass into the inquiry room after the sermon, where Mr. Moody presently meets them, giving them a few earnest words, by way of clincher to the sermon; after which he will ask all the "workers" to rise. Half of those present rise. "There," says Moody, "you see who are not Christians in this room. Sit down and talk with them." Then follows the busy hum of earnest conversation, during which the name of the inquirer is obtained by the worker, and given to an official of the association, who records it and follows up the man with one of a corps of fifty visitors, until he unites with a Church or abandons his quest for the "pearl of great price."

This record of names and systematic looking after inquirers is an example of the painstaking manner in which the work is conducted. The results of Mr. Moody's previous labours in New York and Brooklyn were not very satisfactory to him; and it would seem that, in this instance, he is making every effort to insure what he speaks of to the men in the inquiry, as "deep work." "We don't want any superficial work," he repeatedly says to the workers. "We want deep work done here in Brooklyn."

Very many hopeful cases of conversion are known to the workers; but it is of course impossible to estimate even approximately the results of such a series of meetings. Every effort is made to prevent any one from passing the inquiry-room door as the men leave the building. They are plucked by the sleeve or gently urged toward the open door in a kindly manner, which they do not resent, even when they will not enter; but hundreds must go away with the significant words of a hymn, or one of Mr. Moody's pungent sentences, or pathetic little stories, lodged in the minds, or a serious conviction sticking, as a dagger, in the heart, who are helped but never heard from.

As one looks over these vast audiences of men—not a bonnet in the house—and reflects that what Mr. Moody calls "whisky mills," and billiard saloons, concert halls, and worse places, are cheated of their prey, if only for a single night; that many of these men will go home with sweet songs ringing in their ears, and the influence of a consecrated man sinking into their hearts, he is not disposed to measure the work by statistics; he is sure that nothing but good can possibly result, and hopes it will be great and lasting.

The meetings are held only at night, except on Sunday, when there are three meetings—at nine o'clock in the morning, half-past four in the afternoon, and eight in the evening.

By the way, is not that a mistaken policy of the Y.M.C.A. and the churches, never allowing a meeting in the Y.M.C.A. building at the usual hour of Sunday morning service? Do the pastors bring any pressure on the Associations to prevent meetings at that hour? And, if so, is anybody just a little bit jealous of his own congregation? Why would not half-past ten be a better hour for Mr. Moody's morning service than nine o'clock? And, if the service is for non-church-goers, what difference could it make to the pastors? Their services are for church-goers. It is a delicate subject, to be sure; but one sometimes wonders while he observes that, as a rule, when churches are open, Y.M.C.A. buildings are closed, if there may be a possible application somewhere of a certain fable concerning a dog who was comfortably ensconsed in a manger.

On Sunday evening a tea was given by Mr. Moody to the workers and converts, at which two hundred plates were used, and which happily closed his connection with the work.

Certain features of the meetings are noticeable, as, for instance, during all prayers the attitudes of those upon the floor of the auditorium and those in the gallery is sensibly different; those below being greatly more reverential; the others looking about curiously or indifferently. Is there an essential affinity between the gallery at a religious meeting and indecorum or irreverence?

The ubiquitous sleeper in church is here. "The ushers will please open the windows," says Mr. Moody, plump in the middle of his sermon. "I want a little fresh air let right down there where those two men are asleep. I don't want anybody in here to go to sleep. I am trying to wake you up." Perhaps some poor regular minister isn't as sorry as he ought to be at noticing that men go to sleep even in such a meeting, as we know they have done under Wesley and the greatest of preachers, not excepting Paul.

Some of the sleepers do not awake, however, until one of those wonderful dead silences comes, which are characteristic of the Moody and Sankey meetings. Let Mr. Sankey sing "Eternity," and pause between the repeated words of the refrain, and you will hear your own heart beat in the silence. Or, let Mr. Moody, in the touching prayer which he makes after the sermon, say, with broken voice, "Speak now, Lord; speak now to the hearts of these men"—and I have never known such silence as follows. Fifteen hundred non-church going, many of them rude, uncouth men in the room, and for fifteen seconds silence which becomes in ten seconds full of a strange awe; silence as absolute as in the burnt-out moon; silence in which God does speak and the evangelist's prayer is answered.

But, then, Mr. Moody does what he likes with an audience. He manages everything, from the opening of the doors till they close. "Sit close together there, please, so that the end seats will be vacant for those who are coming in." "I want you to sing the chorus, now; and I'm going to keep you at it till you do. Never mind the tune; just sing;" and sing they do. Everyone does what Mr. Moody says the moment he says it. I once saw a Moody meeting where the first-comers were all in the rear seats. Ushers and others present could not get them forward. Mr. Moody came in, looked over the room, said: "Just come up front, and leave those back seats for those who come last," and everyone instantly rose and came forward. And yet you will hear people carp because he will say "tetch" for "touch," "hender" for "hinder," and "jist" and "ye." If he can "tetch" sinners' hearts better than more polished preachers can "touch" them; if he can convince men that, "there's nothin' to hender ye believin' on the Lord Jesus, right now; ye don't have to wait six hours nor six minutes," in heaven's name let us help and not hinder him by senseless criticism. The man who moves an audience as he does, to tears, or laughter, or silence, or action, is above fastidious criticism. Personality is infinitely more powerful than punctiliousness. Moody rushes into a bog to snatch a man from sin and death, while another is whisking the dust of the sidewalk off his polished boot with a silk pocket handkerchief, preparatory to making a shining entrance into his pulpit, and both are doing exactly what they ought, all things considered.

BULGARIA.

REV. T. W. BROWN, Secretary of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, sends us the following:

Rev. Dr. Sproull, of Latakia, Syria, missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., writes lamenting the loss sustained through the death of Rev. A. J. Dodds, M.D., of the same Mission, who perished in the Sidon when she went down off the coast of Spain two months ago. He proceeds as follows: "The present complications in Bulgaria may open ways for the entrance of the Gospel, as every such movement tends to weaken the Ottoman power all round. We have laboured long and hard to have all the converts officially recognised as Christians, the result of which would be their exemption from military duty, but thus far we have failed. At present the Evangelical Alliance is making efforts on their behalf, and we hope that ere long they will enjoy their rights promised to them by the Berlin Congress. The cry is raised that Prince Alexander has torn up the Treaty of Berlin, but Turkey has been treading it under foot since the day that it was signed, by declining to introduce promised reforms, and by refusing to grant religious liberty to her subjects."

THE OBITUARY of the past week includes the names of Dr. Samuel Birch, of the British Museum, and of Rev. Benjamin Williams, of St. Thomas, Swansea, a distinguished member of the Congregational body of Wales.

For the Young.

A SERMON ON "SAMUEL."

BY REV. SILAS K. HOCKING.

IN the Bible we read of a remarkable boy who lived many hundreds of years ago; a boy who grew to be a very remarkable man, and I want you to remember his name, for I want to make his name a starting-point. You may either think "Samuel" a very pretty or a very ugly name. It is, I suppose, quite a matter of taste; but I want to see what we can get out of it. We shall have to cut it into pieces, and taking a letter at a time, see what we can make out of it.

How many pieces are there? ("Six.") What is the name of the first? ("S.") S. Well, we will let S stand for son. Samuel was a son of hope. He was his father's and his mother's hope, and so he was dedicated in infancy to the Lord. And it was the prayer of his mother's soul, and the dearest wish of her heart and life, that her little boy Samuel should grow up to be a good man, a comfort and a stay to her when she got old.

Samuel did not live long at home, for when he was only a year old his mother took him up to Shiloh, that he might dwell in the temple under the care of Eli. It must have been a great struggle to the mother to leave her only son then; but she did not think of her own comfort, or her own sorrow, in comparison to the welfare of her child. And you may depend upon it, it is just the same with mothers to-day. Nobody can tell how much they sacrifice and suffer for the good of their children. There are hundreds of mothers and fathers in every town and village and city in the country, who toil and moil from early morning to late at night, that their children may be well clothed, fed, and educated. Why! Here you are, dressed up in your best clothes, and I daresay you have had a good dinner, and there will be a nice tea ready when you get home. And when these nice clothes and shoes are worn out, you will have new ones provided for you. And all the while your fathers and mothers keep toiling for you, for you may depend upon it, good parents do not live for themselves. So it was with Hannah; she did not forget,—parents never forget their children, though I am sorry to think sometimes that children forget their parents, and when they go away from home never write to them from one year's end to another.

I am going to give you some advice. You will not always be able to live at home. You will some day have to leave home, and go out into the great world and fight the battle of life for yourselves. You may have to go to London, to Liverpool, perhaps away to Canada or the United States, to Australia or New Zealand; and father and mother will be left behind, and they will think of you. If that time ever comes—and most likely it will—when you have to leave the old home, never forget mother and father. Never grieve their hearts with the thought that you have forgotten them. They will never forget you! Their last thought at night, and their first thought in the morning will be about you, and their constant prayer will be for your welfare. I can conceive of no ingratitude greater than that of a boy or a girl away from home forgetting the old home they have left behind.

You are, all of you, children of hope. Your fathers and mothers expect great things of you; that you will grow to be good and noble. The matter rests with you—you can either fulfil the hopes of your parents, or blight them. If you will only trust in Jesus Christ, and be good and honest and upright and true, then, like Samuel, you will fulfil the hopes of your parents, and your lives to them will be a constant benediction.

What is the second letter? ("A.") A. We will let that stand for attentive. He was always attentive to his duty, always obedient; and to this he owed his success in life. Samuel in after years became a great ruler; and there is an old saying that he who would rule must first learn to obey. In that chapter we saw how he obeyed the call of God, and went out to Eli three times in succession; and he not only obeyed, but he obeyed at once; not sulkily or loiteringly, but right off. He did at once what he was told. I wonder if you always do that.

You may depend upon it, one source of success is promptness in obeying the call of duty. There are some people that never get on; they are always behind; they are late in everything. The people who get on in the world are the people who are prompt to obey the call of duty, and as soon as they see their duty they do it right off, without loitering or sulking by the way.

The next letter is—— ("M.") M. That is manly. Samuel was manly in his actions. In other words, "a good boy." I don't mean by that a milksop without any pluck, or energy, or courage; he had plenty of it. He had courage enough to resist the wrong. Eli's sons were very wicked young men, and if Samuel had not had a great deal of courage he would have fallen into their ways; but he resisted them all.

Not only had he courage and energy to resist the wrong, but courage also to do the right. It is always manly to do what is right; but a great many lads seem to think it is manly to do the wrong; manly to deceive their parents and those in authority over them; to stay away from chapel and school; manly to talk slang, and talk of their father as "the governor," and their mother as "the old woman," to swear, to use profane language, to stick their hat one side of their head, and saunter through the streets with a cigar in their teeth. If a young man could only see himself as others see him, I am certain he would not do that kind of thing again. To be manly you must be noble, and upright, and true. If you have done wrong it is more manly to confess the wrong than to hide it, or act as if nothing had happened. If you have done mischief it is much more manly to face the punishment than to tell a lie.

The next letter is "U"—unselfish. He was unselfish in his life. How do we know? He grew to be a great ruler, as I told you. Indeed, he became the first man in the nation; but after a while the people wanted a king: they were not satisfied with a judge. Now, you would naturally suppose that Samuel would object; because, don't you see, the king would be greater than he. He thought that the people would be better without a king than with one; but if they thought otherwise, it was quite right for him; he was ready to go away—anything—if it would be for the good of the people, for the welfare of the nation. And I am sure that you can never read this story of Samuel's life without thinking of his beautiful unselfishness, without feeling how splendid a man he was. I don't know anything grander than unselfishness, nothing meaner than selfishness.

The next thing is "E"—earnest. Earnest in well-doing, earnest in doing anything he took in hand. He did not grumble, or pull a long face, but he set to work and did it. How do I know that? Because if he was not a man of that sort he would not have risen to the position he occupied in Israel. You may depend upon it that boys and girls, and men and women, that lie down in despair when difficulties meet them, and say it is no use trying, are not the people that make their way in the world, but the people who, when difficulties meet them, say, "In the name of God, and by his help, I will try to do it." And if a boy or a girl tries to do anything in the name of God, and by his help, you may depend upon it they will succeed.

The next letter is "L." Samuel was loving—loving in disposition. Now you say: "How do I know that?" Well, I will tell you. In the first place you will find—in the seventeenth chapter—these words:—"And Samuel died, and all Israel lamented him." I am quite certain that all Israel would not have lamented if they had not loved him. Don't you believe that people who are crooked and nasty and three-cornered in their temper—don't you imagine that when they die everybody is sad. People will say, "What a blessing So-and-so has gone! They will be far happier in heaven than they could be here on earth." People who are sour, and crabby, and savage, and cross-grained, don't get others to love them. And so when I read in the Bible that when Samuel died all Israel lamented, I am quite certain that they loved him because he was loving in disposition.

Will you try to be sweet and gentle and true? You are children of hope. Be obedient as Samuel was, be manly in character, unselfish in your life, earnest in purpose, loving in disposition, then your life shall be a blessing to those around you, and the benediction of Heaven will rest upon you on your journey through the world, and there will be a blessed immortality beyond. May God help you to become good men and women!—Abridged from "Contemporary Pulpit."

WHATSOEVER.

It was afternoon, and in a certain schoolroom thirty little heads were bent over the lessons for next day. Silence had reigned for some time, when the teacher got down from the desk, and began to walk through the room, looking over the shoulder of one and another to see how work was progressing. Behind Effie she stopped, for a terribly blotted, badly-written page lay before her, showing Effie's utter indifference to Mademoiselle's good opinion.

As the teacher stood looking, the little one before her wrote on in a defiant way, her very attitude expressing, "I know I'm wrong, but I don't care."

Then the teacher stooped, and whispered, "For whom is that exercise?"—"Mademoiselle."

"Do you call that good writing?"—"Don't know."

"Did you ever hear of a verse that says, 'Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as unto the Lord'? Do you think 'Whatsoever' takes in writing?"—"Don't know; suppose so."

The teacher passed on; returning a few minutes later, she found the page re-written so neatly, and a humble little face looked up as Effie whispered, "Will that do?"

Dear little people, and grown-up ones too, who read this, will you remember that nothing is too small to be included in that "Whatsoever;" and if we follow out the command we shall find our lives wonderfully glorified, and filled with happy service for our Master.

A MESSAGE FROM INDIA.

THE writer of the following note is one out of some twenty foreign workers, in different parts of the world, to whom a kind friend sends weekly a copy of this paper:—

Sir,—I wish again to tender my very hearty thanks to the kind friend who has so long forwarded me THE CHRISTIAN. After finishing with its perusal here, I send each number on to the Wynaad, where it is circulated amongst many and greatly valued. It is to us like a pure bracing breeze from the mountain-tops—most refreshing and reviving spiritually, and stirs us up to fresh endeavours.

The straitened life of "officialdom" led by the majority of Europeans in this country (the bulk of whom are in Government employ), and the all-engrossing cares of the planters, are not favourable to the development of spiritual life and strict integrity. A publisher on these hills, who printed and sold copies of the pamphlet issued by the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette, has been prosecuted and heavily fined. The Madras daily papers represent the Bishop of London and others as having been entirely misled and deceived by Mr. Stead. I have endeavoured to raise my voice on the side of truth in this matter, but there are greater difficulties to be contended with than are apprehended in England. On these hills we have a noble little band of witnesses, who take a firm, consistent stand for truth and righteousness.

Yours very faithfully, J. McKenzie.

Notes and Comments.

TO all our readers, far and near, we wish a bright and glad New Year. We heartily thank the many of them who have lately sent to us such warm expressions of goodwill, and of appreciation at the measure of service we have been enabled to render in the great cause of social and national purity and righteousness. For the kind forbearance of those who have not felt able to endorse our action in all respects, we are also grateful. We arrogate to ourselves no infallibility of judgment; and, though we seek in our measure, and according to our earnest convictions, to guide and strengthen the Christian opinion of the nation, we welcome at the same time, and desire to give due weight to, the counsel, when fairly expressed, of those who differ from us.

While all our readers may not always approve of the views that we are constrained to take of the prominent questions of the day, we are sure that they and we have the same great object at heart—the setting up of the kingdom of God, which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, in the hearts of our fellow-citizens and our fellow-men. To this end we crave their prayerful consideration and support; as it shall be our continued endeavour to merit that support in growing measure, by unremitting efforts to strengthen all good movements, and do battle with all that opposes itself to the Word and will of God, and therefore to the cause of humanity. May He who is All Wisdom and All Love grant of his wisdom and the spirit of true charity to writers and readers alike throughout the year that is begun.

Any co-operation in the extension of our circulation, by inducing friends to take the paper in, as well as by subscriptions for free transmission to missionaries in foreign lands, will be very highly appreciated.

A Canadian reader writes: "I am so much pleased at the additional attraction you have given us in the weekly portraits of prominent workers in the Lord's cause, that I can but hope you will continue them. You cannot imagine the interest one feels at a distance, towards those of whom we are constantly reading; and the desire to see them not being likely to be gratified, the next best thing is to see their portraits. I hope you will give us Stevenson Blackwood, Denham Smith, Dr. Parker, Grattan Guinness, Reginald Radcliffe, Dr. Paterson, &c."

In the presence of calamitous events, the cause of which is shrouded in mystery, we can but bow in lowly submission and own the hand that seems to strike in sore chastisement, though the stroke may yet be dealt in love. Such an event is the recent colliery explosion in the Rhondda Valley, which has brought sorrow and desolation to many a hearth and home. It is the part and privilege of the Christian to commend the bereaved to the consolations of God's tender Spirit, while stretching out the hand of help where it is needed.

We look very differently on calamitous events which are clearly preventible, and which may be traced to the selfishness or perversity of man. With our present knowledge of the facts we do not feel able to apportion the exact blame in the unhappy lock-out at the Llanberis slate quarries, by which thousands of toilers are eating the bread of idleness, and thousands of homes feeling the pinch of want. Probably there are faults and mistakes on both sides, but it does seem to us that the dispute is eminently one to be settled by peaceful arbitration. We deeply regret, therefore, that the proprietor of the quarries has declined to take this course. If the quarrymen have behaved badly, no doubt they must suffer for it; but when Mr. Assheton Smith refuses arbitration, he gives colour to the view that he, or his agents, have not been guiltless of unjust dealing towards those in his employ.

The Evangelical Alliance has again made public through the daily press several cases of persecution in Turkey, recently alluded to in these Notes. This has been done at the suggestion of a high diplomatic authority, in order "that Turkey may be ashamed of its continued hostility to the progress of Christianity." We can only hope that the publication may have the desired effect, though past experience does not lead us to be very sanguine on the point.

All friends of foreign missions, especially those interested in the progress of the Gospel in Central Africa, must have heard with pain that Bishop Hannington of the Church Missionary Society had been seized by order of the King of Uganda; and rumour had it that secret orders were given to have him executed. The Bishop was endeavouring to open up a new route from the coast to the Victoria Lake so as to avoid the long detour by Unyanyembe, and was said to be within two days of Uganda. We fervently hope that the news has been magnified in transmission, and that later intelligence will prove the report to be baseless. We are again reminded of the heavy cost at which the Dark Continent is surrendering to the incursion of Gospel light, and of how much these pioneers need our prayerful sympathy.

Perhaps there is no seaport at home or abroad where a Sailors' Rest is more needed or would prove more beneficial, than Port Said, at the entrance to the great international water way, the Suez Canal. Mr. George Eoll is doing a good work there, as may be seen from an account on another page. He is very desirous of planting a Rest on the banks of the Canal, and has, we believe, a favourable opportunity of securing a suitable site, if the means are forthcoming. If any readers are moved to help in this effort, they may communicate with ourselves, or Messrs. Cory, Cardiff.

"Australia," writes Rev. J. W. Horsley to The Pall Mall Gazette, "has shaken herself free from the evils engendered by copying or transferring our evil ways of dealing with State children, and has come to the conclusion which seems unhappily beyond the conception of most of our boards of guardians that of the four competing systems the bringing up of children along with adult paupers in a workhouse is abominable; massing them in district schools is hopelessly bad and most expensive; cottage homes are good and less costly; and boarding out is cheapest and by far the best, as restoring or giving to the children the natural conditions of home life. Surely it is a question for philanthropists and economists of all kinds, down to the ordinary ratepayer, to ponder. Why should we continue the system which is worst and dearest? Why pay £30 a head for children in Sutton District School while in cottage homes such as those at Marston Green, the cost is but £20 10s., and children boarded out (e.g., by the King's Norton Union) cost only £10 9s. 10d. a head per annum?"

Our next issue will contain reports of addresses given in London during the present Week of Prayer. We hope to give in the same number a portrait of Mr. D. L. Moody. As the portrait of Mr. Spurgeon, which we expected to furnish this week, does not come up to our standard of excellence, we have postponed giving it in order to have one specially engraved.

In a private note from Mr. D. L. Moody, when sending to us the "card" inserted elsewhere, he says the Northfield and Mount Hermon Schools are doing well, and he is much encouraged by their progress. We hope to refer to the work of these schools in our next issue. Mr. Moody adds:—

> Mr. Studd is doing a grand work among our Colleges. I have good reports from all the places where he has been.

A cry has arisen from the Congregational body for more spiritual life, which, we trust, will prove an augury of blessing for the year that has opened. An appeal has been made to the churches for a New Year's offering, with the plea, "England for Christ." Rev. W. Crosbie, of Brighton, wrote, saying that it was not money that would do this: that England could only be won to Christ by a larger measure of life in the churches. Immediately upon this, six letters have appeared in The Nonconformist and Independent, which bear witness to a widespread sense of need, and appeal for a Conference which should not occupy itself with the discussion of Church principles, but of Church life.

One of the ministers writes from Scarborough in these terms:—"Many of the churches are feeble; members are cold, piety is low, ministers are depressed, funds are scant, and the winning of souls is rare." In former times individual churches had their special days for humbling themselves before God and for confession of sin. Such seasons proved very edifying and instructive, and were followed by the outpouring of the Spirit of God. It will be far better for churches to begin this blessed work themselves, than to wait for the action of leaders.

A correspondent sends us the following:—

> I lately witnessed an example of the advantage of occasionally breaking away from stereotyped forms in public worship. I attended an evangelistic service in a large Wesleyan Methodist Chapel in an important provincial town. The junior preacher of the circuit conducted a brief and appropriate opening engagement, and spoke from the assurance of the Saviour that none who came to Him would be cast out. Then a leading member of the society spoke in his place on the floor of the chapel, on the infatuation of delay, and a third address of like nature was delivered in the same informal manner. When a prayer meeting was afterwards called, not a dozen persons left.

Some of Dr. Heywood Smith's friends and patients, being desirous of showing their unabated confidence and respect for his high character, and as a protest against the harsh treatment which he has received in certain quarters, have resolved to raise a fund to enable him to open an Invalid Home for Women. Mr. J. E. Gordon, 7, Vicarage-gate, W., and Mr. C. S. Read, 4, Austin-friars, E.C., have consented to act as joint treasurers, pro. tem., and a banking account has been opened at Messrs. Barclay, Bevan and Co's., Lombard-street, E.C. This project has been suggested as more feasible than the founding of a new hospital; and we trust it will be heartily taken up and carried to a successful issue.

A keen illustration of straining out a gnat and swallowing a camel is afforded by the fact that the journalists and Treasury solicitors who recently were so horrified at the plain unvarnished statement of terrible facts concerning our social life, shut their eyes to the continued publication by a London firm of translations, stated to be verbatim, of some of the lowest and most depraved volumes in the evil literature of France. That these books have been a curse to the thousands of readers who perused them across the channel is sufficiently serious, but that the disgusting volumes should be sent forth in English dress, art having been degraded and polluted in their illustration, is much more grave for us, yet none of our official guardians of public morals have taken any steps to protect our young men and lads from the abominable invasion.

How much good might be done if people who purchase publications of a religious and healthy tone were to take some little pains to circulate them, instead of allowing them to accumulate, and to remain unread, in book-cases and lumber-rooms. The cabman, the railway porter, and the working people who reside in the village through which the road to the station runs, like to have something to read; if they do not get something wholesome they are subject to the temptation to read something exactly the reverse. The trouble after all is so slight, that few of us, if we only thought about the matter at all, would care to incur the responsibility of locking up, or keeping unused, that which might be very useful to those who have not much means to spend upon literature, and which might in many instances, in the providence of God, be blessed to the salvation of souls.

The late Earl of Shaftesbury was wont to tell how his first religious impressions were due to a nurse who had charge of him till he was eight years of age, and who used to tell him Bible stories, and urge him to give himself to the service of God. Not only does this anecdote contain comfort for those who in lowly positions seem to have but limited powers and few opportunities of working for God, but it is a suggestive one to those mothers who are careless as to the religious character of the nurses to whom the little ones are entrusted. To no one can the mother properly depute the blessed privilege of pointing the child to Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," but there are times when the children must of necessity be under the sole charge of the nurse; and every mother who has the eternal interests of her little ones at heart will be careful to provide such a nurse as will supplement the holy teachings given at her own knee.

"A Parent" has been much troubled latterly at the very common announcement, in some of the provincial newspapers, of entertainments, private theatricals, &c., mostly, from the Christian's view, of a questionable kind, now so prevalent in our private boarding-schools, for both young ladies and young gentlemen. Our correspondent thinks it would be well for Christian parents to remind those to whom they entrust the education of their children that they do not pay large fees in order that their boys and girls may be taught how to live a gay, giddy life of frivolity, unfitting them, in many cases at least, for the grand, sober business of the life that now is, and, above all, for the life which is to come. The sooner a step upwards is taken the better will it be for the Christian Church, for the home, and for society in general.

We are glad that at least one letter has been written to show that the religious difficulty is the one real and insuperable difficulty in regard to Ireland. Just so far as a man is a true and faithful Papist, he must of necessity be a disloyal subject of any Government. The essence of alienism is the fact of owing allegiance to another power; and a Papist is, de facto, an alien, because he of necessity gives his first allegiance to the Pope.

"THE KEY OF THE WHOLE POSITION."—Rev. Dr. Littledale writes as follows to The Pall Mall Gazette:—In your leading columns of Monday night the following perfectly true statement occurs: "The Irish unfortunately believe that where landlords are concerned, it is not wrong either to steal or to kill upon occasion." But two things are lacking to its completeness—assignment of its cause and limitation of its applicability. The truth is, as all who know Ireland well are fully aware, that behind the political difficulty looms the far graver and more incurable religious difficulty. It is all but impossible to get Englishmen to recognise this fact, which is yet the key of the whole position. The country is divided polemically into two hostile and irreconcilable camps; and it is because the great majority of the landlords are in one of these camps, and the great majority of the tenants are in the other, that robbery and murder of landlords have been looked on by tenants, not with tolerance only, but with active approval. The question of race has little to do with it. The most pure-blooded Celt, if not a Roman Catholic, is in favour of the English connection, and is willing to uphold the law. The descendant of the Cromwellian settlers, who may have no drop of Celtic blood in his veins, if a Roman Catholic, is all but certainly a Separatist. And it is invariably the Roman Catholic lower orders alone who are mixed up with the agrarian crimes which desolate Ireland. Now to explain this curious fact. Roman Catholicism, then, like Islam, regards itself as having an undefeasible right to dominate everywhere, alike in the civil and the religious sphere, and thinks of any exception to that ideal as a wrong and outrage which is to be redressed on the first favourable occasion. Like Islam, too, it looks on all but the true believer as the enemies of God and man, and as being rightfully at the disposal of the Faithful, in respect not only of their property, but of their lives.

The one lesson which the Irish Roman Catholic peasant is certain to be taught is hatred of all Protestants, as beings doomed by a righteous sentence to unending misery in the world to come, and as forfeiting the right to enjoyment of even the good things of this life by reason of their rebellion against the true Church. Hence, it is easy to see how an ignorant, excitable, and superstitious people would leap rapidly to the conclusion that to remove such criminals from the earth, to say nothing of spoiling their goods, would be a work pleasing to the Divine mind, and in full accordance with justice also, measured by that law which they account the highest, and which is, in very truth, fully in accord with the third canon of the Fourth Council of Lateran (still part of Roman canonical jurisprudence), which enjoins on Catholics the duty of extirpating every heretic, and assigns the property of the heretics as the fitting reward of that pious work. I am not concerned here and now with suggesting a remedy for this difficulty; but I believe it important that people in England should know that it is the main difficulty of the Irish question, and that the attitude of the Roman Church in this country, where it is a powerless minority, on its best behaviour, is no guide at all to its policy and aims in Ireland. And I would refer those, who may think myself influenced by that very polemical fervour which I deprecate, to the remarkable posthumous pamphlet "The Priest in Politics," by the late P. J. Smyth, an Irish Roman Catholic and Nationalist M.P.

Mr. and Mrs. George Müller, of the Ashley Down Orphan Houses, Bristol, ask our readers to remember them in prayer, that God's blessing may rest upon their eleventh long missionary journey. In New York Mr. Müller held a number of meetings for Germans and Americans. On December 19 they started by the Pacific Railway for San Francisco, California, when, after Mr. Müller had preached in one or two of the churches, they were to embark in the steamship Australia, for Sydney, New South Wales. There our venerable brother purposes to labour in the Lord's service for some months. Mr. Müller is now in his eighty-first year. The distance from England to Australia, across the Atlantic, the Continent of North America, and the Pacific Ocean, is somewhere about 13,200 miles.

A friend in New York has sent to us a sketch of the Episcopal Mission in New York, and specially of Mr. Aitken's Noonday Services for Business Men, in Trinity Church, Broadway. His account, however, is forestalled by the lengthy extract we made two weeks since from The Independent. Our correspondent says that the interest created was so great that the meetings were continued daily for a third week:—

> Manifestly all were charmed by Mr. Aitken's kind, brotherly tone and manner, and edified by his truthfulness, knowledge of business men's temptations, and the wisdom which is from above. We grew to feel that it was a good Providence that had brought the Advent Mission to our shores, and not a few, whom he will never see again this side of heaven, conceived a strong fraternal affection for Mr. Aitken. He, in turn, appears to have the like love for his Trinity audiences. This tended to render his utterances even more earnest and touching in the closing address, and there were many moist eyes there. As the packed audience slowly moved out, all sang the "Rock of Ages," many remaining to shake hands with the preacher.

Our correspondent states that Mr. Aitken, after leaving New York, was to proceed to Boston, thence to Nashville, Tennessee, and New Orleans.

"Proem to Genesis" is the title of a paper, by Mr. Gladstone, in The Nineteenth Century for January, in reply to Professor Huxley. We venture to express our strong conviction that the weighty words of the ex-Premier's article will inaugurate a change of attitude between the scientists and the reconcilers of revelation with modern learning. Much so-called science has misled or bewildered this age by its dogmatism and scorn. Notwithstanding his eminence, few writers or lecturers have more erred in this direction than Professor Huxley. Such dogmatic confidence cannot be regarded as a sign of true scientific attainment or insight, and nothing can be better for our young men than that it should be met in argument by a master of English and of reasoning.

The question is most ably presented in Mr. Gladstone's paper: it is that the belief is justified that in the opening chapter of the Bible there is knowledge conveyed which was not accessible to the simple exercise of the human faculties. Such knowledge would be popular; would mainly be shaped to produce moral impression; would be a summary open more or less to criticism in detail; would describe living creatures, not so much by structure as by habitat; and, while not contradictory, would not be conveyed for purposes of science, but of religious aim. The importance of the argument can hardly be exaggerated.

THERE IS AN OPENING for a thoroughly evangelical earnest Christian minister of independent means to form a congregation in a mission district of a large provincial (University) town. The ground has been already prepared by the existence of a very large Sunday-school of many years' standing, the teachers of which are ready to co-operate with a pastor, to whose care their young people would be committed as they grow up. From the outset a Bible-class of nearly 200 young men and women, and large premises recently built, will be at the disposal of a suitable gentleman of private means willing to work without present remuneration. Communications to be sent, care of Editor of THE CHRISTIAN.

CITY EVANGELISATION IN AMERICA.

By WASHINGTON GLADDEN, LL.D.

THE meeting held in Cincinnati to consider the problems of city evangelisation was notable for the number of earnest men it called together from all parts of the country, and for the vigour with which it attacked some of the more serious problems arising out of the moral and religious condition of our American cities.

The meeting was projected by the Congregational Club of Cincinnati, which prefers to be known as the "Congregational Union." Although originating, thus, in the councils of one religious body, the co-operation of other Christians was earnestly sought from the beginning, and the Congress in its deliberations has borne an interdenominational character; the presiding officers at the successive sessions being taken from the Presbyterian, the Episcopal, the Baptist, the Methodist, the United Presbyterian, the Lutheran, and the Congregational bodies and representatives of all these denominations, with others, engaging in the discussion. The tone of the assembly was distinctly evangelical, and even devotional; and the discussions were frequently interrupted by song and prayer. There were no protracted performances, and the exercises often took on a pleasantly informal character, sometimes descending to colloquy between the readers of papers and their auditors. Beginning on Monday evening, and continuing until Friday noon, with three full sessions for each of the three intervening days, it was possible to accomplish a great deal of work; and the papers and addresses, when gathered into a volume, will present a mass of information and discussion simply invaluable to all those who are concerned about the welfare of our cities.

The opening meeting, on Monday evening, was devoted to an address of welcome by Rev. Josiah Strong, Cincinnati, and a response by Dr. Goodell, of St. Louis. Mr. Strong's address, which was brief, outlined in a compact and vigorous way, the condition of the cities, and the urgency of the problem which the Congress was called to consider. It was unfortunate that the evening was stormy, and that comparatively few members of the Congress had arrived in the city. Not many men in the country have given these subjects more earnest heed than Mr. Strong, or are prepared to speak upon them more cogently. His diagnosis of the condition of our cities was carefully drawn and moderately phrased but none the less startling. The vast immigration deposits its drift in the cities; in the country at large only one-third of the population are of foreign parentage; but in Cincinnati 60 per cent., and in Chicago 90 per cent. of the population were either themselves born in other lands, or are the children of parents who were born in other lands. Many of these are orderly and excellent citizens; but a great many of them hate law and order, and mistake license for liberty. Out of this class arise our anarchists. On the Sunday after the Cincinnati riot, Mr. Strong heard the agitator Most cheered to the echo by a crowded audience when he derided the charge that it was the Socialists that had burned the Court-house, and declared that when they started out on their mission of destruction their first call would be on the marble stores and the brown-stone palaces. This nihilistic element is growing much faster than the population; and its habitat is the cities. The liquor power, also, has its stronghold here. The saloons of the land would stretch in solid phalanx from Chicago to New York. Our plutocracy, irresponsible and cruel, revels and glitters in the cities. Our pauperism, hopeless but defiant, burrows and multiplies in the cities. The problem of Christianity and of civilisation is to be solved in the cities.

Dr. Goodell's response was hopeful and soulful, like the man. The power of the Gospel is sufficient, and the hands that fed the five thousand can break the bread of life to these perishing multitudes. This larger hope was the inspiration of the whole debate.

The first five of the ten following sessions were devoted to the consideration of the

the remaining sessions to the remedies. Of course, it was neither possible nor desirable that this logical division be strictly maintained; those who spoke of the evils could not be wholly silent about remedies; and those who discussed the remedies were obliged to refer to the evils; but the arrangement of topics was natural, and the emphasis of the discussions conformed to the order.

Dr. Lyman Abbott led off on Tuesday morning with an address on "The Modern City as a Menace to Civilisation." The swift tendency of population towards the cities; the fact that portions of New York are now more densely populated than any parts of Pekin; the concentration of the foreign population in the cities; the fact that the proportion of churches to the population in the cities is only about one-third of what it is in the country, and constantly growing smaller; the horrible evils of the tenement houses, breeding disease and degradation; the dangers and wrongs of enforced idleness, in a country where hundreds of thousands are vainly asking for work; the liquor evil, largely a product of bad air and bad physical conditions; the municipal corruptions, and the mischiefs of ring rule, bred and propagated by all these other evils—all these furnish a problem that Americans must grapple with promptly and heroically. The city cannot be saved if its intelligent Christian people run away to the suburbs, and leave it to its own destruction; nor is it of any avail to look to the legislature for relief; that only empties the corruption into the capital. These questions must be met and solved in the cities, by the Christian people of the cities; and a gathering like this congress is a hopeful sign, because it shows that they are beginning to comprehend the gravity of the work before them.

Rev. George A. Thayer, of Cincinnati, who followed, emphasised the necessity of recognising and using all the forces that will help us in this work; even though they may not be directly identified with us.

In the afternoon of Tuesday one of the most spirited sessions of the Congress was devoted to the discussion of

with two papers: one by Dr. Ely, of Johns Hopkins University, on "Socialism and the Duty of the Christian Church in Relation to it as Seen from the Standpoint of a Political Economist," and another by Dr. Gilbert, of Chicago, on the "Atheistic Drift of Socialism." Dr. Ely's discussion of Socialism, as was to have been expected, was sympathetic rather than objurgatory. He had no soft words for the Anarchists, whose gospel is dynamite; he holds that they are not in any sense Socialists, their philosophy, so far as they have a philosophy, being the rankest individualism. The Anarchists carry to their logical conclusions the maxims of the economists of the laissez-faire school. Mr. Herbert Spencer is one of their frequently quoted authorities. Jefferson said that the best government was that which governs least; and the Anarchists go a little further, and say that the best government is that which does not govern at all; that no-government is the ideal—a condition of society in which every man does what is right in his own eyes. Socialism, on the contrary, as a philosophy of society, believes that the people, acting in their corporate capacity, can promote the public welfare more successfully than it can be done when they act as individuals. To some extent our Government adopts the Socialistic principle. The post-office is a purely socialistic institution. Some things the State can certainly do better than individuals. The question is how far this State interference can wisely be extended. Socialism, as such, is only a theory, to be carefully studied, and kept under control by the Church. Beyond a question, the germs of the Socialistic doctrine are found in the teachings of Christ and the Apostles; and it contains truth which must be carefully sifted out and applied to the existing conditions of society. A more sympathetic study, by ministers, of the problems of labour and the questions of social science, is imperative, if the Church would keep its hold upon the common people. Dr. Ely was pretty severe in his condemnation of ministers who indulge in sweeping denunciations of Socialism, but who have never read a Socialistic book in their lives, and who derive all their knowledge of the system from its enemies.

Dr. Gilbert's well-written paper analysed the atheistic tendencies of modern society, and showed how largely this taint has overspread the masses of our foreign population—instancing a newspaper published for the 40,000 Bohemians of Chicago, in which the most indecent and ribald blasphemies are constantly printed. The close logical relation between Atheism and Nihilism was pointed out, and the call upon the churches for consecrated works to counteract these destructive influences was emphasised.

At the evening session of Tuesday two subjects were presented:—

THE HOUSED BUT HOMELESS CLASSES,

by Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, of Elmira; and "The Non-Enforcement of Moral Legislation," by Rev. S. F. Scovel, D.D., of Wooster University. Mr. Beecher was in his happiest mood, and his picture of the homelessness of the cities, from the homelessness in the houses of the rich, where the father's bondage to his business and the mother's addiction to society leave the children practically without a home, to the heterogeneous assemblages at the boarding-houses, and the solitary life in lodgings and restaurants, and the forlorn and terrible desolation of the tenement houses, was pictured by him with great vividness. His strenuous contention that the family makes the home, and that nothing but a sanctified love can make the family; that there is no other sacrament so holy as that by which the family is constituted; and that our individualising tendency, which ignores the everlasting fact that the family is the social unit, can never build a stable society, was enforced with stirring eloquence, and illuminated with irresistible wit, infused with the tenderest spiritual feeling.

After him came Dr. Scovel, with a keen, compact, masterly paper to show that the moral legislation of our statute-books can be, and must be enforced.

Wednesday morning opened with a discussion of "Church Neglect as Caused by the first paper being read by the writer of this report and the second by Rev. A. H. Bradford, D.D., of Montclair, N.J. The two papers were entirely agreed as to the fact of a great and exceptional Church neglect among the working classes; but they differed as to the degree of this neglect attributable to the labour quarrel. Dr. Bradford has taken much pains to obtain facts bearing upon this question; and his conclusions, although they differ from my own, are certainly entitled to great consideration. He thinks that the growing hostility between the capitalist and the labouring classes, while it has something to do with the Church neglect of these latter classes, is only a secondary cause of it. My own opinions are not materially modified by Dr. Bradford's cogent reasonings. It is sufficient to say here that the subject is one which every pastor should carefully investigate for himself; since it is undoubtedly true that the working people in different localities are differently affected by this consideration. There was no disagreement in this discussion as to the fact that there is a growing alienation of interest and feeling between the working people and their employers; nor as to the fact that this separation has been aggravated by a political economy which rules out moral considerations, which looks upon labour simply as a commodity, and insists that the application of conscience and good-will to the adjustment of the relations between employer and employé will result in confusion and mischief. The need of Christianising industrial society, of putting good-will into it, as a working force—was strongly urged on both sides. "But labour is a commodity," it was asserted in reply. "True," answered Dr.

THE STRIFE BETWEEN LABOUR AND CAPITAL,"

Ely—though this remark was not audible in the Congress: "it is a commodity, but it is inseparably bound up with a personality." And the one truth to be sent home to the conscience of every employer of labour is this: "You must see to it, in your dealings with this commodity that that personality take no detriment."

Wednesday afternoon we had an impressive discussion of

led by three Cincinnati pastors, Rev. I. W. Joyce, D.D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. E. K. Bell, of the Lutheran Church, and Rev. W. H. French, D.D., of the United Presbyterian Church. It seemed to be supposed that the clergy of Cincinnati should have a lively interest in this topic, and their addresses, though temperate and judicious, revealed a sad state of things in their own and other cities. No radical measures were urged; but the bad practices of many Church members were rebuked, in fitting terms, and Dr. Joyce advocated a more strenuous effort to enforce the laws requiring a quiet Sunday. The Law and Order League of Cincinnati is now endeavouring to secure the enforcement of the law closing the theatres and saloons on that day; and what can be hopefully attempted in Cincinnati ought not to be regarded as impracticable anywhere else.

Wednesday evening was given to the subject of Christian Work for the

the paper opening the topic being read by Rev. Henry A. Schauffler, of Cleveland, and addresses following by Dr. Goodell, of St. Louis, and Rev. Jacob Krehbiel, D.D., of Cincinnati. The fact that many of our cities are foreign cities came out again, in clear relief, in Mr. Schauffler's startling figures, and was graphically represented in the map which he hung up for us to look upon while we listened. Half of the population of New York city are the children of foreign parents. New York is one of the largest German cities, and the second Irish city, in the world. Of the population of Lowell, ninety-six per cent.; of Cincinnati, sixty-two per cent.; of Cleveland, a larger proportion; of Chicago, ninety per cent.: are of foreign parentage. How to reach this vast population with the Gospel is a tremendous problem; but it can be done by earnest, consecrated, hand to hand work among them. Chapels must be built in the places where they are needed, the Bible must be given them in their own language, and the members of the churches must go down among these people and manifest the Gospel in the spirit of a genuine Christian philanthropy. We can reach them, but we must go after them. And there is no time to be lost. Mr. Schauffler thinks that the work among these classes is to be done mainly by their own children, who have been reared and educated in this country, and who can be led to consecrate their own lives to this work; since labourers of this class will be able to understand the work to be done, and will also have knowledge enough of our institutions and methods to bring their people into sympathy and practical unity with ourselves.

Dr. Goodell followed with one of his stirring addresses. The parable of the Great Supper gave him a text, and he made it luminous. Spread the right kind of feast, he said, and the foreign population will come. You cannot catch a fish until you find out what kind of bait he likes. Divine wisdom is wanted, and resolute faith, and with them these multitudes will be reached and the cities will be saved.

The Thursday morning's theme, though ominous of dryness, made its own importance evident in the discussion. "A Religious Census," as presented by Dr. Kumler, of Pittsburg, is evidently one of the first needs of those who propose the evangelisation of the cities. Dr. Kumler's figures were extremely optimistic. According to his information, the evangelical churches in all the cities are growing much faster than the population: both in church accommodation and in the number of communicants, they are gaining rapidly on the outside masses. The picture was a very rosy one—far too rosy, most of the wise ones said. The fact that such wide differences of opinion exist concerning the facts shows the need of some means of finding out the facts.

After Dr. Kumler, Rev. Frank Russell, of Mansfield, showed in a spirited address how in one small city the united churches made a complete census, securing an efficient relief of the poor, and providing an admirable method of evangelisation. One practical outcome of this discussion was the raising of a committee of fifteen whose work it will be to mature plans for the taking of a careful religious census of all the cities.

On the whole, it must be said that the Congress was a most inspiring meeting; and those in attendance seemed to be strongly of the opinion that it ought to be perpetuated.—New York Independent.

MR. SPURGEON TO MR. STEAD.

MR. STEAD received a great number of letters from friends at Christmas, and among them the following from Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, who is already much better for his stay in the South of France:—

My dear Sir,—I have often thought of you and lifted up my heart in prayer for you, that you may be of good cheer while in durance, and may suffer as little as possible from its after-consequences. Rest assured that your motive and zeal have secured for you the high esteem of all lovers of purity. Whenever observations are made upon the mode of your operations, they only imply that you are liable to error like all your fellows; but when your self-sacrificing spirit is thought of, it is with glowing admiration. You cast yourself into the abyss to rescue and to preserve innocent children, and you are had in honour among the honourable. At the same time, as you made hideous crime somewhat inconvenient, and threatened to remove some of the screens which give immunity to vice, you are thoroughly hated among those to whom life means bestial licentiousness. You can rejoice that you have thus a double homage paid you, for contempt and hate are the obeisances which iniquity renders to its vanquisher. Be of good cheer. In your retirement you will be able to buckle on your armour with supreme care and sacred vigil for the future fray in which we shall see you the equally stalwart and still more skilful champion. I wish joy to your heart and power to your arm.

Mrs. Spurgeon desired me to say what a grand, brave man she judged you to be, and in this she speaks for tens of thousands of the women of England.—Yours very heartily, Mentone, Dec. 24, 1885. - C. H. Spurgeon.

[Well said! English men and women are proud of both these men, and Christians all over the world thank God for them. The fact that Charles Spurgeon has written such a letter to William Thomas Stead, and sent him such a message from Mrs. Spurgeon, ought to be enough to assure those who do not know the facts that Mr. Stead deserves the honour due an honourable man.—Ed.]

CHEAP DINNERS FOR CHILDREN.—One of H.M. Inspectors of Schools writes from Birmingham to The Daily News: The number of dinners given since November at our four centres (one only just opened) up to date is 27,835. Including all current expenses, the cost of a dinner has been barely over one halfpenny. This dinner has consisted of an ample supply of good soup, stew, or bread and milk, plus a large piece of bread and jam. What the children think of it, and what infant distress means, are best shown by the fact that they will come more than a mile to get it. It has been of the utmost service in taking off the edge of the existing distress; and I do not hesitate to say that, worked in the manner adopted here, it is absolutely unattackable on the ground of pauperisation." Rev. G. S. Reaney, of Stepney, writes to the same journal: "Will you let me ask for help for free dinners for the children? Last winter I provided 15,000 of such dinners. Should be glad to do so again if the funds were in hand."

BREAD FOR BODY AND SOUL.

THOSE who happened to be passing Regent's Hall, Oxford-street, about noon on Wednesday week, would see that something unusual was taking place. And so, indeed, there was. On entering the Hall, we found that "four hundred of the lowest of the London poor" were assembled to partake of a Free Dinner, generously given by Hon. Thos. Holt, late of Sydney. On the tables lay a copy of the New Testament beside each plate, so that all the guests might bear away with them the Word of Life. In order that the most needy persons might be secured for the feast, some of the "Gutter and Garret" cadets of the Salvation Army had gone into the lowest parts of the district and carefully made a selection of guests from among the haunts of misery and poverty.

In addition to the four hundred, there were about as many more of the same class who found their way into the hall and thronged the galleries, with the promise that they should have something, even if it fell short of roast beef and plum pudding. It was painful to witness the scramble there was to get even a piece of bread, showing that real distress had brought them there. When the name of the gentleman who provided the meal was announced, the vociferous cheers that followed showed how greatly his kindness had been felt.

The only drawback was the inability to admit all who crowded around the doors. One poor thing craved hard to be admitted, saying, "Do let me in; I have come all the way from Stoke Newington." Within the walls, however, all was serene. No sooner was the feeding at an end than it became evident that the giver of the feast had a yearning desire that the souls of the poor casuals might be blessed as well as their bodies fed. Never do we remember to have listened to addresses more effective than those delivered by the several cadets, most of whom affirmed that they had been rescued from the very scum of society. Then came fervent and soul-stirring appeals from Miss Booth and Mr. Herbert Booth, Mrs. Reed, Mr. Bishop, and others; these, with the hymns and the solos, and the music and the prayers, combined to produce an impression upon the audience which we venture to say will not be easily forgotten. Here and there was to be seen a poor outcast grasping the hand of a cadet and pouring into her ear a sad tale of woe. The lady visitors who came to serve must have felt abundantly repaid for what they did, and the generous donor for what he gave.

ERRATA.—In a portion of our last week's issue the names of the late Rev. Joseph Sortain (of Brighton), and the late Dr. Urwick (of Dublin), mentioned in the sketch of Rev. J. B. Figgis, were erroneously printed as Soltau and Warwick.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' REST, MALTA.—Over twelve months ago we bought a most eligible site, with certain buildings thereupon, for £3000; the power, however, being conceded of dissolving the contract if, at the end of three years, we shall not have been able to raise the purchase money. In these premises the work of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Rest has been carried on with happy result to multitudes. We cannot, however, yet see our way to one-third of the required amount, and current expenses are continually coming upon us. The noble gifts of many have put us under obligation to go forward, and forward we are going. We are confident that when this is known the large gifts of the wealthy and the two mites of the widow will be cheerfully bestowed for the glory of the Lord, and the salvation of our soldiers and sailors. The entire property at Cottinera is capable of answering all the purposes of soldiers' and sailors' rest, minister's residence, and mission premises. Rev. R. W. Allen, 26, Edith-road, West Kensington, London, W., knows the property, and will be pleased to receive further contributions; or inquiries may be sent to myself,

SOLDIERS AT ALDERSHOT.

FAR from sunny were my expectations of Aldershot while journeying down from Waterloo to our military metropolis. Once inside "the Home," over which Miss Daniell presides, everything was changed. It was worth going to Aldershot to see the faces of some of the forty or fifty soldiers who had assembled in the lesser hall, to praise, pray, and listen to God's word. Bronzed by the sun of Southern lands, and lit up with the light of conscious communion with God, I loved to look at them, and at once felt myself at home among them. Our subject for consideration was "Readiness for the Lord's Return." It was simply delightful to mark the enthusiasm of those who prayed, as they contemplated the Master's speedy advent, and realised their fitness and readiness to meet Him. An old pensioner, who had served with the "Inniskilleners," was the first, I believe, who led us in prayer. After him came a Horse Artilleryman who wore an Afghan medal on his breast. Then one of the Royal Engineers, who, I supposed from his medal, had served in South Africa; and after him several others.

During my sojourn in "the Home" I noticed two of the Royal Fusiliers remaining, one night, at the close of the meeting for conversation and prayer. One of these Miss Daniell herself took in hand, and I found myself privileged to deal with the other. Never had I dreamt before, how difficult it had been for a soldier to confess Christ among his comrades; but when I heard that poor lad, at my side, pleading with God for grace to endure what he felt and knew was before him, I prayed from my very heart for every Christian soldier whose home might be the barrack-room, and I have often prayed for such since.

What refreshing believers' meetings, too, we had, on several occasions, in Miss Daniell's own room! At one of these I heard nearly twenty soldiers pray; each one commending to God some unsaved relative or comrade, for conversion.

The scene in the large hall, on the Sunday night, was one never to be forgotten. Every branch of the service appeared to be represented in the hundreds of soldiers who were present. At the close of the address a great number remained for prayer, a sergeant of one of the Highland regiments leading. It was nearly eleven o'clock before all had departed for their quarters. After the first prayer-meeting had been brought to a close, several assembled to sing a few parting hymns, as this was to be the last Sabbath on earth they were likely to spend together. The 73rd men were leaving for Ireland, while representatives of other regiments were going out to India and Egypt. But after singing for a while, they resorted again to prayer. I shall never forget the prayer of one dear lad who was leaving for Egypt on the Wednesday. "Lord, I thank Thee," said he, "that Thou didst ever bring me to this dear 'Home.' I thank Thee for the many happy hours I have spent here; and now I am leaving, I thank Thee I am taking Thee with me. Lord, have pity on my sick mother whom I leave behind; and if we are not to meet again on earth, let us meet together above." Maybe some of my readers will send a prayer heavenward on behalf of that sick mother. Her husband was killed in the very country to which her soldier son is being sent out.

Nothing pleased me more in connection with "the Home" than the hymn-singing in the play-room at night. Gathering around a good piano, which Miss Daniell had caused to be placed in the room, several of the men would sing Mr. Sankey's hymns, or others from The Christian Choir, till it was time to be off to barracks. The night-school, while I was at Aldershot, was conducted by two young lady-friends of Miss Daniel. Did I not wish that, years ago, like advantages had been mine, when I found that two or three of their pupils were taught French.

Space fails me to tell of the reading-rooms, coffee-rooms, bath-rooms, and lecture-rooms connected with the place; of the mothers' meetings, Band of Hope meetings, and other meetings that form a part of Miss Daniell's wondrous system of work. I would advise anyone interested in the matter to get from her a "report," or her book on "Aldershot and its Camp." Never till "the day shall declare it" will be known what has been accomplished in this and the other "Homes" beneath her care at Colchester, Plymouth, and Manchester.

It was a most impressive sight when the kilted 73rd marched off. Some few of the men had evidently been drinking with comrades of other regiments to be left behind. Here, as elsewhere, the drink is an unmitigated curse. One poor soldier told me that four times, in all sincerity of heart, he had endeavoured to break from its terrible bondage, but always to make a failure of it. Different, however, had it been with some of the Christian soldiers of the regiment: the bugles had called them from prayer. I shall never cease to pray for, or to commend to others, this work carried on at one of the noblest Christian institutions on British soil.

SEED ON THE WATERS.

DEAR SIR,—The following is an extract from the log-book of Rev. Dr. Tien, who labours on the Waterside Mission to Seamen; he takes especially the foreign branch, being a good linguist:—

"Yesterday I boarded a ship from China with a Lascar crew. Having addressed them in their forecastle, to my agreeable surprise a black fellow stepped forward and showed me a well-worn copy of the Arabic New Testament. His name is Ahmed, and he is native of Jeddah, in Arabia. He repeated several texts by heart."

Dr. Tien asked how he had obtained this book, for it is well known that Jeddah has no mission, and that it is remarkable for the bigotry of its people. He told him it had been given to him by an Egyptian coalheaver years ago, who had received it from us on the banks of the Nile. For the last twenty years the short but busy "Nile trip" has been quite an institution, and one of our most interesting works. Though often made with great difficulty from want of funds, no year has passed without at least a few days spent in distribution of Scriptures among Moslem Nile villages. Great care is taken to ascertain previously that every recipient can read, and also to give suitable explanation. Here is one seed cast on the waters and found after many days. It is only one among many that have been found; God only knows how many more will be discovered when the Lord of the harvest comes and gathers the precious corn into the heavenly barn!

Dr. Tien writes:—"Whilst I was saying a few words to the Lascars on board the Nepaul P. and O. steamer, I found two of the crew natives of Damietta, who told me that many years ago, while working on the Nile, they had each received a copy of the New Testament in Arabic from Mr. Shakoor [of this Mission, since deceased], after having listened to his reading and explanation of Scripture. Both showed their copies, which looked very well used, and said they had learned many passages by heart, and sang them while lying in their "bunks," the others listening with interest. I gave a new copy to each."

This needs no comment but "Hallelujah!"

CONSTANTINOPLE.—As one outcome of the visit of Dr. Somerville, during the course of last spring, a scheme has been set on foot for the erection of an evangelical hall in this city. I need not enlarge on the immense importance of immediate action in regard to the establishment of an evangelical stronghold in this city. It is a strategic position which must at once be seized, for, with the rapid political changes that are transpiring, events may render its occupation at a future period less easy or even impossible.—Yours sincerely,

Constantinople. S. R. VAN MILLINGEN.

GOSPEL WORK AT PORT SAID.

SINCE April of last year 21,000 Gospels, Testaments, and Bibles in twenty-three languages, and 19,000 books, tracts, and periodicals, have been given away, and are now spread abroad to all parts of the globe. Mr. Hawke, of the Bible-stand, Crystal Palace, Mrs. Robertson, Hampstead, Messrs. Cory Brothers, of Cardiff, and other Christian friends have liberally supplied us with these.

Opportunities have enabled me to speak words of warning or encouragement to many individually, and to preach the Gospel on board English, German, and French passenger steamers; also English, American, Turkish, German, French and Italian man-of war-ships. On such occasions permission was given me to hand over to each man on board a New Testament. Frequently I have met with many God-fearing passengers and missionaries on their way to India, China, Australia, and the neighbourhood of Syria and Palestine. Lately we had the joy of meeting with Miss Anstey and other friends on their way to India, Mr. Stevenson and other whole-hearted workers for China. Miss Reuter and lady workers passed through here last week for the same place, beside Miss Nicolson for Jaffa, and a lady doctor, Miss Taylor, for Beyrout and the Lebanon. It has been a time of refreshing to our own souls to meet with these Christian workers of various denominations, going out in his service, besides the privilege to lend an helping hand to them all during their short stay in this place, so full of moral darkness.

Our Gospel meetings have, at times, been well attended, and of late some have truly been born from above, and confessed the Lord boldly before the world. The meetings are at present held in our house until we are able to have a Rest for soldiers and sailors. How much such a place is needed here is well known to our Heavenly Father, and the earnest of our prayers He has already given us through some of his children encourages us to trust Him for the whole amount needed. The intended Rest will not be only for meetings and reading-room (for the latter many soldiers and sailors have expressed the hope to see a place to go to, as there is none but the public-house or dens of vice, from which places the Lord has enabled me to rescue many by inviting them to our house), but also to take in such who are in a helpless condition, either as convalescent coming out from the hospital, or other poor ones without means. These we have at times taken into our own house, which is only composed of four rooms, but of late I have been able to hire a shed to sleep in. This even is found better than the so-called lodgings.

Many families of French, Italian, and Greek nationalities in the town, have been visited, with whom I have been permitted to place more than four hundred Testaments and one hundred Bibles. The Arabs have not been forgotten: over one thousand Gospels have been distributed amongst them. This does not include the Pilgrims going to Mecca, to whom also many hundred copies have been given. Only lately I was told by a missionary from the Lebanon, who used to visit the Druses, that he was quite astonished to find them possessed of the Arabic Gospels, and, on inquiry, was told it had been given to them whilst they were at Port Said waiting for the steamer.

"REBECCA JARRETT."—Speaking of the little book by Mrs. Josephine Butler, published at this office, our Glasgow contemporary, The Christian Leader, says:—"It is a noble vindication of the poor Magdalen, towards whom the world continues to be as savage as it was when the Master Himself was here. A perusal of this little book should make the judge's ears tingle. We are glad to find the views we have expressed on Mr. Stead and his work confirmed by an authority so worthy of respect as Mrs. Butler. In addition to the original sixpenny copy, there is a cheap issue at a penny, which ought to be scattered in thousands all over the land to enlighten ignorance and confound the wicked."

CHRISTMAS IN RATCLIFF-HIGHWAY.

THE WELCOME HOME.

THE unloading of the "Christmas Boat," and the meetings in connection with it at Miss Child's Welcome Home for Sailors, 173, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, made up a happy and memorable evening. Before and after tea meetings were held in the "Fo'c's'le" and other rooms, when many words of exhortation and good cheer were spoken to the assembled sailors. When the discharging of "the cargo" began it was a touching sight to see these hardy sons of the sea walking up to get their gifts; some had tears in their eyes as they received these tokens of goodwill in the shape of scarves, cuffs, books, &c. Some souls were truly blessed at the various meetings; many signed the pledge, putting on the blue ribbon, and receiving Bibles, which they gladly promised to read.

Next evening a soup supper was given to a number of poor men, who were out of work, homeless, and many of them nearly starving. The Gospel message was distinctly told out to all, and at the close of the meeting a pair of warm cuffs was given to each man.

THE STRANGERS' REST.

Christmas at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, was marked, as in former years, by a season of Christian festivity. On Christmas Eve a beef and plum-pudding supper was given to sailors. Owing to the present depressed state of the shipping trade, the supper was a welcome repast to many. Interesting addresses, interspersed with singing, were given. At the close several of the sailors lingered behind for further conversation.

Christmas Day was the principal day for the sailors. After tea, the Germans were drafted off to their own room, where addresses in their own language were given. The English room was crowded, and a short, interesting meeting was held, while an overflow meeting was carried on in the "shop." Testimonies were given by three "old salts," who told in characteristic language what great things the Lord had done for them. Before closing the meeting those anxious to be prayed for were asked to hold up their hands, and the ready way in which twenty-three responded showed that the meeting was not without result.

All the men passed into the Swedish-room, where a Christmas tree was laden with useful presents, comprising mufflers, mittens, caps, book-markers, &c., all of them worked by ladies interested in the good work carried on at the Rest. These were distributed, the Doxology was sung, and the assembly broke up, all agreeing that a very happy Christmas had been passed.

On Boxing Day 150 of the children connected with the Sunday-school held at the Rest were gathered together for their annual Christmas tree and treat. During the evening hymns were sung, and addresses given by the teachers and other friends, previous to the distribution of the gifts, which consisted principally of articles of clothing, toys, books, sweets, &c. Thus was brought to a close a Christmas season, happy and profitable to all concerned.

The work carried on at the Strangers' Rest is a very comprehensive one, as our readers know. Meetings for all nationalities of sailors are held almost every day throughout the year, and the "shop" is open for the greater part of the day, so that sailors may enter to read or to write letters. More help is needed for the children, for whom Sunday and week-evening classes are held; it is felt desirable that there should be a separate building and a larger staff of teachers. Mr. J. T. Isaac, Hon. Sec., Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, E., will send the current annual report to any friends desiring to know more of the work.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Jan. 10, John iv. 1—14; Jan. 11, iv. 15—30; Jan 12, iv. 31—42; Jan. 13, iv. 43—54; Jan. 14, v. 1—13; Jan. 15, v. 14—24; Jan. 16, v. 25—35.

CHRISTMAS DAY IN PARIS.

A LADY visitor sends us a detailed account of how she spent Christmas Day at Miss Leigh's Mission Homes. We extract the following:-

After a short and cheerful service at Christ Church, Neuilly, we followed the children to the Orphanage and Children's Home. We found them assembled round the tables in their large dining-room. As we looked at their bright, happy faces, we could not but rejoice that God had provided such a shelter for them from the life of destitution, and perhaps worse. They much enjoyed their Christmas fare. Miss Leigh spoke to them words of cheerful and kindly advice. Christmas hymns were sung, and the children left to spend the rest of the day in innocent games and amusement.

At the Avenue Wagram Mission Hall, from which the Mission and Temperance work among the English poor is chiefly carried on, there were assembled nearly 260 guests,—fathers, mothers, and children. After dinner hymns were sung, Miss Leigh going from room to room, greeting and welcoming all. In the Mission Hall, which was filled with adults, she also spoke seasonable words. Mention was made of the different meetings and services held in the Hall throughout the year, to which all are welcome. There are mothers' meetings, clothing club, children's classes for singing and sewing, Sunday and night schools, and mission services, Temperance and Band of Hope meetings. During the winter a soup dinner three days each week, after which a portion of God's Word is read, a Gospel address given, and hymns are sung.

In the evening was held the gathering of the day, a meeting of those who had some time been resident in the Home. Many "old girls" were there, too, who had been present at the very first Christmas dinner at the Home, thirteen years ago. Many and glad were the greetings and welcomes on all sides. Rev. A. J. Harrison, of Christ Church, gave a cheery and interesting address. He especially spoke to the young women present, who had so much reason to be thankful for the Mission Home. He reminded them of the time when they were strangers in a strange land, and suggested to them that they should use all their influence to help their young countrywomen by telling them of the Home, and of the kind, sympathising friends they would find there. Miss Leigh also spoke earnestly and simply to her guests.

There remained yet one more Home to visit—the Young Men's, in Avenue MacMahon. There we found assembled those who lodge there, with their friends, who had been enjoying a social evening together. After a pleasant and profitable time we bade them good-bye, and thus ended our bright Christmas Day among our country-people in Paris.

The Paris correspondent of The Record writes:—

"Christmas has been celebrated with earnestness and in peace by our Christian people, and our arbres de Noël, attended by immense crowds of children and grown-up people, are an opportunity for thousands to hear—many for the first time—about the Child of Bethlehem, the Prince of Peace. Last night I was present at the Christmas-tree of the McAll Mission in the Quartier St. Antoine. That suburb of Paris is, as Belleville, an immense agglomeration of ouvriers, mostly joiners and cabinet-makers. As Belleville, also, it is steeped in Radical and Communist principles. It is behind that suburb that lies Pere Lachaise, where the last fight between the regular troops and the Communards took place. Follow me in the very centre of that quartier; let us enter a long alley, and penetrate into a large hall, on the front of which is written the word 'Conférences.' When you have got in the hall, which is a very hard task, you find there gathered four hundred children—not one less—with their eyes beaming with joy and perfectly attentive. M. Greig strikes a bell, and the silence is such that you could literally hear a pin fall. Then the four hundred children with one voice recite the beautiful narrative of Christ's birth literally from Luke; it is thrilling. Our countryman, M. McAll, tells them, in French, a charming story; then the pastor of the parish speaks, and others, and the children are there, attentive, answering as one voice every question and singing alternately with the speeches. It is truly grand! How happy it makes you feel that in hundreds of homes families will to-night be conversing about what they have seen and heard, taking away with them a nice useful present accompanied by a good and well-selected tract."

NEW YEAR'S DAY WITH SEAMEN.

THE end of the Old and the beginning of the New Year will long be remembered by the crowds of seamen who filled the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel in Ratcliff-highway. The watch-night service was conducted by Rev. G. J. Hill, who called upon a number of Christian seamen to testify what the Lord had done for their souls. It was indeed a solemn meeting. Many hearts were touched by the Divine Spirit, and several anxious ones asked for special prayer. A sailors' tea-meeting was held in the same place on New Year's Day, followed by a Gospel Temperance meeting, over which Captain W. Dalrymple presided. At this meeting the chapel was literally packed with sailors, and many went away unable to gain admission. It was considered a matter for great thankfulness, that although it was New-Year's Day, large numbers of seamen came from the ships at nearly all the Scotch wharves in London. The Chairman, who is largely connected with shipping, spoke of the improvement in the condition of seamen of late years, and attributed it to the work of institutions like this.

Earnest and appropriate addresses were given by Mr. H. W. Maynard (of the London Dock Company), Mr. J. McCall, and Miss Messer. Several friends sang sacred solos, and a number of brief testimonies were given by seamen. During the evening several hundred bound books and other presents were given to the sailors. Many went away saying that they had never spent such a happy New Year's Day before. These meetings resulted in forty-two sailors signing the Temperance pledge, and several making a profession of faith in Christ, but it is believed that numbers besides these will have reason to bless God for the way they were led to close the old year and begin the new.

SUNDAY REST.—General Schmitz, who commands the 9th corps at Toulouse, France, has just decided that henceforth Sunday shall be free, so that officers and soldiers may attend to their religious duties. The reviews, which were usually held on Sunday morning, will henceforth take place on Saturday.

SAILORS' MISSIONARIES ON NEW YEAR'S EVE.—For some years it has been the happy custom of the River and Dock Missions, connected with the Thames Church Mission, to spend the last evening of the year in prayer and praise. Mr. E. J. Mather presided at last Thursday's service, and gave as a motto for the year Heb. xiii. 20, 21. Interesting testimonies were given by the senior missionary; Mr. Simons, who works at Tilbury; Mr. Loman, the Gravesend missionary; the Woolwich missionary; the Poplar "Rest" manager and missionary; the Regent's Canal basin missionary; a snowy-haired colporteur; and, lastly, the new secretary, Rev. Henry Bloomer, who gave some touching stories of the Lord's gracious dealings at Gravesend. For six years Mr. E. J. Mather has been the secretary of the Thames Church Mission, and has been the means of largely extending the work. As, however, he was distinctly led of the Lord to undertake that service on behalf of the North Sea trawlers which has now developed into the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. In the marvellous growth of that work he felt it inadvisable to continue to act as Secretary of the Thames Church Mission; hence he recently resigned, being appointed, however, member of the committee, and retaining his interest in the work. Rev. Henry Bloomer, for two years chaplain of the mission, has been appointed Secretary. After a few concluding words from Mr. Mather, the rest of the evening was wholly spent in prayer, one after another of the staff, of whom twenty-four were present, pouring out their souls to God in earnest supplication that He would give rich blessing on the river and in the docks in 1886.

LIMITED LIABILITY IN VICE.

WE have received the following communication from Scotland-yard:—

SIR,—My attention having been called to a statement by Mr. Micklethwaite at a meeting at Barnsley—vide your issue of November 5—I took steps to ascertain any facts relating to the subject with reference to branch establishments in London of a Limited Liability Company of Brothel Keepers.

In the end I referred to Mr. Micklethwaite himself, and I send you his letter on the subject, which I shall feel obliged by your inserting in your next issue.

The only fact which Mr. Micklethwaite gives me is that about eighteen months ago there was in Maida Vale a disorderly house alleged to be connected with other disorderly houses in the provinces, but that the house may have been changed since the date of his information. "In the most important part" the report of Mr. Micklethwaite's speech is stated by that gentleman to be inaccurate.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
J. MONRO, Assistant Commissioner.
Metropolitan Police Office, 4, Whitehall-place, S.W.,
December 24, 1885.

SIR,—In answer to your letter, I have to say that the report quoted is inaccurate in the most important part. What I stated was, "that there was a regular system of connected houses in different towns worked somewhat like a limited liability company;" and no words of mine gave the slightest foundation for the statement that "members are making fortunes," &c. What paper started the inaccuracy I don't know; I corrected it at once in The Yorkshire Post, and prevented anything similar being put in the Barnsley papers of the following Saturday, which contained a full report. The Guardian (London) also inserted my letter, and had the papers generally been as careful to copy my correction as spread the false statement, I should have been saved considerable annoyance. From what source you get your information I do not know, but I shall be glad if you will correct it.

The real facts are well known to most of the managers of our penitentiaries, I should think; my knowledge of it extends over nine years, and it has been known of here for certainly fifteen. The information is from fallen women who have been here, taken at intervals, preventing any collusion. A so called "Madame Chester," at Manchester, is the head of it. Touts go about the different towns and villages to get young girls; false names are always given both of the streets and proprietors or managers, differing from those in which the houses are taken; "never once," as I said at the meeting, "had I been able to get the real names, hence identification was next to impossible, and save by backing up the police by public opinion openly expressed, as at Barnsley, I did not see what could be done." The women all say the same, that the precautions are so carefully taken that it is impossible to stop the system. The London house is in Maida Vale, and that is all I can tell you; it may have been changed since my information, which will be about eighteen months since. Flash names are in use, the managers being only known to the women as "Lady Betty" or "Lady Jane," &c. We have at present in the Home no case who has been under the system, nor should we take one if we knew she had been. The last we had, left this year and went back, and was sent back as a tout from the Wakefield house, but of course we refused to let her see any of the others. Perhaps the Manchester police might know "Madame Chester" by that name. We do know that they shut up her house once or twice there, but it has opened under another name in another part, and the connection kept up.—Yours, &c.,

(Signed) A. T. MICKLETHWAITE.
House of Mercy, Horbury, December 19, 1885.

We really do not see that there is much to correct, though, if Mr. Micklethwaite's explanation had come to our notice, we should have given it all the publicity we could. The statements that the system was "a limited liability company," and that the members were making fortunes, are not in our opinion by any means "the most important part." Of course, no thinking reader of the paragraph would have supposed that a regularly constituted and legally registered "Limited Liability Company" was in existence ostensibly for such a purpose: that would be a simple impossibility. Neither did the wording of the paragraph, as it appeared in our columns, convey that meaning. We did not print Limited Liability Company with capital initials, as would appear from Mr. Monro's letter. As to the members making fortunes, we would like to ask, if they do not make money by their horrible traffic, why do they carry it on? Is it from philanthropic motives, or is it from sheer love of devilish cruelty? "The most important part" of Mr. Micklethwaite's letter is undoubtedly its declaration (and which is not called in question by the Assistant Commissioner of Police) that "there is a regular system of connected houses in different towns worked somewhat like a limited liability company," that from the head centre at Manchester, "touts go about the different towns and villages to get young girls," and that this atrocious wickedness is carried out with such fiendish ingenuity that "identification is next to impossible," and that "precautions are so carefully taken that it is impossible to stop the system"; the Penitentiaries and the Police are alike incapable of putting it down.

It does appear to us passing strange that we should get an official letter from Scotland Yard of which the main purpose appears to be to divert attention from this blood-guiltiness to a quite secondary question.

"'In the most important part' the report of Mr. Micklethwaite's speech is stated by that gentleman to be inaccurate." We entirely deny that it is by any means the most important part. Whether the members made fortunes or not is a mere side issue. The "most important part" is the fact that not only in Central Africa but in Central England slave-dealers harry the towns and villages to decoy and kidnap young girls for lives of shame.

The apparent object of Mr. Monro's letter is to excuse the police from blame because this diabolical system is not stopped. Does any one believe that it is impossible for the police to put it down, if they really set themselves to do so?

But we must not pass over another "most important part" of Mr. Micklethwaite's speech, reported by himself in his letter, and repeated and underlined by Mr. Munro: . . . "save by backing up the police by public opinion openly expressed, as at Barnsley, I did not see what could be done." Here the conspiracy of silence is utterly condemned. Those who advocate silence are, according to this showing of Mr. Micklethwaite, endorsed by the Assistant Commissioner of Police, refusing their help to arrest this inhuman and soul-destroying traffic in the daughters of their own people.

Oh, men and women of England, fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, the cost is too terrible. God recognises no limited liability to the curse of Meroz: "Curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

A WOMAN'S WORD TO WOMEN.

DEAR SIR,—Surely every right-minded parent must rejoice at the many efforts being put forth to lessen the terrible evil that is so stealthily undermining the purity of our sons and daughters. While so many excellent things have been written and said, there is one aspect of the subject which has scarcely been touched upon.

It is impossible to use words too strong in denunciation of the male monsters whose deeds have filled the country with horror. At the same time, is nothing to be said about the conduct of too many women and girls? It is my firm belief, from facts that have come to my knowledge, that a very large proportion of bad men were in the first instance made bad by the insidious temptations of bold, bad women, when they were themselves very young. And will not the Book of Proverbs bear me out in my assertion? Is it not full of cautions to youths to beware of certain women? (Prov. ii. 16—19, iv. 3—5, vi. 24—28, vii. 5, &c., &c.), as though it was the usual thing for men, in the first instance, to be thus led away. Domestic servants, supposed to be highly respectable, have often been the temptresses, though temptresses are, I believe, by no means confined to that class of society.

I remember a mother giving me an account of her young son having been tempted by a young lady of his own rank, daughter of a professional man, and on expressing my surprise, she said, "Ah! you have been so carefully brought up, you little know the sort of girls there are in worldly circles."

In saying this, I trust I shall not be thought to excuse bad men in any way, far from it; but I yearn to see young girls of all classes more modestly trained. Their forwardness in the present day is, I am sure, a source of evil.

May it not be that some of our Christian mothers even aggravate this danger by their over-attendance at public meetings, often leaving their children entirely under the influence of servants when they might be doing more good at home? Are such passages as 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35, Titus ii. 3—5, 1 Peter iii. 1—6, 1 Tim. ii. 9—13, sufficiently studied in these days?

Having daughters as well as sons growing up around me, I have been anxiously looking for a few words on this aspect of the question; but failing to see them, I have thus tried to express my feeling on this point; while thanking you, dear Sir, for your earnest work in the cause of purity,

A MOTHER.

MANNEDORF.—The twenty-fifth anniversary of Samuel Heller's work at Männedorf was lately celebrated by the hosts and many friends from a distance. Songs of prayer and praise were sounding out from the patients at six in the morning. Hundreds of souls and bodies have been benefited in this hospital home.—Journal Réligieux.

PURITY WORK IN NAPLES.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to support the appeal which I see in your last week's issue from Mr. Stephen Burrows, of Naples? I hear continually of Mr. Burrows' work from my sister, Madame Meuricoffre, who has been thirty years resident in Naples. She writes to me of Mr. Burrows this week as follows (privately, of course):—"If ever there was the right man in the right place it is he. He is so large-hearted and brave. He is little of stature; and there is here one of those infamous men who regularly go on board the English and other foreign ships, as soon as they cast anchor, to sell to the sailors the most horrible photographs, and distribute wicked advertisements. This man is a perfect Hercules, and speaks English well. He has dogged Burrows this whole winter, in order to stab him. Burrows does not apply to the police for protection, as it would be of no use. Last Thursday we were walking home at eleven, p.m., and were passed by five Royal marines and three blue jackets trooping along from H.M.S. Superb. They were accompanied all along by three of these male purveyors for vice. I heard one of the blue jackets refusing very roughly to be guided to the Inferno which these land sharks wished to take him to. But where are they to go, the poor fellows? They must sometimes leave the close, crowded between-decks; and, if they went to a drinking shop, their wine would be drugged, and they would be at the mercy of these creatures. Neither do they always want to go to the Bethel, to sit in stiff rows to be preached to. Hence the great need of 'The Sailors' Rests,' which Mr. Burrows is labouring night and day to establish, not only in Naples, but in other Italian ports.

"Can you make an appeal to English friends who care for our sailors? There is a branch of the English Social Purity League started here, of which Mr. Burrows deserves to be a prominent member. He has done more for social purity in Naples than any one else. His sympathetic hold on the harbour population is wonderful. He has already almost changed the aspect of those streets. Mr. Grant, the Consul, says that there are far fewer arrests of sailors for drunkenness and disorderly conduct since Mr. Burrows began his work."

So far my sister; the reason I plead for help in England for this good man is that he does not get much in Naples. There are very few Protestants there, and among these even the work of this homely but practical Christian is not sufficiently appreciated. I give my sister's address in case any friend should be moved to help our sailors in Italy—Madame Meuricoffre, Pallazzo Caprioli, Vico Calascione, Monte di Dio, Naples, Italy.—I am, yours faithfully,

Winchester, Jan. 1. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

PREVENTIVE AND TRAINING HOME FOR YOUNG GIRLS.—A lady, being desirous of establishing a Preventive and Training Home for Young Girls, decided to commence one in the neighbourhood of Roupell-park, Brixton. She rented Auckland House, Auckland-hill, and put it in proper order. It is now comfortably furnished, a steam laundry has been built to the house, with all the latest improvements, which promises by local help to become self-supporting. In that branch of industry the girls will be trained for domestic service, and above all for the service of Christ. A free registry for servants will be connected with the Home, and it will be opened to visitors every day except Sunday. But further help is needed in establishing a separate house that can be used as a shelter, to be opened during all hours, so as to be able to shield those who come to us for help and sympathy, and can only be rescued from their life of shame by caring for their bodies as well as their souls, and inducing ladies to take them into their homes. The sum of £12 per annum will be required for each girl, and £200 is needed to start the shelter. Communications and promises of help should be addressed to Miss Romanes, Auckland House, Auckland-hill, Lower Norwood; or to Mrs. Woodford Fawcett, Bressay House, Tulse-hill, S.W., London. —Methodist Times.

At City-road Wesleyan Chapel recently, Mr. Raper said, "in Canada, as well as in Sweden, Methodist and total abstainer were synonymous."

Dr. Marshall Lang delivered a special sermon in St. Cuthbert's Church, Edinburgh, in connection with the University Total Abstinence Society.

The Globe condemns the common practice of sending servant girls to public-houses for drink, and thinks they ought not to be exposed to such risks.

Sir R. Webster, M.P., Attorney-General, says he has been a total abstainer ten or twelve years, and has had no difficulty in sustaining the most severe mental labour.

In an address to members of the Evangelical Union, Principal Morison "hopes, in compassion for helpless women and children, they will help on the noble enterprise of Temperance."

At a recent soiree of Church clergy and organists, at Nuremberg, the audience indulged in beer and tobacco, while sacred music was being performed. Both sexes and all ages took the beer.

The Standard recently asked for the name of "one" literary abstainer. In reply "Sentinel," in the C. E. T. Chronicle supplies the names of fourteen who have won distinction or fame.

A town is in course of erection near Charleston, in the centre of an estate of 60,000 acres. By deed it is provided no liquor shall be made or sold within ten miles. The town is named Whittier, after the owner, Dr. Whittier.

The entire adult population of St. Marthe village, Quebec, numbering 2000, on Saturday, November 21, voluntarily assembled in church, and pledged themselves to abstain from alcoholic beverages for one year.

The Privy Council's decision on the Canadian appeal case is published. They have pronounced the Liquor License Act, 1883, and the Amending Act, 1884, illegal. This does not touch the Scott Act, which is still in force.

A general meeting of the Hospitals Association was recently held in London. In view of the results of the non-alcoholic treatment doubt was expressed as to the justice of applying charitable contributions to the purchase of drink for the use of either officers or patients.

The hundred-guinea prize offered by the Medical Temperance Association for the best essay on "The Moral and Physical Advantages of Total Abstinence," has been awarded to Mr. H. W. F. Coryn, student at Charing Cross Hospital. There were thirty-nine competitors.

What we Send to Africa.—At each port of call the eye becomes bewildered in watching the discharge of thousands of cases of gin, hundreds of demijohns of rum, box upon box of guns, untold kegs of gunpowder, myriads of clay pipes, while it seems as if only by accident a stray bale of cloth went over the side.—"Up the Niger," by Joseph Thomson.

A Conference was recently held at the Birkbeck Institution, with a view to interest the members of Working Men's Clubs in the Temperance question in its relation to the progress and prosperity of the wage-earning classes. The conveners desire to bring before members of clubs, by means of mutually arranged lectures and discussions and the circulation of literature the advantages of Total Abstinence as a factor to social reform.

In the State of Illinois, through the action of "high license," the revenues of the State have been increased from 700,000 dollars to over 4,500,000 dollars; the number of saloons has been reduced from 13,000 to less than 9000; the best elements of both parties unite in supporting and enforcing the law, and disregard of it apparently finds little sanction from either the people or their natural representatives, the courts, the sheriffs, and the juries. Moreover, in county after county, in small villages, the high license has had the effect to close up all liquor shops.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

BRECON.—At the Struet mission room evangelistic work is regularly carried on, and tracts or Gospel papers would be thankfully received by the Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Brecon.

MR. F. C. SPURR, who has for some time laboured as an evangelist in connection with the Evangelistic Mission, has, with the concurrence of Mr. Hurditch, recently given up that connection, in order that he may devote himself exclusively to Gospel effort among such of the churches as are desirous of pushing aggressive work for the salvation of the masses. Friends who may wish to secure his services can communicate with Mr. Spurr, at 79, Sebert-road, Forest-gate, E.

RAILWAY MEN IN MANCHESTER.—Mr. John Waite, 102, Higher Chatham-street, Oxford-road, Manchester, writes:—Since we commenced our special effort to bring the Gospel to the railway-men, carters, cabmen, tramcar-men, and boatmen of this city, we have been permitted to see that our labour has not been in vain. As only a small proportion of these men attend any place of worship on the Lord's day, we have felt a desire to present many of them with a pocket New Testament, and to get a promise that they will read a small portion daily. Who can tell the result of giving a man or boy a Testament? Those who know something of the power of God's word. I shall be glad to hear from any who would like to take part in this work.

MR. JOHN B. BAIN, formerly an evangelist among the miners at Rio Tinto, Spain, and whose services at Bournemouth and Ryde we recorded some months ago, writes:—During our visit to Barmouth in Wales God blessed the Word to the young on the sands. We also had blessing at the Bible readings. I saw two baptized here last night, who were converted there. I have conducted missions in Glasgow, Swindon, West Derby, and Liverpool. The last two very fruitful; that in Liverpool very marked. It was most cheering to see some of the poorest in tears, seeking the Lord, and going away with hearts made glad with the love of God. There never was a night during the mission without some one waiting to seek the Lord. One old lady over sixty was led to Christ, and had much joy when she knew the burden had gone. Altogether it was a time of reaping, and that among the working-classes. It was with much pain I had to leave for want of strength. I was fairly wearied out. I fear I shall have to keep away from work for three months. Am advised to go to the Engadine, and if God opens up my way, I will go.

The Book World.

Some Important "Don'ts": A Word to Everybody. By John Wood. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co. Some very sound advice on many too often untouched subjects. The "don'ts" on "Gossip" are excellent.

The Home Visitor and District Companion. Edited by Rev. O. B. Power. Volume for 1885. W. Hunt & Co. Bright, excellent, cheap, and outspoken. Just the kind of reading it aims to be for home and hearth: cheery and instructive.

My Bible Study for the Sundays of the Year. By the late F. R. Havergal. Home Words Office. 1s. Brief, pointed notes, upon Old Testament portions of Scripture, written in the incisive, decided style which made the authoress's words so valuable.

The Welsh Pulpit of To-day. Edited by Rev. J. Cynddylan Jones, of Cardiff. 7s. 6d. (Hamilton.) A volume of twenty-seven admirable sermons by as many living Welsh preachers. The editor's sermon on "The Life of Jesus" gives a view peculiar to himself, yet common to all who love the same Lord. It is a worthy prelude to the spiritual and able presentations of the person and the doctrine of Christ which compose the book. A valuable addition to any library.

The usual packet of new publications by Bishop Ryle comes from Messrs. W. Hunt & Co. Thoughts on Prayer (3d.) Surely all who read this little book, with its holy aspirations, and its devout thoughts, must be better for its teachings. Dr. Ryle teaches a living Christianity. The Signs of the Times (6d. per doz.), "A tract for to-day," contains weighty and worthy words on the Second Advent. In Perilous Times we have burning words, words of truth, words to stir the Christian to diligence and fervency of spirit. 1s. per doz. Let us Hold Fast our Profession, an address for 1886 (2s. per doz.). Vigorous, stirring thoughts, containing helpful, holy counsel for all, especially truth-seekers. What did he Choose? (2s. per doz.). In his own searching way the author dissects Heb. xi. 24—26, contrasting the choice of Moses with that of those who prefer "the treasures of Egypt." The true Spirit of God shines from these pages. The Morning without Clouds (2d.). Comforting and strengthening thoughts on 2 Sam. xxiii. 4, 5. Every sentence a sparkling gem of truth.

MAGAZINES FOR JANUARY.

The Day of Days; Home Words. 1d. each. "Home Words" Office. It is wonderful how, month by month, these publications maintain their freshness and truth. The Sentinel. 1d. Dyer Bros. Sixteen pages of truth militant. All who are interested in the moral and social problems of the time should read and distribute this monthly. The Railway Signal; On and Off Duty. 1d. each. Marshall Bros. These two publications for railway-men and policemen ought to be widely distributed.

A new candidate for public favour is Toilers of the Deep (2d. 181, Queen Victoria-street), the monthly organ of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. This work has developed with wonderful rapidity during the last year or two, thanks to the devoted and unremitting efforts of Mr. E. J. Mather, its founder and director. The contents of this first number are very appropriate, and cannot fail to enlist the active sympathy of its readers. We observe that the Editor in his Notes says, though "there are now five mission smacks cruising with as many fleets in the North Sea, seven more are urgently needed." We trust the need will ere long be fully met.

The Sword and The Trowel (3d. Passmore & Alabaster) is a good average number, but has no article of unusual interest this month. Many will be glad to see in his "Notes" that the Editor is rapidly benefiting by his stay at Mentone. The Congregationalist (1s. Hodder & Stoughton) seems more denominational in its contents than customary, but all the papers are able and thoroughly readable. There is a discriminating review of Dr. Parker's new story, illustrating the relations of Church and Dissent. We have already referred to the late Dean Howson's paper in The Quiver (6d. Cassell). The number generally is a live and interesting one. Professor Blaikie, of Edinburgh, furnishes a narrative of industrial success that ought to claim the attention of working men. The Sunday at Home (6d. Religious Tract Society) has a very pretty coloured frontispiece, followed by the beginning of an American story that promises well. Some graphic sketches of life in a New York lodging-house, another of "Bartholomews," and a memorial notice of the late Bishop Fraser, are specially attractive items in a capital number. In The Leisure Hour Mrs. Bishop (Isabella Bird) begins an account of "A Pilgrimage to Sinai." "A Day at the Post Office" is full of interest to all letter writers, and is well illustrated. Among the many other good things are a sketch of the life of William Lloyd Garrison, and a finely illustrated paper descriptive of Yorkshire. The Cottager and Artizan (1d.) has a magnificent portrait of Mr. W. E. Gladstone, with sketch of his career. Good Words (6d. Isbister) is a strong number. Mr. Joseph Thomson begins to relate his travels "up the Niger to the Central Soudan." The Duke of Argyll expatiates learnedly on the origin of Highland mountains. Mr. C. Whymper describes "The English Peasantry at Home." There are, besides, papers by Dr. Donald Fraser and Mary Howitt, and an abundant supply of fiction. The most striking contribution to The Sunday Magazine (6d.) are Bishop Boyd Carpenter's sermon for the New Year, and Dr. Dykes' chapter for young men, based on the early life of David. The illustrations are a prominent feature. This is still more true of The Welcome (6d. Partridge), which has a fine frontispiece, specially drawn by the eminent Scottish artist, Mr. Faed, R.A. There are portraits of the late Bishop Fraser, King Milan, the late Dr. Carpenter, and the late King of Spain. We would direct special attention to the valuable series of papers by a Consulting Physician begun in this number, entitled, "The Doctor at Home." Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's striking story in The British Workman (1d.) is splendidly illustrated by W. Small, and the other contents of the number are excellent as ever. The same remark equally applies to Messrs. Partridge's other attractive serials for the household—the Band of Hope Review, Family Friend, Friendly Visitor, Children's Friend (which has an intensely amusing picture, "Guilty or Not Guilty," for which a prize story is in competition) and the Infants' Magazine, which has a pretty coloured picture, and many other attractions—a rare pennyworth for the wee folks. Our Darlings (3d. Shaw & Co.) seems better than ever, with its wealth of fine pictures, short stories, and its "Prize Tournament." Dr. Barnardo continues his touching story of child-life in London streets.

Dean Howson's last book, the final proofs of which he corrected only a day or two before his death, was the volume just published by Mr. Elliot Stock, entitled, "Thoughts for Saints' Days; or, Short Readings Arranged for the Festivals of the Church's Year."

The Gospel Magazine for January contains a striking likeness of its editor, Dr. Doudney, vicar of St. Luke's, Bedminster, and editor of Old Jonathan, &c. The same number also contains a portrait of Mr. George Cowell, the writer of "Wayside Notes," and the oldest contributor to The Gospel Magazine (which was established in 1766).

The Sabbath Day and The Lord's Day. By T. W Bradbury. 4d. Partridge. Another plea for the seventh-day Sabbath, only this time in connection with Israel; and a defence of the institution of the Lord's (or first) Day as the Christian day of rest, "having in it the true spirit of the seventh day sanctified at the creation of man."

Temperance Fanaticism. A letter to the Lord Bishop of Manchester on Genuine Sacramental Wine. 1s Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. A powerful, spiritual, and really learned defence of the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's table. If the book were a fourth of its present price it might reach a far larger class of readers. It deserves to be widely known and read.

The National Temperance League's Annual for 1886. 1s. 337, Strand. At what cost and pains this mass of information has been got together, only the editor knows! Nothing seems to have been left out. In contrast with the "Influence of Alcoholic Excess upon Mortality," is the "Obituary of Temperance Workers," whose ages are chiefly among the seventies and eighties.

Waiting and Working is the title of the first issue of a new series of "Children's Medical Misson Stories," written by Miss Annie R. Butler, and published by A. Standing, 14, Paternoster-square. Much insight into Indian life is gained from this little book, and boys and girls who read it may get an early interest excited in their minds, the fruit of which may appear in future missionary effort.

Y.W.C.A., SOUTHAMPTON.—Rev. B. G. Hoskyns, of St. Mary's, gave a New Year's address to a large number of friends, associates, and members, at the rooms in Portland-street. Basing his remarks on Gen. xxiv, he said that, if we are to follow Christ our companionship and fellowship must be with those who love Him and have conformed to his likeness. The example of Eleazar—whole-hearted character and disinterestedness in the service of his master, and absolute forgetfulness of self—was quoted and applied most forcibly to the work of those engaged in the Y.W.C.A. The address was much appreciated by the large number of ladies present. The Southampton Home has been much valued during the past year, about forty young people having lodged in it; and the registry work has done well. Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, singing-classes, &c., have been held weekly, and the social tea have proved very pleasant gatherings. The names of most of the prominent clergy and ministers of the town are on the committee, and show the kindly interest they take in the work.

SUNDAY, JAN. 10.—EXODUS XXXVII.

6.—And he made the mercy seat of pure gold.—The ark itself, of which the mercy-seat was the lid or cover, was made of "shittim (or "acacia," R.V.) wood, overlaid with pure gold within and without," so that the absence of wood in the cover is worthy of notice. The wood is generally regarded as typifying the human nature, while the gold typifies the Divine nature, of Christ. If so, the absence of that which typified the human nature in the mercy-seat would seem to call for explanation. Perhaps it may be best accounted for by remembering that what was lacking in the cover, as compared with the other five sides of the ark, was supplied by the blood which once a year, on the great day of atonement, was sprinkled on this mercy-seat. It was then that the ark alone attained its highest significance as a type of Christ, for then there was not only seen a union of the Divine and human natures in his person, within which was the law, but there was the sprinkling of blood, testifying to death endured under the curse of the law, and so God's presence could rest in full satisfaction above the mercy-seat, which thus typified Christ—"set forth as a propitiation (the Greek word for 'mercy-seat'), through faith in his blood" (Rom. iii. 25). The blood sprinkled on the pure gold strikingly typified the death of the human nature in union with and sustained by the Divine, and thus we can better understand such a passage as Acts xx. 28, "the Church of God which He hath purchased with his own blood."

8.—Out of the mercy-seat made he the cherubims on the two ends thereof.—There is much difficulty in deciding what the forms of the cherubim upon the ark were. Kurtz in his able work on "Sacrificial Worship," says, "All we can gather from the description is that they were probably of human shape, and that they had one face and two wings." But the analogy of Ezekiel i. and x., and especially ver. 20, "I knew that they were the cherubim," points rather to the four living creatures there described as being the cherubim. They probably typified redeemed creation, including the Church which in the Book of Revelation is separately represented by the four and twenty elders, as constituting "the first fruits of his creatures" (James i. 18).

MONDAY, JAN. 11.—EXODUS XXXVIII.

8.—And he made the laver of brass . . . . of the looking-glasses of the women assembling, &c.—"We must lose sight of nature as reflected in a looking-glass, and be wholly occupied with Christ as presented in the Word."—C.H.M. The looking-glasses reflected the defilement of nature; but in their new and consecrated use, as made into the laver, they contained the element which cleanses from such defilement. Thus the law, which reflects sin, is changed in Christ into the Gospel, which contains the good news of the blood which cleanseth from all sin.

24.—All the gold that was occupied for the work, &c.—"The value of the gold, if pure, in our money would be £175,075 13s., and of the silver £38,034 15s. 10d."—Sp. Com.

26.—A bekah for every man, that is, half a shekel, after the shekel of the sanctuary.—"We cannot be far wrong in estimating the shekel at 220 grains (just over half an ounce avoirdupois), and its value in silver as 2s. 7d."—Sp. Com.

27.—And of the hundred talents of silver were cast the sockets of the sanctuary.—"It is interesting to notice that the silver of which these sockets were formed was furnished out of the redemption money of the Israelites. It was a Divine commandment that every man in Israel from twenty years old and upwards should give 'as a ransom for his soul unto the Lord' a piece of silver of a half-shekel weight. Rich and poor were to give alike the same. The ransom money of the Israelites is referred to in 1 Pet. i. 18, as a type of 'the precious blood of Christ.' His blood, and not corruptible things as silver and gold, is there declared to be the price at which 'the Israel of God' are redeemed. As the Tabernacle in the wilderness was founded upon the atonement-money, so Christ's claim to be the meeting-place between God and the sinner rests upon the blood of Atonement. That religion, that hope, which is not founded upon the truth of the Atonement is vain and unsubstantial."—F.H. White.

TUESDAY, JAN. 12.—EXODUS XXXIX.

The dress of the High Priest is again presented to us in its preparation, as it had been in chap. xxviii. in its design. It consisted of three garments—the inner robe of fine linen (ver. 27); over that "the robe of the ephod of woven work, all of blue" (ver. 22); and over that again the ephod, and the curious girdle that was upon it, and the breastplate of cunning work, whereon were engraved on precious stones the names of the twelve tribes of Israel. These three distinct robes seem to typify the three distinct ideas presented by the three titles, Lord, Jesus, Christ. The inner robe of fine white linen typifies the spotless humanity of "Jesus;" the blue robe of the ephod, "all of blue," presents to us the Godhead—blue being the colour that typified Divinity—of Him who was Lord; and the ephod, with its ever-attached breastplate, typified the official aspect of the Lord Jesus—the Christhood, so to speak.

25.—And they made bells of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomegranates.—"Whenever and wherever the high priest moved, the sound of those golden bells must be heard. Wherever Christ is preached the sound of the golden bells is heard. Precious sound in the ears of God's people! So as to the pomegranates, which were also on the high priest's robe, they were emblematical of the golden fruit which the Gospel preached and the Gospel received into the soul always produces. Wherever the high priest moved precious fruit was borne about by him."—W. H. Krause.

And it may be added, that as the bells were of gold, the Gospel message which their sound typified is the Gospel of God. So also as the pomegranates were of gold, the fruit which Gospel truth received, brings forth, is "of God." "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy" &c. (Gal. v. 22). Both bells and fruit are Divine.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 13.—EXODUS XL.

17.—In the first month, in the second year, on the first day of the month, the tabernacle was reared up.—"That is, on the first of the month Nisan; one year, wanting fourteen days, after the departure of the Israelites from Egypt. They had been nearly three months in reaching the foot of Mount Sinai (xix. 1); Moses had spent eighty days on the mountain, and some time must be allowed for what is related in chap. xxiv. as well as for the interval between the two periods which Moses spent on the mountain (xxxiii. 1—23). The construction of the tabernacle and its furniture would thus appear to have occupied something less than half a year."—Sp. Com.

34.—The glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. "When we read such a passage as this, where we are told that God did dignify the tabernacle with a visible manifestation of his glory, and when we read afterwards that the Temple which Solomon built was so filled with that glory that the priests could not enter into it; I believe that these things lead us step by step in our anticipation of that glorious day when 'the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea;' when 'the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and He shall dwell with them.' In proportion as the heart goes out in longing expectation such as this, there will be a still increasing desire that God may dwell in our hearts without a rival; that there may not be room for anything but his glory within us: for the individual believer is a temple of the Holy Ghost."—W. H. Krause.

THURSDAY, JAN. 14.—LEVITICUS I.

We now approach the various offerings which were to be offered in sacrifice to God, and these may be briefly described as five in number; (1) the burnt offering (chap. i.); (2) the "meat" or (better as in R.V.) "meal offering" (chap. ii.); the peace offering (chap. iii).; the sin offering (chap. iv.); the trespass offering (chap. v.).

3.—If his offering be a burnt sacrifice.—Better rendered in R.V., "burnt offering." The Hebrew word is "olah," that which ascends, and the same offering is sometimes called "ishsheh," that which is burnt; it is also occasionally called "kaleel," that which is whole, because the whole victim was given to the altar. It seems, coming first as it does, to present to us in type the most general aspect of the work of the Lord Jesus Christ, that in which He presented Himself "wholly" to God, and wherein his whole offering and sacrifice of Himself ascended up to God "as a sweet smelling savour" (Eph. iv. 1), or as it is ver. 9, "of a sweet savour unto the Lord." The subsequent offerings are, as it were, aspects in detail of that which is here presented in its most general features.

3.—Of his own voluntary will.—"Most interpreters, ancient and modern, give it the meaning 'for his acceptance;' that is, that he may be accepted."—Sp. Com. It is so translated in R.V., and connected with the words which follow, "that he may be accepted before the Lord." This is the order in the Hebrew, and confirms the meaning now generally adopted.

4.—And he shall put his hand upon the head o the burnt offering.—The Hebrew word for "put implies resting, so it is rightly rendered by R.V "lay." The action itself is a striking type of faith which rests on the offering provided, and thereby according to God's appointment, transfers th responsibility and guilt to Him.

"The traditional and orthodox view which ha prevailed from time immemorial, and was adopte alike by the Rabbins and the fathers of the Church was that the laying on of hands was expressive o the transfer of sin and guilt from the perso sacrificing to the animal sacrified."—Kurtz.

FRIDAY, JAN. 15.—LEVITICUS II.

The "meat," or, as it is now better expresse in the Revised Version, "meal offering," which forms the subject of this chapter, typifies th perfect manhood of the Lord Jesus. "The shadow of this Perfect Man passes before us in the 'fine flour' which formed the basis of the meat-offering. There was not so much as a single coars grain. There was nothing uneven — nothing unequal—nothing rough to the touch. No matte what pressure came from without there was alway an even surface. He was never ruffled by any circumstance, or set of circumstances. He wa never taken by surprise; never disappointed. Com what might, He always met it in that perfec evenness which is so strikingly typified by 'fin flour.'"—C. H. M.

"Three kinds of minchah (meat or meal offering) are here mentioned: (1) fine flour, with frankincense, verses 1—3; (2) cakes and wafers of fine flour, verses 4—8; (3) parched grains of the first gathered corn, with frankincense, verses 14—16. Of each of them a small portion was burnt upon the altar for a memorial, and the remainder was given to the priests."—Sp. Com.

12.—As for the oblation of the firstfruits, &c.—This was an exceptional form of the meal offering, for it was "not to be burnt on the altar for a sweet savour." "When the firstfruits were offered two cakes were offered, baked with leaven, but not for a sweet savour (Lev. xxiii. 17), and what were these firstfruits? The Church sanctified by the Holy Ghost. We are, says James, 'a kind of firstfruits of his creatures.' It will be seen (Lev. xxiii.) that the first of the fruits was offered without leaven. He rose without seeing corruption, with this no sin offering was offered; but with the leavened cakes, which represented the Church sanctified by the Holy Ghost to God, but still living in corrupted human nature, a sin offering was offered."—J. N. D.

SATURDAY, JAN. 16.—LEVITICUS III.

The subject of this chapter is the peace offering. "In comparing the peace offering with the burnt offering, we find that the threefold action of 'flaying,' 'cutting it into pieces,' and 'washing the inwards and legs,' is entirely omitted; and this is quite in character. In the burnt offering, as we have seen, we find Christ offering Himself to, and accepted by, God; and hence the completeness of his self-surrender, and also the searching process to which He submitted Himself had to be typified. In the peace offering the leading thought is the communion of the worshipper. It is not Christ as enjoyed exclusively by God, but as enjoyed by the worshipper in communion with God. Therefore it is that the whole line of action is less intense. No heart, be its love ever so elevated, could possibly rise to the height of Christ's devotedness to God, or of God's acceptance of Christ. This type we have in the burnt offering, in which alone we observe the threefold action above referred to."—C. H. M. To understand aright the whole typical teaching of the peace offering, it is necessary to look at chap. vii. 11—38, where supplemental details are added. There we find that three parties respectively partook of the offering: (1) God, before whom it ascended from off the altar as a sweet savour; (2) the priest, to whom certain portions of the offering were allotted; (3) the worshipper (vii. 15), upon whom it was enjoined that "it shall be eaten the same day that he offereth his sacrifice," evidently to keep in close connection the offering to God and the fellowship allowed to the worshipper with God. Thus the peace-offering symbolised that "our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ;" or, in other words, that Christ, by "his one oblation of Himself once offered," provides food for God, for Himself as Priest, and for his people as worshippers.

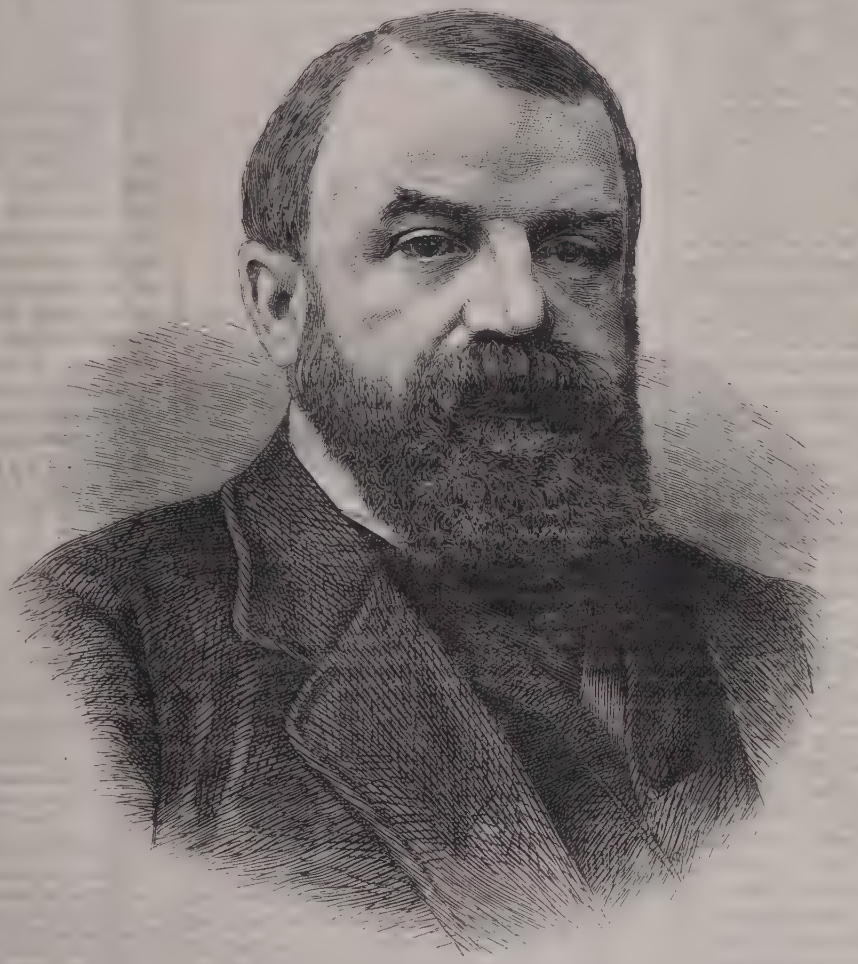
MR. D. L. MOODY.

ONE day in 1867 a plain, sturdy, and stoutly-built young man came into our office in Ludgate-hill. He was one of those rare men who transact their business, and go about their business, so as to give you time to finish your business. But he was more than a man of business. He was about the Lord's business, and a very little intercourse was enough to prove that he was a thoroughly earnest and devoted servant of Christ, whose one purpose was to qualify himself as a man of God, throughly furnished unto all good works. He had heard of us through The Revival, and we were, so far as we remember, the first on whom he called in London.

He soon found his way to the Y.M.C.A. at Aldersgate-street, and his experiences of Gospel work in Chicago were told with a freshness and vigour which captivated all who heard his addresses. Nothing which D. L. Moody (for it was he) has spoken since then, has exceeded in thrilling interest the descriptions to which we listened, of the perfectly unique and original way in which he pursued his reclamatory efforts among the rough and lawless children of that western city.



DWIGHT LYMAN MOODY was born on a farm, near Northfield, Massachusetts, on Feb. 5, 1837. The homestead was on a mountain side in a region picturesque and beautiful, but in which nature yields scanty nourishment, even to hard workers. The farm was mortgaged, and the father died when Dwight was four years old, leaving the widow weighted with the responsibility of a large family, every member of which felt the necessity of personal exertion and self-denial. The future evangelist thus learned experimentally to bear the yoke in his youth, and succeeding years have proved that this was good for him. By bodily toil he obtained physical vigour, and stored up nervous energy; he was thus prepared for the gigantic labours he has since accomplished.

His mother was a representative New England woman, with a stern sense of duty, ready to do the next thing, and with spirit and energy which qualified her for the responsibilites involved in the training of her family.

The boy who was to achieve such world-wide fame as an evangelist had fair opportunities of education, but his intense physical activity made study in the schoolroom irksome, and he passed out of childhood singularly unequipped with such knowledge as he might have attained at school. He was, however, a born leader, and no one will be surprised to learn that his companions recognised their chief, and naturally fell into line and obeyed his commands. It may be that the very fact of his educational disadvantages, as well as the hard life of his early years, helped to develop that indomitable perseverance which throughout his remarkable career has allowed no obstacle to obstruct his way. By his early difficulties God was girding and guiding him when he knew it not.

Those familiar with Mr. Moody's preaching remember his frequent allusions, especially in earlier years, to his elder brother, who left home in his youth, and was not heard of for many years. It nourished the strong pathetic element in his nature to see his mother suffering under the double bereavement, and mourning over her dead husband and her absent son.

In the spring of 1854, confident and self-reliant, Dwight left home, and found employment in the boot and shoe store of an uncle in Boston, a man of strict integrity and Christian character. Here he soon displayed the same energy and force of character that had given him the lead among the lads of his own township. His early privations had taught him to regard life as an unceasing warfare, so that from the first he expected an uphill path, and braced himself to overcome all obstacles.

His uncle was a member of the Congregational Church of which Dr. Kirk was pastor, and here the nephew was expected to attend, very much to his advantage all through his after life. His Sunday-school teacher, Mr. Kimball, took a deep and kindly interest in him, and the assiduous and patient labour of this good man was the means of leading his young scholar to Christ. But the boy's want of acquaintance with scriptural truth was such that he was kept as a learner for many months before being admitted to the fellowship of the Church.

There was no precocity, we are told, nothing startling or even promising in his early Christian course. But he had a courage that carried him forward in spite of his defects, and an aspiration that led him to rise above circumstances, and to strive for excellence. The revival spirit of the church and of its earnest pastor created in him a zeal which lay as a smouldering fire within. No work, however, was laid out for him into which he could throw his rugged energies, and he was not content. No wonder that he left the city of culture and refinement, and became, in his twentieth year, one of the thousands of enterprising and aspiring men who forsook the overcrowded East, and sought and found scope for his energy in Chicago, the rising metropolis of the North-west. Many of his compeers found here a short road to ruin, but he, and others like him, maintained their integrity, and did exploits.

He had made his mark as a man of business at Boston; at Chicago in secular occupations he proved himself capable and trustworthy. In religious work he was not long in finding the sphere for his energy and zeal which he had not found in Boston. With characteristic daring and courage he plunged into the dark places, the heathenish regions which new cities no less than the old, contain. He literally fought his way through with all-conquering persistence, till he saw these districts at least, in some degree, renovated by the Gospel of the grace of God.

His first experience was on this wise. "One Sunday he sought out a mission-school, and offered his services as a teacher. He was informed that the school had a full supply of teachers, but if he would gather a class he might have room to teach them. Next Sabbath he appeared with eighteen boys, and place was found for his rough and and raw recruits. Thus he solved the problem of how to reach the masses—'Go for them.'"

Other and congenial spirits soon gathered round him, and formed a mission in the New Market Hall, which became a great power for good. The ignorant and uncultured boy had developed into the energetic Christian man soon to become the pioneer evangelist, and in Chicago it was very evident that the uneducated training of his early years was God's own education for the work which He had for him to do.

There was too much of "Young America" about him for the Church with which he first connected himself. He began to take a deep interest in the Young Men's Christian Association, and carried his young Americanism into that. He was soon engaged to look after its spiritual wants; he slept in the rooms, and kept them in order, and, after doing the manual labour, led the noon prayer-meeting, and drew large crowds to the service. He was chosen President of the Association, after holding other offices, and obtained the means to build a hall, named from the chief contributor, "Farwell Hall."

About this time he took possession of an old shanty, an abandoned beer saloon, in a neighbourhood where other saloons were in full blast, surrounded by desperate men, abandoned women, neglected and elfish children. Here was another preparation class for the future evangelist. When, years after, a room full of experienced and hard-headed Scotch ministers sat round Mr. Moody, and, with the utmost docility, received from him instructions and directions as to the arrangement and management of great meetings, he was calling into exercise the wisdom he had gained in the drinking and dancing saloon, which he had converted into a house of God.

A very bad boy used to come to the door and make a fearful noise while Moody would be addressing his young hearers. Getting tired of this, he one evening stopped short in his work, gave out a hymn, and, while the school was singing it, he went for that disturbing boy, caught him after a chase of some quarter of a mile, gave him a summary and exemplary castigation, and returned panting from his run, but in time to proceed with his discourse.

In these very early days, Mr. Reynolds, of Peoria, a large merchant, and a mighty man in Sunday-school work, records that, going in a little late one evening, he saw a man standing up with a few tallow candles around him, holding a negro boy, and trying to teach him the story of the Prodigal Son. Many of the words he could not make out and had to skip. "I thought if the Lord can use such an instrument as that for his work it will be wonderful. After the meeting was over, Mr. Moody said to me, 'Reynolds, I have only got one talent; I have no education, but I love the Lord Jesus Christ, and I want to do something for Him, and I want you to pray for me.' I have never ceased from that day to this to pray for that devoted Christian soldier. I have watched him since, had counsel with him, and know him thoroughly, and, for consistent walk and conversation, I have not known his fellow."

In the dark days of the war Mr. Moody threw himself into the camps near home, and there preached the Gospel, and won souls. He was president of the Chicago branch of the Christian Commission, of which the venerable George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, was president in chief, and whose name is fragrant in all lands. Mr. Moody illustrates many of his sermons with anecdotes from the terrible and pathetic experiences which he gained at the front in that long and deadly struggle.

In 1862 Mr. Moody was married to Miss Emma C. Revell, a lady known to many of our readers, and of whom we will only say that she has been a true helpmeet for her husband. Such marriages are made in heaven. They are not only "in the Lord" in the sense that both are Christians, but that God has chosen each for each. Their children have become familiar to the world by Mr. Moody's illustrations drawn from his recollections of "Emma," "Willie," and "little Paul." The two former are now grown up, and it may be that the youngest is being prepared to tread in the footsteps of his father, and of his greater namesake, as a preacher of Jesus Christ.

I have gathered the foregoing facts from Dr. Goodspeed and other sources, as well as from my own recollection. I have not touched upon the subsequent visits of Mr. Moody to this country in company with Mr. Sankey, nor of their work in America, because we have kept our readers informed in these respects from week to week. I cannot, however, close this very sketchy sketch without alluding to the educational establishments for young men and women which would have been no mean monument to the memory of any man, if he had done little of a public character beside. But in Chicago and many other American cities; in London, Liverpool, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dublin, and elsewhere in this country, great piles of building bear witness to Mr. Moody's interest in the places where he labours, and to his power of moving other men to a generosity kindred to his own. The current of his unselfish and beneficent nature, however, flowed most strongly toward his native New England home.

We have recently given descriptive articles with illustrations of some of the school-buildings, at Northfield for girls, and at Mount Hermon for boys (Nos. for June 18 and Oct. 22, 1885); therefore I need not particularise them here, further than to say that they are institutions of more than local or even of national interest: they are cosmopolitan in their constitution, and will be eternal in their results. Youths and maidens of many nationalities have already been, and others are now being, educated there, with the design of training them to become God's messengers to the ends of the earth, but especially to their own nations.

There have been men who, starting as evangelists or missionaries, have relinquished the preaching of the Gospel themselves to become directors of others, and that, perhaps, was God's way for them; but Mr. Moody is occupying an ever-widening sphere of personal work, while superintending and extending his missionary training schools at home.

In a recent letter he tells me that in the last ten and a half years he has spent £60,000 on these buildings. He thought, a few years ago, that large sums of money would be given to colleges and schools in America, and that if he could get the institutions, on which his heart was set, well started, legacies would be left for them, and he would thus gain influence over young men and women, who would be a power after he was gone. It was a noble desire, and it will have its recompense, when he shall rest from his labours, and his works shall follow him.

He has endeavoured by day and night to accomplish this. I am glad to know that several friends have already decided to leave large amounts by will, so that Mr. Moody is encouraged to hope the schools will be well looked after in the future. But the trying time is now. It requires 30,000 to 40,000 dollars (£6000 to £8000) to get the schools into good running order. Last week we published "A Card" from Mr. Moody, setting forth this need. The following is a circular which he lately issued, to the same effect;—

> May I ask your attention to the Mount Hermon School at Northfield. Our object in this school is to train and educate young men who have natural ability, but whose opportunities for education have been limited; and especially young men of this class who look forward to Christian work, thus filling a gap, and not coming at all into competition with other schools. I am convinced that if the lower classes of our cities are ever to be reached for Christ it must be through the agency of men trained specially, not perhaps in classical education, but in methods of work and in knowledge of the Bible. We need in our American cities more work like that of Mr. McAll in Paris, led by earnest and consecrated men who will hold meetings as many evenings a week as the theatres and saloons are open, and thus win these threatening and dangerous classes to the Lord Jesus Christ. I earnestly desire to reach as many of these young men as possible and train them for evangelists, city missionaries, secretaries of Y.M.C.A.'s, &c., giving them a good English education and such additional training as may be necessary for the work.
> We have already in attendance young men, some of them very promising, gathered from almost all parts of the world—England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, Austria, Armenia, Greece, and Japan. There are about one hundred now in school, but there is such a demand that we have begun the erection of a dormitory which will give a home to two hundred more, and a kitchen and dining-room where the whole three hundred can be accommodated. We have already a large hall containing library, museum, laboratories, lecture and class-rooms, so that the only additional expense will be for dormitory and dining-hall. The cost of these two buildings will be about 100,000 dollars. Of this amount I have already 80,000 dollars. If I can raise 20,000 dollars at once I can have three hundred young men on the ground and in training within twelve months. I know it is a hard time to raise money, but building material and labour are very cheap now, and the need urgent. "The King's business requires haste."* We should be happy to have you visit Northfield and see with your own eyes the work we are trying to do. And if, either with or without the personal visit, the Lord puts it into your heart to do anything for us we shall be very grateful to Him and to you.

Very truly yours,
Northfield, Mass. D. L. Moody.

It would be somewhat of an impertinence for me to say more in urging the need of these grand and growing institutions; for Mr. Moody holds as high a place in the esteem and affection of thousands as he does in mine; these are English, and Scotch, and Irish, and Welsh, and Indian, and Australian schools, as much as they are American, and a lift just now would, I am sure, relieve our friend of a burden, deliverance from which would be felt beneficially in every department of his multiform engagements.

Our portrait of Mr. Moody has been engraved from a photograph taken some three years ago. I know his disinclination that it should appear, but I believe he will be reconciled if this article should tend, as I trust it will, to the consolidation and permanence of these schools for young men and women, in whom the work his Lord has given him to do will live and multiply when he shall have entered into rest.

NATIONAL, SOCIAL, & PERSONAL SINS.

By Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES.

An Address at Brixton during the Week of Prayer.

FOR the first time in the history of this ancient country, we are all directly and individually responsible for our national sins, as no country ever was before. In the last resort, the citizens of the country in these days control the policy of Governments, and all the international action of our vast Empire. There was a time when we had rulers and governors placed over us, and all we could do was to carry out the injunction of the Apostle Paul, "Pray for those in authority." We are now in authority ourselves, and one of the most sacred, difficult, and responsible duties ever given by God to any human being is the duty which English citizens discharge during a general election. We have been guilty of great national sins in the past, and we shall never avoid them in the future unless we honestly acknowledge them.

One of our greatest sins as a nation has been the outrageous way in which we have treated Ireland during the last two hundred years. That is one of the darkest blots on the national escutcheon. We English people are reaping the richly deserved harvest of our forefathers' action with regard to the sister country. It is a great pity that the majority of the people of this country do not really know how wickedly Ireland has been treated during the two last centuries. If they did, they would understand a great many things better than they do. A very striking letter appeared in The Pall Mall Gazette, from Professor Ruskin, in which he said the Irish were an affectionate people, and they could not be governed on scientific principles by heartless people. We shall not effect much good with that sensitive race until we win their hearts. There is no people in the world more passionately devoted to those in whom they have confidence; and if we in this country were only to act like Christians they would have confidence in us. That is the root of the Irish difficulty. The reprehensible way in which The Times wrote the other day is calculated to drive every Irishman into direct hostility to England. We must put ourselves in the place of our Irish fellow-citizens, and we must understand that the insolent tone of the English newspapers, and the extremely offensive way in which even Punch always refers to Irishmen, are considerations which have caused illwill and bitterness in the Irish Press. When a man loses his temper he becomes very unreasonable; and when a nation loses its temper, it multiplies unreasoning indefinitely. As Christians we ought to bless those that curse us, turning away wrath with a soft answer, not by pouring forth bitter scorn, contempt, and threats of violence, and assuming that a whole nation is animated by diabolical wickedness. Evil must be overcome with good. Coals of fire must be put on their head. It is perfectly useless for us to say our prayers, receive the Sacrament, and pretend to be a Christian nation, unless we are prepared to treat the Irish people in the way in which Christ would treat them if He were still on the earth.

Above all, we ought to avoid race hatred and religious hatred. We should not be guilty of the absurd supposition that because we are Englishmen we are any better than Irishmen as such. The Irish have qualities in which we are painfully deficient, while the English possess qualities which the Irish lack; so that we get nearer perfection by a combination of the qualities of both. To say, further, that we must keep the Irish down by brute force, because they are Roman Catholics, is utterly opposed to the teaching of Jesus Christ. When our Lord wanted to set forth a sublime example of humanity, He chose as the model, not the orthodox Levite, but the schismatic Samaritan. Only let us humble ourselves, because of the wrong we have done to Ireland; instead of answering fierce language with fierce language, let us cry: "God have mercy upon us." Let us do all we can to induce our fellow-citizens on the other side of the Channel to believe in the sincerity of our repentance; then many difficulties will disappear. A beginning must be made on our side, because we have been greatly in the wrong. We must stand before the Irish people in a penitent mood, and promise to behave better in the future. If the House of Commons were to pass a solemn resolution to that effect, it would do about the most beautiful thing it has ever done, except when it released the West African slaves.

There are other national sins to be repented of. In modern times the most terrible crime of which this country has been guilty is the opium war with China. How wicked to pretend that we were Christian when we forced opium upon China, and through that traffic murdered the Chinese by wholesale! Yet there are in these days men who have the effrontery to rise in the House of Commons, and say, "How are we to keep up our Indian revenue, unless we maintain the opium traffic?" If, as a Christian nation, we put our faith in God, and not in the devil, some other means of sustaining revenue will be discovered, depend upon it, than of wholesale sacrifice of human life by the odious traffic thus fostered by this country.

We are also verily guilty, as a nation, in maintaining the liquor traffic at the corner of every street. Although we know this to be a gigantic national curse, it seemed that Christians at the General Election had not enough religion left to insist that in the towns public-houses should be closed on Sunday, and that the number should, at any rate, be greatly reduced on Monday, even though it may be necessary to maintain the traffic to some extent. Another national sin is in still maintaining on our Statute-book the enactments which assert that vice is a necessity for man—enactments which sanction and promote the social evil. I hope, however, that in the session of Parliament so close at hand, one of the most wicked Acts ever placed on the Statute-book of the realm will be swept away.

As to social sins, the greatest is drunkenness; and the next, social vice, of the more diabolical phases of which we have had awful revelations of late, revelations which fell greatly short of the truth. Wicked men and the daily Press combined to try and persuade the people that the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette exaggerated the facts. He did nothing of the kind. The Government Blue-book contains far more awful facts than Mr. Stead published. Before this terrible evil, what a pitiable spectacle we present. What have we done to stop it? What is the use of a Christianity that does not stop it?

Of personal sins there is a painful catalogue. One of them is a want of appreciation of the love of Christ. No man is in a healthy spiritual state unless every Christian duty is for him transfigured into a Christian privilege. If any professed Christian finds that Christ's yoke is irksome and his burden heavy, instead of easy and light, most assuredly it arises from the fact that he has not yet realised the unspeakable sweetness and tenderness of the love of Christ. Hardness of heart is another personal sin to be confessed. A significant fact in the life of our Lord was that wherever his eyes fell on a multitude, He had compassion on them. He was so full of the most tender sympathy with everybody, that, whenever He saw a crowd, He loved them. He was ready to weep over them; He entered into all their doubts, and fears, and difficulties. He did not despise any of them because they were ugly, or because they were old, or because there was anything repulsive about them, or because they were ignorant or degraded. He loved them all. Hardness of heart is now found even in an officer of a Christian church. It is to be found in the pulpit, as well as in the pew. How different this from the tender sympathy of Jesus Christ. Unfaithfulness and slothfulness in service have also to be repented of. The greatest peril of the churches is downright laziness. As Christians we have also to repent of false shame in confessing the name of Christ before men, and especially among our own class and kindred. There has been a great deal of discussion about what is called "the numerical defeat of Christianity." The explanation is no doubt found here. The supreme duty of every Christian is to be a witness for Christ. That is the crowning and unanswerable evidence of Christianity—the very evidence ignored by agnostics, when they write to the monthly reviews.

Then, there is a want of zeal in missionary work. This is manifested at once by the fact that whereas £125,000,000 are annually spent in strong drink, all our missionary societies put together, including the great Bible Society, do not succeed in getting more than £1,000,000 sterling. These societies are all languishing. The Notices of the Wesleyan Missionary Society show that the work of God is being hindered by the timorous policy of retrenchment. Yet, never was such an opportunity for usefulness as now. The field is white unto harvest, but work is hindered for want of money; or rather, for want of religion. "Brotherly kindness and charity" come next. Ah! that is one supreme want. In olden times the language held was, "See how these Christians love one another." What does more than anything else for the spread of Christianity is the way in which caste is destroyed, and with it all feeling of national antipathy. When Christianity becomes a true brotherhood, and when Christians all love one another, they will be absolutely irresistible: they will bring on the Millennium directly. Let us as professed Christians make a clean breast of it, and see that everything in our private and public life is squared with the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount.

OLD SOUTHGATE.—Much blessing has been the result of Mr. C. Wickerson's labours at Southgate during the year just closed; part of this was witnessed on a recent Sunday evening in Pastor D. Gracey's Chapel, New Southgate, in a baptism of a number of believers; others have given their names as candidates for baptism. A Sunday-school was opened on January 3, a hundred children having promised to attend.

* Just as we go to press a letter comes to hand from Mr. Moody, dated Dec. 30, stating that the dormitory and dining-room are finished, and the cost of erection completely subscribed. The furnishing and other expenses, however, will yet have to be provided.

THE LLANBERIS "LOCK-OUT."

IN one of the loveliest spots in North Wales there has been, for some nine weeks, the painful and unusual spectacle (to which we briefly alluded last week) of nearly two thousand honest and industrious men "locked out" of work. Described by the correspondent of one of our leading daily papers as "thrifty, sober, God-fearing, quarry folks," a description which will readily be endorsed by those who have resided in their midst, as we have done, these men are idle in consequence of one of those unfortunate trade disputes which, from time to time, are so potent in widening and deepening the already too wide gulf between capital and labour.

In this instance, the dispute is based not so much upon the question of wages, though that question is of course involved, but upon other, and perhaps higher ones. The men assert that there have been attempts to interfere with their political and religious freedom; that there has been a set purpose to oppress them, and to take from them their independence and cherished customs; and that want of capacity on the part of one of the managers endangers the lives of the work-people. Some of the charges have been denied by the Agent, and it is lamentable to see in the Hon. G. Vivian's reply a flippancy, which is not only unbecoming in the serious circumstances, but which is likely to embitter the quarrel.

The men have more than once temperately addressed the owner of the quarries, Mr. Assheton Smith, and offered to submit the dispute to arbitration, and have expressed their willingness to abide by the decision of the arbitrators on all points. Up to the present time this offer has been distinctly refused, and matters remain in a singularly unhappy position for the men and their families, who are living upon the little doles received from their union. As we suggested last week, there may possibly be grievances upon both sides; though it is hard to believe, from what we know of the Welsh quarrymen, whose sterling piety has become proverbial, that the employer's grievances are as serious as the Agent appears to make out. In any case it is to be deeply regretted that in a contest which must necessarily be an unequal one, as between a wealthy man and poor men, Mr. Assheton Smith cannot see his way to let the matter be settled by arbitration; if he himself is not prepared to end the difficulty in the spirit of the Master's injunction, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." The opportunity is a noble one for the exercise of Christ-like kindness and forbearance.

VICTORIA (PHILOSOPHICAL) INSTITUTE.—A large meeting of this Institute took place on Monday week, at the House of the Society of Arts, when a paper by Mr. Boscawen, on the Abramic Migration, and the light thrown thereon by recently discovered Assyrian Inscriptions was read. Mr. E. A. Budge read a communication from Professor Sayce, whose absence in Egypt had prevented his attendance. Professor Sayce offered a few criticisms on points of the paper, and then described, at some length, the results of his own investigation of the subject. Amongst other speakers were Mr. Budge and other Assyriologists. Reference was made to the urgent need of well-directed excavations in the great city mounds of Western Asia, especially in ancient Kharran, and also to the fact that English discovery in the East which had already been so rich in its results, had now been at a complete standstill for four years, by reason of our Government being unable to secure the firman from the Porte necessary for its continuance.

For the Young.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

THREE months ago, eighteen girls between the ages of eleven and seventeen, attending a well-known, old-established, private school here, agreed that in the prospect of their own expected enjoyment during the Christmas holidays they would try to make some others enjoy them also. They planned to get up a sale of work to be called "A School Girls' Bazaar," in aid of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. They were to work for it as much as possible, and also to solicit contributions from friends.

On December 16 the Bazaar was opened. The hall in which it was held was prettily decorated, the hire of this being kindly paid for by a friend. There were six large stalls, well furnished with pretty and useful things, and presided over by the girls. The hall was crowded, and the sum of over £25 was realised.

Considering that these girls were all working hard at lessons, and several of them preparing for the Christmas examination of the College of Preceptors, your readers will agree with me that this was indeed most commendable, and an example to be followed. X. Y. Z.

St. Helier's, Jersey, January 4.

THE STORY OF A SOLDIER.

The other day in the snow-storm, a man with one box went on board a large ship lying in the docks. I want your prayers for him—to follow him all the way over 6000 miles of blue sea, as far as South Africa. The voyage will last twenty days, and then, because Jesus rules the winds and waves, we may hope he will have reached the end of his journey in safety.

This man is one of the Lord's own soldiers. I must tell you his story. For seventeen years he had served his Queen and country, the greater part of the time being spent in India, where he received the Afghan medal. He tried to serve God also, as he thought. He became a total abstainer, which was a very good thing for him; he went to church regularly, and carefully obeyed regimental orders. No wonder that he was looked upon as a pattern soldier. But all this while he was making the great mistake of supposing that he could commend himself to God by his good works.

Eighteen months ago the Lord Jesus showed him his mistake. He heard at the Soldiers' Home, Cape Town, that his character was given in Rom. iii. 10: "There is none righteous, no not one." "There is no difference, for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." He believed what God said about him, and when he compared his own goodness with what God required he saw it was worthless. "I have been making a great mistake," he exclaimed; "I find I am a sinner, just like the worst." He was told that Jesus was God's gift to sinners, and that by accepting Him he would be saved, and made fit for God.

Soon after he heard Rev. Andrew Murray preach about taking a step out of self into Christ, and that when this is done Christ keeps us, separates us from sin, and does all for us. "This just turned my heart to the right about," said our soldier, "and made me so happy." Four months ago he was invalided from the Cape, and returned to England after eighteen years' absence. As the ship came into Portsmouth he looked at all the eager faces waiting to welcome home soldier sons and brothers. "There were none to welcome me," he said, "but I had Jesus."

The day came when he should get his discharge. He had earned four badges and a medal for good conduct, and a pension as well. On leaving Netley Hospital he felt his loneliness, but remembered his heavenly friend, and asked Him to take him safely to a Christian friend who waited in London to receive him. I must give you his own words: "I just asked Him to show me the way, and I had no trouble; and now I want to make haste back to the home at Cape Town to work for the Lord where He saved me. I have a good pension; I want no pay; I never wasted my money, and so I have enough to take me out, and pay for my passage."

Will you, dear young friends, who love Jesus, pray for our soldier, that he may be blessed in his work; and will you pray too that many more soldiers, who attend the Home in South Africa, may find out the mistake they are making in living without Christ? I wonder if you, after accepting God's gift, have given yourselves and all you have to Him; if you have, will you not, like our soldier, "make haste" to work for Jesus? M. S. OSBORN.

MR. HAMMOND IN CAMDEN TOWN.

DURING last week Mr. Hammond has been conducting services in the Camden Park-road Presbyterian Church, of which the Rev. R. M. Thornton is pastor. On the evening of Sunday week the church was crowded in every part. From conversations both with children and adults in subsequent inquiry meetings it is evident that many received blessing on that occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Thornton have gone into the work with great spirit; and many of the workers in the church have received fresh power for service.

At the close of some of the inquiry meetings, experience meetings have been held for workers and young converts. One young lad, in giving his experience, said that he came into the meeting on Sunday evening, and as the service proceeded his heart rebelled against the whole thing; but in the inquiry meeting, when a gentleman talked with him, he was led to see himself a sinner, and found Jesus as a present Saviour. Many others testified as to the blessings received. One Christian said "this week was the first time he had tried to point anxious souls to Christ;" another, an office-bearer, testified, "This is the happiest week I have spent in my life."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Jan. 17, John v. 36—47; Jan. 18, vi. 1—14; Jan. 19, vi. 15—27; Jan. 20, vi. 28—40; Jan. 21, vi. 41—58; Jan. 22, vi. 59—71; Jan. 23, vii. 1—13.

COTTAGE HOME FOR IRISH CHILDREN, KINGSTOWN.—The report just issued says: "The past year has been one of steady and continuous work, and may be regarded as the most prosperous and successful we have known." A plot of ground has been purchased in the immediate neighbourhood, for a new and larger cottage to cost £1250, toward which about £500 have been promised. Some particulars of children recently admitted are recorded, showing that they are selected from the deserving poor. During the year situations have been obtained for a large number of servants. The average number of children in the Home has been thirty-two, and the entire cost of each about £14. The hon. sec. is Miss Barrett, 6, De Vesci-terrace, Kingstown.

SOUTH LONDON MISSION.—Founded by the late Mr. William Carter, in 1861, this Mission continues to do good service under the management of Mr. Rowland Ashton. The last report says:—"Our annual missions to the unemployed and friendless were much blessed, one or two of the conversions being of a most striking character. The Sunday-school is well attended; visitation to the sick and poor has been accompanied with God's saving grace, many drunkards have been rescued by means of the Gospel Temperance Meetings, and numbers of women can trace their conversion to the Mothers' Meetings." The zealous worker who conducts the Band of Hope was formerly a barman in a large public-house in the neighbourhood. Mr. Ashton's address is Victoria Hall, 12, Lancaster-street, Borough-road, S.E. Recent repairs have cost over £300, which is a cause of much anxiety.

ADDRESSES IN LONDON DURING
The Week of Prayer.

MONDAY, JANUARY 4.

PRAISE AND THANKSGIVING.—For the Spirit of Prayer vouchsafed to us; for all the bounties of Providence; for God's long-suffering goodness in that He has not taken away his Holy Spirit from us on account of our little faith and many provocations; for his faithful promises in Christ Jesus; for continuing and multiplying opportunities of proclaiming his Gospel of grace; for the progress of Christian missions among Jews and Gentiles, and the free course given to the Word of the Lord, notwithstanding all the opposition of infidelity and abounding iniquity.

Archdeacon Richardson (Camberwell),

AT STEINWAY HALL.

PRAISE and thanksgiving! These two things are closely akin, but not exactly alike. They are in their right order, and in fitting relation to the subjects to be treated this morning, and through the week.

When a believing soul has reached the Psalmist's experience: "Goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life" (Ps. xxiii. 6), he touches the springs out of which both praising and thanksgiving take their rise. Thus the stimulus of praise is goodness. "Praise the Lord; for the Lord is good" (Ps. cxxxv. 3). When faith has found out what God really is; and when love has accepted what God graciously offers; and when hope is waiting for what God has promised to reveal, the result is praise. The holiest beings, nearest to the presence, must have more knowledge than we have now; and so they have the highest praise. With us now it is, "to the praise of the glory of his grace" (Eph. i. 6). With them now, and with us hereafter, it is "unto the praise of his glory" (ver. 14). "O ye servants of the Lord, praise the name of the Lord" (Ps. cxiii. 1). "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord."

But the stimulus of thanksgiving is mercy. "O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good, for his mercy endureth for ever. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so" (Ps. cvii. 1, 2). In this, we saved human beings have an experience which the unfallen angels have not. We shall sing the new song, of which the "strains upraised" are, "Thou hast redeemed us unto God by thy blood" (Rev. v. 9). The angels seem to listen; and they break out after our song into the great chorus in which all can join, "Worthy is the Lamb." The hole of the pit, the edge of the precipice, the darkness of the dungeon, are memories with us. And the upper walks of faith, the strong wing-feathers of grace, and the half-opened doors of heaven are realities to us. The consequence is giving of thanks: all the higher, because we were once so low; all the stronger because we have been raised so high; all the sweeter, because we have gone through so much.

Then the place of praise and thanksgiving is to be well chosen in our worship. If we had never prayed, nor had an answer to a prayer, or if we had never wept for sin and rejoiced over salvation, we might well begin with prayer and penitence. But we are here as the Lord's people; and our witness to the world and our utterance before our God, must be the expression of our gratitude in the form of thanksgiving.

Besides, when we have offered homage before the King, our hearts will be more in tune for worshipping. We are reverent with a holy joy, and happy by reason of a strong trust. Selfishness shrivels, when we trace all we have to sovereign grace. Human pride cannot survive in the heart that the Holy Ghost has filled with the knowledge of God's unearned and unbought mercy. There will be fervour in our prayers, because there has been reality in our praise. The key-note of the day may well tune all the services of the week, and find an echo, in the life below and the eternity above, from all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth.

Mr. J. H. Tritton (Banker),

AT CENTENARY HALL.

It was my privilege to speak on the first day of the Week of Prayer last year, the subject being "Praise," and we dwelt together on "Praise, the Portal of Prayer." A noble gateway truly it is! Yet in another view no gateway, but a glorious avenue, opening out in ever-lengthening vista towards the home above. In Isa. lx., the prophet, speaking of the privileges of the city of the Lord, says: "Thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night;" and in verse 18, "They shall call thy gates Praise."

How often we hear pressed upon us St. Paul's exhortation to the Thessalonians, "Pray without ceasing;" not so often the next verse, "In every thing give thanks." Surely the gate or avenue of praise should not be shut, any more than the gate of prayer. "At midnight will I rise to give thanks unto Thee." How many nowadays could say this? There are created beings who "rest not day nor night, saying, Holy, holy, holy." In what an atmosphere of praise must they dwell!

A narrow Alpine valley may be thick with a cold, white, wet fog, and as we ascend through the forest of pines it may be all gloomy and dark. Climb but high enough, and thou mayest suddenly pierce the fog, and a few more steps shall place thee above it. On the right hand, and on the left, stand the everlasting mountains, dazzling in their snowy garments, and glistening in the sun, fit emblems of the majesty, the purity, and the eternity of Jehovah. Beneath your feet is the sea of fog, through which from time to time comes up the sound of the beclouded world below. One who graphically describes the scene, says that while his own heart was filled with praise, he noticed a little bird dart upwards from the fog, and after singing awhile in the sunshine, descend again, and still its song of praise continued through the fog, which it was obliged to re-enter. May we this day, by the Spirit's power and blessing, thus rise for a brief space above the fog of city life, and catch a glimpse of sunlight from the Throne, returning to our round of duty, but with a new song in our hearts.

In that glorious upper atmosphere praise is continuous, for it is at home. We fail to trace its beginning. From the first Christmas Eve, when the angels sang in chorus "Glory to God!" past the vision vouchsafed to Isaiah of the cherubim, who cried "Holy, holy, holy!" to the creation, when "all the sons of God shouted for joy," we may go right back into eternity, for our "God inhabiteth the praises of eternity." Oh, wondrous thought, passing comprehension!

From such heights let us descend to the individual human heart. "Heal me, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved; for Thou art my Praise." Thou, the Triune Jehovah, who hast called me, saved me at such a cost, and promised to keep me, Thou my Praise! The personal and possessive pronoun is essential. The pearl may be encased in a rough shell, but it needs must have a shell, which must be uplifted from the ocean depth; and ere its beauty can be known the shell must be opened, and out of the dead oyster the pearl taken to grace the crown of royalty. So out of dead self shall praise arise.

Cathedrals may be built, and the wealth of art and music outpoured in them—all, as men fondly think, to the glory of God—but if the praise of the heart, taught by the Spirit, be absent, of what avail is it all?

Listen again to the Psalmist: "He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God (Ps. xl. 3). Praise here is an exotic; it can only thrive in the atmosphere of heaven. Would we rightly praise, as David, in a "new song"? Only as with him in the previous verse we can say, "He has set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings."

"How can we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" In the far-off land of darkness and the shadow of death no song of praise arises. Turn to Colossians: "delivered from the power of darkness" we can then "give thanks unto the Father."

We have touched on the continuity—the birthplace—the nature of praise: what can we say of the measure of praise? If to measure praise means coldly to calculate how much or how little will do, away with the thought! But fix the eye of faith on Christ. Behold Him, the Son of God, weeping in sympathy at the grave, weeping in sadness o'er the doomed city, and when too deep for tears his agony and bloody sweat, his cross and passion tell of love stronger than death, say, shall not his tears and our praises be inversely proportioned one to another?

Think, again, of the fulness which dwells in Him—fulness of pardon, fulness of peace, fulness of love, fulness of blessing, fulness of power, and fulness of joy; and shall not we each cry aloud, and say, "I will abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness." Christ is not only the measure, but the object of praise. Next to the Psalms we naturally turn to Revelation to learn of praise, and there we find the burden of it all is, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing." A sevenfold tribute; a perfect ascription of perfect praise.

Rev. H. E. Brooke

directed attention to Ps. l. 23, as in the margin of the Revised Version, literally from the Hebrew: "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth Me, and prepareth a way that I may show him the salvation of God." Praise prepares a way for God to show us his salvation by putting Him in his rightful place as Giver, and by putting us in our rightful place as receivers. Thereby we reverse our natural conception of things, which is that we are to give and God to receive. In offering praise we take the place of beggars; and Christ began his ministry by pronouncing the beggars in spirit to be blessed, "for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." It is a right spiritual instinct which commences a week of prayer with praise, for thereby we "make a way for God to show us his salvation."

HUMILIATION AND CONFESSION.—National sins; social sins: personal sins. Want of appreciation of the love of Christ; hardness of heart; unfaithfulness and slothfulness in service; false shame in confessing the name of Christ before men, and especially among our own class and kindred. Want of zeal in missionary work, both at home and abroad. Want of brotherly kindness and charity.

Dr. Henry Allon (Islington),

AT STEINWAY HALL.

FOUNDING his address on Psalm lxiii., the speaker called special attention to the significance, and suggestiveness, of the single idea—a passion for God. The Psalms were instinct with this religious passion: they gave expression to earnest religious experiences. Therefore, they gave voice to all our religious moods and feelings, notwithstanding the fact that these Psalms were written in the theological childhood of the world, when men's notions of God were very imperfect. Many sincerely religious men were incapable of great passion, were essentially tepid, self-controlled, and commonplace; but the men who had moulded the history of the Christian Church were men of great and overmastering passion, such as Elijah, Peter, Paul, Augustine, Luther—men who fought great moral battles, formed great purposes, did heroic things. Only such men could have written these Psalms. Man yearns for God, because he has capabilities and affections which only God can satisfy. This deep sense of God may be nurtured until it grows into a strong passion; just as every other passion became absorbing and masterful if ministered to. We were to nurture our affections for God, and minister to them, until they became the inspiration and the rule of all our actions. Such an inspiration goes far beyond the mere sense of religious duty, far beyond the mere feeling of religious self-interest, the mere doing of religious things, the mere reasonings of theology. For the intelligence and strength of all religious life, there must not only be strong intellectual conviction, and a deep sense of what is right, but a devout heart that loves as well as knows. The measure of our desire for God is the measure of our religious life. Let this passion for God be strong within us, and all the blessedness of the religious life will be fully realised.

Rev. Newman Hall

presided at the noon meeting in Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, and delivered an address on the privilege of entering the new year in covenant with God. It is infinite condescension in Him to enter on any agreement with a sinful creature; it is throughout a covenant of grace. God promises conditionally on man's faith, which included obedience. He bestows forgiveness which we on our part accept—i.e., we repent and believe. He promises to rule and guide, we engage to obey and follow. He undertakes to be our Father, we to "come out from the world and be separate;" accepting his adoption and acting as his children.

Such covenant is made seriously, deliberately, willingly; it is signed and sealed with prayer; it is avowed in our profession; it is witnessed by our fellow-men, by angels, and by God. When made it is obligatory. With God it is an "everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure." By ourselves it should be a contract never to be broken. Pardon is offered to all men on condition of repentance; but every other promise is to those alone who are in covenant with God by repentance and faith. Unless reconciled to God we cannot claim covenant mercies. All who do accept his grace through "the Mediator of the new covenant," and abide in that covenant, may claim all its promised blessings.

Let the new year be entered on with penitence that the covenant has not been better observed on our part, with a holy resolve by Divine help to keep it, and with humble assurance that its promised benefits are ours. An earnest appeal was made to the unconverted to say, with Hezekiah, "It is in my heart to make a covenant with the God of Israel."

Rev. C. Moinet (Kensington),

AT EXETER HALL.

The subject appointed for our consideration to-day is a large one, the confession of sin and the humiliation with which such confession should ever be combined. Perhaps it will conduce to clearness if I treat the subject as divided into two branches: (1) The sins that are characteristic of the community generally; and (2) those that are special to the Church of Christ.

As to (1). Recent events suggest how deeply party spirit with its attendant evils has entered into the heart of our national life. Charity, fairness of judgment, even courtesy, are forgotten when we enter the arena of political conflict. The worst motives are imputed by the rival parties to one another, and no interpretation of his conduct is too sinister if it can only damage or blacken an opponent. Patriotism, equity, truth, are forgotten if a party gain can only be secured. The end is held to justify the means. The same narrow and selfish spirit is carried into our dealings with foreign countries. We ascribe to them motives we should repudiate with scorn were they applied to ourselves. We alone are fair, all others are false. It would be absurd to act towards them as we should like them to act towards us. These things ought not so to be. Power will not justify injustice, or make right wrong. That your neighbours differ from you is no excuse for your forgetting the charity that thinketh no evil.

Again, how deadly are the social sins which we have to deplore. We have been startled by revelations of impurity that filled us with horror and dismay. The spirit of greed and selfishness complicates the relations of capital and labour. The condition of the poor is as deplorable as ever. The rich are as much absorbed in the pursuit of pleasure, and after being roused for a little have relapsed into the old indifference. They are content the deluge should come, if it only comes after them.

But remember the root of all this is personal sin, sin in the heart. Legislation can do much if wisely directed, but a new heart will do infinitely more. We must begin with the units. Thus we shall reach the masses. God began with Abraham in Old Testament times. He advanced from the individual to the nation, and not vice versâ. Christ adopted the same plan. He chose twelve Apostles. He impressed Himself upon them. He lodged the truth about Himself deeply in their hearts, and on the foundation of the Apostles rose the fabric of the Church.

Let us aim at the salvation of the individual soul, at bringing the Gospel home to men one by one. It is only as the truth is received into the heart, as Christ is embraced, followed, adored by each separate man and woman amongst us, that the kingdom of God will come.

(2) I pass now to the sins that are more special to the Church of Christ. Here too we have much narrowness and party spirit. We shut ourselves up in our formulas, and we imagine we have the whole truth. We imagine that to consider and patiently study our neighbour's position implies a surrender of our own. Some never come to understand one another. Christ is the truth. We must attach ourselves to a person, not to a formula. He will lead us into all truth; the formula will detain us prisoners within itself. Is it not this that accounts for much of the coldness and indifference that obtain among brethren? We think so much of the points wherein we differ. We are taken up with so many things, instead of with Christ. We forget the supreme loyalty which we owe to Him.

Now this also affects our service. It narrows its range. It lowers its aim. It robs it of much of the joy and energy that otherwise would stream into it. How much is lost through rivalry, want of co-operation, inconsiderate pushing of our own pet denominational schemes. How much would be gained by our working simply for Christ, following where He leads, consulting solely the interests of his kingdom. Have we not need to bewail our want of single-eyed devotion, our slowness to confess Him before men, our want of zeal in spreading abroad the knowledge of his name at home and in heathen lands.

What is the real root of it? Is it not what the Apostle alludes to when he says, "Beware of an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God"? The root of it lies in unbelief. This withdraws us from God. It separates us from Christ. It brings us down into formalism and all its evils. Depart from the living God, and there is only death. What is the cure? Drawing nearer to Christ. Trusting in Him. Considering Him. When we consider Him, then we shall consider one another, to provoke to love and to good works. The love of Christ will constrain us. And with his light shining in our soul, the darkness will flee away.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 6.

The Church and the Family.—That the Church of Christ may be more united in the bonds of faith and love; that, holding fast the Head, it may grow with the increase of God; that it may be delivered from false apostles and wolves in sheep's clothing: that Christ may be all in all in its teaching; and that the grace and power of the Holy Spirit may rest more and more on Christian families, on all engaged in the training and education of the young, on Sunday-schools, and on Christian Associations of young men and young women.

Rev. C. B. Symes (Kensington),

AT STEINWAY HALL.

HE divided his address into two of the topics of the day: (1) with reference to the unity of the Church of God, and (2) to the spiritual interests of the young. The unity of the Church is one of the thoughts upon which, in all the intensity of his nature, our Lord seemed to concentrate his attention in his last hours upon earth. Therefore, the unity of the Church, which He seemed to forecast, with the influence it would exert through all time, is a matter of great interest to every Christian, and a subject of earnest prayer. Christians, however, have been pleading for, and sometimes striving to realise, a kind of union which our Lord never meant. The unity of the Church of God is to be unity like that between the Father and the Son. There is to be unity of nature, expounded by Christ when He speaks of Himself as the Vine and of us as the branches. The branches, though dissimilar in many respects, all possess the same kind of life coursing through them. So, through the whole Church of God there must be, and there is, the same Divine life. If there be not that life it is no part of the real Church of God, but only part of some outward organisation. In the unity of the Church all true Christians rejoice; it is not something in the far distance, but a fact to be recognised. This life of the Holy Spirit passing through all believers in Christ is the fundamental principle of the Evangelical Alliance. If believers are concentrated upon the same purpose of redeeming men and establishing the kingdom of God, there is a real, substantial unity between them. Such a unity is compatible with great variety of judgment and opinion, and demands no repression of personal conviction.

With regard to the spiritual interests of the young, the struggle for material life becomes harder with every generation, so the great battle of faith becomes keener with every passing age. There are intellectual and moral influences in active exercise to-day of which parents were wholly ignorant in their early years. This calls for the utmost Christian sympathy with the young. Nor is this all. As our children's intellects are opening to the culture of the present age, we should try and look at truth and at life from their standpoint. We ask them to do an impossibility if we desire them to look at things from our standpoint. They have not had our experience and thought to enable them to respond to the demand. Every individual nature has to fight its own battles, and our children cannot accept the conclusions of our warfare, whether in regard to religious doctrine or to the practical problems of the day, which are so perplexing to young minds.

That, after all, is but the human element. Human wisdom and prudence are very needful, but the illumination of the Holy Spirit is necessary to guide the young in forming their convictions: having formed them by personal communion with God, they may cherish them unwaveringly by his confirming grace.

Rev. J. R. Wood (Holloway),

AT CENTENARY HALL.

The subject selected for prayer to-day is equal in importance to any on the list. It creates an amount of interest quite peculiar; for the family and the Church are God's own institutions; their origin can be traced to the throne, and they bear the seal and impress of the Godhead. The family is the image of the Church; the Church is the "image of the Son," and the Son is "the very image of the Father's substance." All the elements of a most vital interest are here. Even the personal element is not lacking; none of our associations are closer or more endearing than those we form with the Church and the home!

In regard to both, then, we may use the plea of the Psalmist: "Forsake not the work of thine own hands." And our praying power will be engaged more earnestly, if we remember the privileges of the Church, the possibilities of the family, and the promises of God in relation to both.

The Privileges of the Church, the great points in her charter, make firm ground for the foot of the suppliant. Here, surely, we may stand and plead. The Church was "chosen in Christ Jesus." "He loved the Church, and gave Himself for it." She is "purchased with his own blood." She is the Body of Christ; and Christ is her Head; the Bride of Christ, and He cherishes her! No relations could be more intimate, no ties more sacred. The mission with which she is entrusted is worthy of her "high calling." Among things that are seen, she is "the salt of the earth," and "the light of the world," while beyond things seen, "the principalities and powers in heavenly places," learn through her the "manifold wisdom of God." She is the organ of Christ's life, and the sphere in which He finds his glory. Hence, to despise the Church, or to persecute the Church, is to be guilty of a capital offence. Paul never could forget that he had committed this crime.

When we pray for the Church of Christ—the whole body of believers throughout the world—we pray in the direct line of this purpose and love, this power and glory. We pray that she may "hold fast the Head," that her members may be more closely united with each other—that the body may "grow with the increase of God," and be favoured with a devoted ministry and a pure Gospel; and we know we are asking for the things which are well pleasing in his sight. We are praying with wind and tide in our favour; we are asking for blessings set down in the Church's charter of privilege; secured by the will of God, and the passion of Jesus Christ. The Church has a long history behind her now; and it is mainly made up of answers to such prayers as we present to-day.

The Possibilities of the Family, too—of every family—may well stir our hearts, as we take up our second theme. They exist for good or for evil; and appeal to our hopes and our fears. What a blessing a converted son or daughter may be! In the tribe of Levi a child was born, when the home was under a cloud of oppression. His parents saw he was a "goodly child"; but who could have foretold his destiny? Yet through a remarkable series of providences, Moses became first the deliverer of his own nation; then the mediator of their wonderful covenant; and subsequently the Lawgiver of the world! What possibilities were in the home of Amram! What possibilities are in our homes to-day!

A child was born in Tarsus, in the house of a Jew. He was heir to the double privilege of Jewish extraction and Roman citizenship. His temperament, his intellectual gifts, and his careful training, marked him out as the restorer of a decaying economy. But on the Damascus road God revealed his Son in him, and the whole direction of Paul's life was changed. He became the champion Apostle, Christ's herald to the world; "went everywhere, preaching the faith which once he destroyed!" That one life has powerfully affected the history of all the ages since. What possibilities were in that home in Tarsus! What possibilities are in our homes to-day! Let us pray, believingly, expectantly, and importunately, for our children and young people. Hope bids us do this; for they are the workers of the future, the messengers of Christ to their own and to distant lands.

There is an appeal to our fears, for there are possibilities on the other side—dark possibilities of broken hearts, hair prematurely grey, substance wasted, names dishonoured, health shattered, and graves filled before their time. "The wild-flower life" soon finds itself "planted in the tomb." But enough of this! Only let us be sure, when we pray for our children that God may endow them early with his grace, and keep them from the evil which is in the world, we are praying in the line of his gracious purpose; and the record of the past is full of encouragement.

As to the promises of God upon which faith leans, where all are Divine, one on each subject is sufficient. For the Church, take this—"As the earth bringeth forth her bud, and the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth, so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all nations" (Isa. lxi. 11). For the family, take this—"As for Me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; my Spirit which is upon thee, and my words which I have put into thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever" (Isa. lix. 21). It is enough: Lord do as Thou hast said!

Mrs. Ormiston Chant.

The second hour was given to a consideration of work among young women. Mrs. Chant, in the course of a very earnest and impressive address, said:—

And Esau said: "What profit shall this birthright do unto me?" It was the cry of an utterly selfish, Godless, Christless man, and will be so to the end of the world. "How will this affect me? What good will come to me through this?" Our high and noble birthright, as God's children, Jesus Christ's redeemed brothers and sisters, is, that we be partakers of the spirit of self-sacrifice, which was perfected on that cross at Calvary. That henceforth we neither live unto ourselves, nor die unto ourselves; that the welfare of others, God's work for us to do in the world, is to be our chief end and aim, our dearest ambition, our highest hope.

To-day, in this solemn week of prayer that is being held throughout the country, is to be given to the cause of the Young Women's Christian Association, and in the few minutes allotted me to address you, I wish to make a heartfelt appeal to you to give what service you can to that most unspeakably important and valuable Association. It has for its object the banding together in kindly fellowship those thousands of young women throughout the country who are engaged in shops or factories, domestic service, &c., providing safe and comfortable homes for those who have to live in lodgings; homes of rest for times of sickness; friends to give advice, and help, and protection; and also to provide innocent and happy recreation. More than this its great aim is to lead those who come under its influence, to the knowledge and love of Christ Jesus.

All this means the securing under God's blessing, a period of safe and happy young womanhood, as preparation for the duties of wife and mother that the future is bringing to them. If we can but have Christian mothers for our nation we shall no longer have a race of selfish vice-laden men in our midst, who are willing, nay, eager, to throw away their God-given birthright of manhood, for any sordid, mean, and vile mess of pottage that greed or sloth or impurity may offer them.

In the afternoon at four, about sixty or seventy ladies and gentlemen assembled in the drawing-room of Mrs. George Dashwood, Bryanstone-square, W., to hear an address from Mrs. Chant, on the same subject. The speaker entered a very heartfelt protest against the system of "hiring fairs" existing in many counties, as fraught with evils so enormous as to call for nothing less than the entire sweeping away of the system. She pointed out that the new branch of work undertaken by the Y.W.C.A., among farm servants, would be a very important step in that direction; when young women learn how beautiful and sacred a thing womanhood ought to be, they will no longer consent to stand about in market places to be stared at, commented upon, and even handled, and in many cases rosetted with coloured ribbons as though they were cattle.

Hon. and Rev. Canon Leigh, who presided, responded to Mrs. Chant's protest with a powerful one of his own. For years he said he had been trying to get these "mops and staties," as the country-folk call them, put down; he had collected most valuable and condemnatory information upon the subject, including letters from Mr. Joseph Arch, M.P., all of which he would be very happy to hand over to Mrs. Chant, to make what use of them she deemed best.

Bishop Perry and Rev. Mr. Chichester offered touching prayers, and a very interesting meeting closed with the Benediction.

A meeting in the evening on behalf of the Y.W.C.A. was held at Eccleston Hall, and was well attended. The address was again given by Mrs. Ormiston Chant, who closed with an earnest appeal to all present to consecrate themselves with renewed fervour to the service of God, insisting on the necessity of coming to Christ ourselves as the vital step to endeavouring to lead others to Him.

Hymns were sung, and special prayer was offered, by written request of one of the audience, for Mr. Stead, that God would continue to bless him with his presence and strength. The prayers offered at the close were thrilling and fervent, and the names of six new members were added to the Y.W.C.A. in answer to an appeal from the Hon. Emily Kinnaird.

Rev. C. Graham (Shepherd's Bush)

AT EXETER HALL.

The Church, as it now exists in the world, includes all believers, regenerate men of every name and denomination, in all climes and countries of the earth, and excludes all others. The Church in any town, city, or district, is the aggregate of the believers in that town, city, or district, excluding all others. No intelligent Christian doubts this truth; and yet how strangely does the conduct of many contradict it! The unregenerate, the worldling, if they belong to our "party" are generally preferred to devoted children of God who do not belong to it. Surely this is to be confessed as a sin greatly dishonouring to the Lord.

"God is faithful," says Paul to the Corinthians, "by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord" (1 Cor. i. 9). Our present fellowship with Him consists mainly of three particulars—fellowship with Him in his life, in his sufferings, and in the progress of his truth. Fellowship in the two former particulars Paul expresses in the words, "That I may know Him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable to his death" (Phil. iii. 10). To know the power of his resurrection is to possess "more abundantly" that life with which the Spirit quickened Him in Joseph's tomb. Fellowship in his sufferings will ever follow the confession of his name, and will ever be in proportion to the faithfulness of that confession.

The third particular in our fellowship with Christ the Apostle gives us in his inimitable portraiture of love: "It rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth with the truth" (1 Cor. xiii. 6). The triumph of truth is the triumph of Christ; it is the defeat of the prince of darkness and the rescue of souls from his dominion and doom. It gives joy to God and to all who surround his blessed presence on high; and when its triumphs are completed, Christ Himself shall see of the travail of his soul, in the awful judgment of the cross, and shall be satisfied. To suffer with Christ is a great privilege, but to rejoice with Him in the progress of the truth is the happiest privilege in our earthly service.

A still higher fellowship awaits us: we are called to the fellowship of his glory. We wait for the hope of righteousness by faith. Our present position is that of looking for the appearing of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Thessalonians turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. Should we be less zealous and less expectant who are so much nearer to his advent than were they?

In relation to the world the Church has a most important calling. Angels are God's ministers in providence; the Church is the messager of his grace. It He commissions to preach the Gospel to every creature, to warn men everywhere to flee from the wrath to come, "and compel them to come in that his house may be filled.

The Church's efficiency depends upon the amount of its spiritual power. We may multiply organisations, and increase the number of our meetings, and in the same ratio increase our inefficiency and weakness. As we get nearer Christ, and become more like Him, we share his compassions. Who was ever more like Christ than the Apostle Paul? And, earlier still, Moses was willing to lose the inheritance of Canaan for himself if God would pardon his people's sin, and bring them into it. The soul, in fellowship with God and Christ, sees everything in the light of eternity. One chief source of the Church's efficiency is the manifested unity of its members. On this manifested unity hangs the worlds conversion when the Lord comes to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe. But all finally resolves itself into the holiness and devotedness of the individual Christian.

This personal sanctity secures, and so far as human means are concerned, this only can secure, the blessing of the family. Parents can never discharge their duties to their children by proxy. The Sunday-school, and the ministry of the Gospel, important as they are, can never supply the place of fathers and mothers. Our children, in their earlier years, are ever under our eye. None but we as parents can bring them up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord." By nurture, they are taught the truth; by admonition, that truth is brought to bear on the conscience, and, in harmony with it, they are admonished and corrected.

The deep conviction that he who planteth is nothing, and that he who watereth is nothing, that it is God who giveth the increase, will make us earnest and unceasing in prayer for his blessing. The prayer which meets the mind of God must take in more than our children's salvation. Our earnest desire will be that He who bought them with his blood shall not only be glorified in them, but glorified by them. We will desire, not that they may be great, or rich, or famous in the world, but that they may be the faithful servants of the Lord Jesus.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan (Clapham),

AT THE CONFERENCE HALL, CLAPHAM.

The Evangelical Alliance had done well, he said, in giving "The Church and the Family" a prominent place in their programme for this Week of Prayer. It reminded him how much the Alliance had accomplished in promoting the family feeling throughout the universal Church, and in demonstrating that, however varied Churches may be, the true family of God is one, having one Father and Elder Brother, speaking one family language, wearing one family likeness, and looking up to oné home.

Between our homes and our Churches there is a connection of the closest and most important kind. The best guarantee of a revived spiritual life in the one is its prayerful cultivation and maintenance in the other. Christ has taught us the sacredness of family relationship, and the aim of his Gospel is to make every Christian home a centre of spiritual influence as well as a scene of holy affection and fellowship. It is sad to think of the recklessness with which many parents and guardians of young people throw away the golden opportunity of giving a healthful tone and direction to the lives of the young which they might never lose, and, instead of this, induce habits and views of life which ultimately prove their ruin.

Fathers and mothers greatly need our prayers. Where the heart is sensitive and the conscience tender, the burden of anxiety is such that we may well pray God to help them under it; and where the heart is hardened and the conscience dead, that He may open their eyes to see their sin and the perilous consequences which may flow from it. Parents, too, have often great family griefs to bear which demand our sympathy. We have to think of them watching by the bedside of sick and dying ones, or mourning over their beloved dead, or bewailing still more bitterly the falling away of some from the paths of piety and virtue.

Attention was called to the duty of family worship, as a means of maintaining family piety. It was to be feared that in this age of hurry and business this duty was not attended to, as it used to be in England. The time was well spent which was devoted to such a hallowed purpose, and nothing should be allowed to interfere with its regular observance. A nation in which all the families, or the great majority, shall be thus employed morning and evening is one which is sure to become distinguished by public morality and national strength. While the Church and the family are the grand instrumentalities for the maintenance of true religion, these have most important auxiliaries in our Sunday-schools, and Christian Associations for young men and women.

Dr. MacEwan concluded with an earnest appeal in view of recent revelations for the multiplication more particularly of Young Women's Christian Associations, that the growing womanhood of our country may be everywhere as an angel of light and power, averting from us that curse which must surely fall on any people amongst whom virtue is dishonoured and the weak and unprotected are oppressed.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 7.

Home and Foreign Missions.—For the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the unsaved; for the revival and increase of a Missionary spirit in the hearts of all who believe; for Home Missions and Evangelistic efforts—that more labourers, full of the spirit of love and power, may be sent forth, and that a great ingathering of souls may take place; for Native Christians among the Heathen—that they may be kept steadfast and zealous in seeking the salvation of their countrymen; for Missionaries and Teachers—that great grace and wisdom may be given to them; for God's ancient people, Israel—that they may be brought into the faith of Christ; and for the maintenance of religious liberty in all lands.

Rev. Ebenezer E. Jenkins,

AT STEINWAY HALL.

CHRISTIANITY must stand or fall by the success of our foreign missions. There are some gentlemen in this country who pursue an indirect method of attacking our religion; they do not say it is baseless, but they say that, so far as foreign missions are concerned, Christianity is a failure. If Christianity is a failure abroad, it is certainly, as a Divine institution, a failure at home. It is to be regretted that there is a quiet, unexpressed spirit of unbelief pervading English society. We see it in our daily journals; we see it in some of the more popular contributions to our serial literature; we see it in learned books that are read by comparatively few students.

I have been a witness of the power of Christianity in heathen countries. Whatever it may be in this country, abroad it is a great and a growing force. God intended, I think, to make the success of Christian missions the crowning evidence of the truth and divinity of Christianity. I am an old Indian, having gone out in 1846, and laboured in the Madras Presidency for eighteen years. I have paid two visits to India since then. In the later visit I have had the opportunity of looking from a higher platform, and taking into purview a larger area. I have mingled with missionaries of other Societies, and have conversed with Hindoos. In my recent visit I met and addressed some thousands of them, thinking men, the future leaders of the intellectual revolution of India. I met them in railway-carriages, in formal assemblies, and in private. I was anxious to know what was their impression of the state of Christianity at present in India.

One meeting I attended I shall never forget. It happened to be the anniversary of a Society called the Brahmo Somaj. In that assembly there were eight hundred Hindoo gentlemen, and among them probably not three Christians. A Hindoo orator stood up and delivered an address, in the English language, to eight hundred of his fellow-countrymen. That is a significant fact. The subject of the discourse was the Brahmo Somaj, but he referred to Mohammet, to Buddha (the name commanding 425,000,000 of believers), and to Christ. He compared these three great historic personages: he held up Jesus as the loftiest of the teachers of earth, and his affirmation of the claim of Christ was followed by applause of the stirring character seen in England when any sentence is uttered which is in accord with popular sympathy. Forthwith, the Hindoo orator poured out a eulogy on Christ, the materials of which he could only have gathered by a very attentive study of the New Testament. Here were men unknown to missionaries, but, practically, worshippers of the name which Christians revered. The New Testament was the book which they had studied. The New Testament is becoming one of the most popular books in India, and the most popular name in the far East is the name of Jesus.

The observation of a brother missionary, who has just returned to this country, is a very striking one: "If you want a book to go among the people, you must put the name of Jesus on the outside of it." That, he says, will give it popular currency. A Christian missionary, alighting at a village which had never before been visited by a representative of the Church of Christ, found that the priest's shaster, or sacred book, was the Gospel according to Matthew. The priest did not know it was an inspired book, but he said he had not found a book containing more excellent counsel for his people, to whom he read from it.

In Japan last May, I was permitted to see what it was worth living to witness. It was in Kiôto, the great ecclesiastical stronghold and centre of Buddhism. A Conference is held there every two years; it consists of native ministers—seventy-nine picked men—sent from all missionary churches throughout the empire. The Conference lasted a week, and the last two days were spent in preaching to the heathen. Ten years before my life would hardly have been worth much if I had wandered through Kiôto as I did a few months since. I was present at the last service, which was attended by 1300 persons, including 900 Buddhists, who met to listen to native Japanese preachers. As in India it is the most popular, so in Japan the name of Jesus is the most powerful to-day. Ten years ago I ventured to predict that Christianity would be the nominal religion of the Japanese empire in a quarter of a century. When I was in Japan a short time ago, some friends said I was wrong in that prediction, because Christianity would be the nominal religion of the empire in a few years. Another significant circumstance is that a great thinker—perhaps the greatest thinker—in Japan to-day, not a Christian, but a Buddhist if anything, has insisted that the Government of Japan could not do a wiser thing in order to bring itself into the comity of nations than to make Christianity the nominal faith of the country.

As for China, I have more hope than ever. In the centre of that empire, Christian brethren told me that they have never known the Word of the Lord accompanied by such power to the consciences of the Chinese as they have found it during the last few years. Buddhism commands 425,000,000 believers. What is the secret of its success? That is a question which theologians and others in this country ought to study. Buddhism has great sympathy with suffering. It is a faith of comprehension, absorbing everything, and destroying nothing. It reigns in Japan, it reigns in China; but wherever I went I found Buddhism falling, loosening, departing from the intellectual community, dwelling among the poor at present, but destined to go. Even as a matter of arithmetical calculation, we are bound to drive Buddhism out of the East. I see the name of Jesus rising, and the name of Buddha setting; and that is really the impression left upon my mind in all my travels. "As I live, saith the Lord," and because I live, "every knee shall bow," not to Buddha, but "to me, and every tongue shall confess that Jesus is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

FRIDAY, JANUARY 8.

Nations and Governments.—For kings and all in authority; for the spread of justice and peace; for the defeat of malicious plots and conspiracies; for the abatement of national jealousies and prevention of unrighteous wars; for the entire abolition of the slave trade, the opium trade, and all forms of immoral traffic; for a favourable reception of Christian missionaries by heathen rulers and peoples; and for the coming of Christ in his kingdom.

Rev. R. Taylor (Upper Norwood),

AT STEINWAY HALL.

IN the position in which we, as a nation, stand, we ought to require no stimulus in order to take upon our hearts, and into our closets, the interests of our nation, and especially the conduct of those who occupy high places in guiding and directing its policy. As disciples of Christ we are looking for "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," but we must not yield to the temptation of thinking that we may leave the world to take its own course, without any interference on our part, because we are sure it will not be put right until He come who is its true King. Although we do not expect stainless purity and utter perfection until we are in the presence of our blessed Lord, we pray and labour that we may keep as near to Him as we possibly can do here. The same principle applies to the social, domestic, and national life of the world. Should it not be our prayer and effort that the principles of his government, and spirit of his life, should, as far as possible, prevail, and guide and rule men in all those relations of life, so that we may have as much of his kingdom here as we can hope to obtain?

We ought not to be hopeless in reference to the influence of Christ and Christ's truth even upon the world, upon the government of the world, upon the leading and ruling minds of the world. Far be it from me to abate the impressions which weigh upon many a Christian heart as to the enormous evils—social and national, as well as personal—that prevail amongst us; yet we ought not to be blind to the goodness and grace of God, or fail to see that much in our legislation, and in our national life, calls for humble gratitude and inspires bright hope. Without raising any of the questions which are in dispute among Christians, we shall be all agreed in this, that it is for the good of Christianity, of the Christian Church, and certainly for the good of the nation, that the nation, speaking by authoritative lips, should, so far as it is competent and dutiful in a nation, recognise the authority of our Lord and Master, and embody his laws in its legislation. This, to a very considerable degree, has already been done. We want to see the principles of the Word of God applied to the guidance of our life as a nation. Earnest prayer should be offered that a public religious opinion may be created and sustained in the land that will further stimulate legislation by protecting the young from fierce and terrible temptation, and from outrage worse than death; in the way of stepping in between selfishness of unprincipled men, who misapply their money and position to evil purposes, and the poor, the needy, and the helpless, who, but for such interposition would be trampled under foot; in the way of securing purity in the home, and righteousness, justice and equity, and even charity and beneficence, in the workshop.

The Bishop of Bedford,

AT CENTENARY HALL.

Himself a well-known abstainer of many years standing, he began by telling the story of a soldier, who, after many falls, came to a clergyman and said it was no use trying anything else, for if religion could not save him, nothing could. This led to the enforcement of the religious aspect of the question, the Bishop showing the strong religious ground for action, whether we look at religion in its personal aspect, as touching our own salvation, or in its social aspect, as touching the welfare of others. He next pointed out how intemperance is the fertile source both of crime, as witnessed to by all authorities, and of sin, as witnessed to by our own experience. Especially he warned against the deadly fruit of drinking in regard to sensual sins. He cautioned his hearers against the uncharitableness of condemning moderate and temperate men as committing sin by tasting strong drinks, but longed to show the respectable temperate and untempted classes the terrible need of self-denying action for the sake of others. He illustrated this by a story of two men in an Alpine hut during a fearful snowstorm, one saying, "How thankful I am to be in this warm, comfortable shelter;" and the other, "Oh, what an awful night! I must go out and see whether there is any poor, lost traveller I can rescue from the storm."

He next touched upon the enormous proportion of the inmates of lunatic asylums and workhouses, brought there through drink, and told some touching stories showing the dreadful tyranny of habits of excess. One of these stories was of a family he knew among the farming class, where the mother was a confirmed drunkard, and when the son, who was away from home, revisited his home, he and the father used to steal down the garden and read the Bible together, where she would not find them. He also told various stories of the utter hardness and heartlessness produced by drink, and from this gathered his concluding lesson, that the best hope is with the young, and that we must enlist them in the cause if the future of England is to be healthful, and happy, and blessed.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson.

Some very hard things have been said against Gospel Temperance workers. The heaviest charge that can be made against a Christian man is that he has substituted something for the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I care not what that something may be, but anything that takes the place of the living Christ is treason to his Gospel and an evil that is to be deplored. A friend remarked this to me, and I said, "Let me tell you the exact relationship of Temperance to the Gospel and the Gospel to Temperance. We take Temperance, and put it in the place of drink: we do not put Temperance in the place of the Gospel." When I give a British soldier the pledge, I say, "My man, that is instead of a quart pot, not instead of your Redeemer." If we can only get the Christian Church to realise this fact, it seems to me that we shall have done altogether with the petty jealousy which exists to-day with regard to the Temperance movement in many churches where it is tolerated, patronised, and sometimes regarded with keen jealousy. What we want to-day in England is a pronounced opinion from the Church of Christ upon this Temperance question. I, for one, would be thankful to any Christian man who could show me a better way, and a more Christly way, a more effective way, a more simple way, of bringing drunkards to a knowledge of themselves, and a knowledge of Jesus Christ their Saviour. Until we get that enlightenment, until we receive that superior wisdom, we must toil on, plod on, and work on, on those total abstinence lines which have proved so effective, and which have brought thousands to know Christ and to become inheritors of his kingdom.

I would like to offer my testimony with regard to the effects of drink upon distant India, and I say that dreadful as it is at home, it is perhaps, if it be possible, worse to go to a foreign land and teach Mahommedans and Hindoos a religion which, they suppose, tolerates drinking customs and supports drinking practices. Not many years ago a Brahmin said to me, in Agra, speaking of a leading native gentleman, "He is almost a Christian." I said, "How do you know?" "Why," he said, "he drinks brandy-and-water, and what else is there?" Another said, "If you could only get your countrymen in India to give up drink we should begin to believe there was some power in your Christianity."

Rev. J. Smith (late of Delhi).

The time has long since passed when any defence was required of foreign missions. A crowd came out at one of the railway-stations near Delhi, to meet a newly-arrived missionary, and I was with him. "Who are these?" said a gentleman in the railway-carriage. "They are native Christians, who have come out to welcome the new missionary." "Well," he said, with much surprise, "I have never seen a native Christian before." Of course he had not, because the native Christians dress and talk the same as others, and there is nothing peculiar to be seen about them as they walk in the streets. This gentleman, but for this sight, might probably have gone away and said that during all the time he was in India he had not seen a native Christian. We have a very inadequate view of India. I have heard two men make statements directly contradictory, and yet both were true, because the country is so large and the habits and customs are so various. Bengal has more than forty millions of people with their own language and their own customs and dress. The north-west provinces, including Oude, have forty millions more, with a better class of people and more physically developed. They too have their language and their dress. The people of the Punjaub have another dress and another language; and then you have the Afghans, and on the other side the tribes of Beloochistan. I cannot even enumerate the races of which India is composed. They form separate and distinct nations, and I never feel more thankful than I do when it comes into my mind that these various nations, in God's providence, have been brought under one rule, so that the feuds, the fighting, and the disaster that everywhere prevailed in India, have I trust, for ever passed away.

I landed in India forty-five years ago. The country then was very different from what it is now. There were no roads worthy of the name, and the people were unwilling even to hear the Gospel, much less to accept it. I remember the tremendous obstacles in the way of the spread of the Gospel, and all the various cruelties connected with Hindooism. In many districts, after I had been there for years, five out of six of the girls were put to death as soon as they were born. I remember the destruction of the sick on the banks of the rivers, and the sacrifices to the gods and the Suttee. The change is marvellous. No language is adequate to convey to your minds the tremendous advances that have been made by the people of India during the last half century. There are three hundred millions of people in India, with the addition of Cashmere and Burmah, and, whatever else may be said of the British occupation, we have been the means of giving peace and safety to vast multitudes under our rule.

Then as to Christian work, this must be at the foundation of all permanent growth and development. I can go back in memory to the time when preaching from morning to night in the fairs and villages, sometimes in eight or ten villages in a day, and in market places and bazaars, I was without a single convert. The difficulties were far greater than those encountered, I believe, in any other part of the world. We had not only to enlighten the ignorant, but to attack a system that has been existing for ages, that has its literature in its ramifications in every part of society. We have now, thanks to years of incessant toil throughout the length and breadth of the land, about half-a-million Protestant Christians, so that God has done great things for us. We believe that the time will come when the whole of the Telegoo nation will be converted, for we have had ten thousand conversions in a year, and as many as three thousand in a day; and so also in other parts. The part the natives themselves are beginning to take in evangelism is most encouraging. Formerly everything rested upon the missionary societies, but now they are bearing a large share of the burden. Thousands and tens of thousands of Gospels and tracts have been circulated, and are being sold. One of the native brethren in one year sold 25,000, and there has been created amongst the people a great thirst for knowledge; after thirty years' work in Delhi I now find the Christian Church supporting its own pastor. It holds more than 400 prayer-meetings per year, and is sending out evangelists to the villages. The whole work fills my heart with gratitude for the past and with hope for the future.

Conference Hall, Mildmay Park.

A devout and earnest spirit was manifested throughout the week, but the meetings were not so largely attended as in former years. This deficit was chiefly owing to the wintry weather which prevailed, the slippery condition of the streets rendering them dangerous to the feeble and the aged. Mr. James E. Mathieson presided, and conducted the meetings with a happy combination of tact and graciousness. His choice of Scriptures was apt, his reading thereof impressive, and his remarks thereon helpful, both in exposition and application. Usually six or eight brethren engaged in prayer at each meeting, and now and then the voice of the sisters was heard. With occasional deviations, the course of subjects suggested by the Evangelical Alliance was followed, and thus a wide and definite range of topics was secured.

On Monday the Alliance subjects were deferred to give place to the Scriptural rule of "the Jew first," so that the annual meeting of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews was interwoven with the Week of Prayer. These are referred to in another article.

On Tuesday morning the subject was Praise and Thanksgiving, and the addresses were by Rev. D. B. Hankin, vicar of St. Jude's, and Rev. Dr. Edmond, minister of Park Church, Highbury.

In the evening humiliation before God on account of our sins as a nation, as a church, and as individuals, and to implore his pardon for the same, was the topic for prayer.

Rev. James Stephens said: Nations, like individuals, often require God's chastening hand to drive away the folly and pride of human nature in taking credit to self for any successful work that has been accomplished. Much of our national sin is brought about by sacrificing God's standard of righteousness to a human policy. Our view of sin is to be that which our Lord would take, hatred of the sin, but loving pity for the sinner. Christians are often guilty of giving passive encouragement to sin by becoming entangled with the world. They lack separation, and forget that God's desire is to have unto Himself a sanctified people.

Mr. Robert Brown considered that a most grievous sin of our nation was that of idolatry. Again and again are we guilty of doing homage to the person, to formal outward ceremonies, and to wealth. At the time of the Reformation God highly favoured this country by giving it a pure Protestant faith, and yet at this time we are taking our ease and foolishly neglecting to preserve this sacred trust. Few Christians are aware how during the past few years, Romish and Jesuitical influences have been secretly extending their ramifications into our political and social systems. Mr. Brown dwelt at length upon recent examples of our foreign and domestic policy where the Romish influence had been allowed to have its sway, and showed how God had soon afterwards manifested his displeasure in a most marked manner by sending upon us some national calamity. Our firm and outspoken protest must be raised against this sin, or God's judgments will assuredly descend upon us. Let it not be said of our nation that we "love to have it so."

"The Church and the Family" gave ample scope for prayer and speech on Wednesday. In the morning the addresses were by Rev. W. F. Slater and Rev. R. Mackay. In the evening Mr. James E. Mathieson read Titus ii., and then Rev. P. Carmichael (assistant minister of Park Church, Highbury) drew a twofold picture: first, What kind of family will help the Church? and then, How can the Church help the family? He laid special stress upon the old-fashioned Sabbath evening catechising as being the greatest factor in the godly upbringing of children.

Mr. Robert Paton, who followed, exclaimed, "There is not a lovelier sight in this world than a Christian home." He dwelt upon parental influence, family worship, companionships, and literature. On this latter point his work in connection with the Christian Colportage Association enabled him to speak with authority.

"Home and Foreign Missions" formed the subject for prayer on Thursday. In the morning Rev. Gordon Calthrop, St. Augustine's, Highbury, dwelt upon the qualifications and trials of missionaries, while Rev. G. A. Bennetts, Wesleyan minister, urged the necessity for the Holy Ghost in his fulness as being a greater want than mere organisation.

Rev. A. Bax, Salters' Hall Baptist Chapel, said the thought of the value of human souls for whom God gave his only Son ought to give a stimulus to our prayers for the gathering-in of all heathen. God has opened numerous doors in all parts of the world for the entrance of the Gospel, and therefore our duty is to pray that He will thrust forth labourers to enter those doors. The Church is losing her power by engaging in petty strife and bickering, and neglecting the mighty weapon of prayer. We want to see more earnest work in the mission field, by sending forth numbers of our young men and women, who are often ready to go out in the interests of politics, science, or discovery, but who hang back from entering upon the work of carrying the Gospel to the heathen.

Dr. James L. Maxwell drew attention to the fact that our hearty thanks should be rendered to God for the continued success which was accompanying missionary effort in India, China, Japan, Corea, Madagascar, and other parts of the world, and also for the overruling of many recent political events for the extension of Christ's kingdom. For ourselves, the best prayer at the opening of a new year will be that we may have a missionary spirit, which was the spirit which animated our Lord's life. It is an encouraging sign that the recent departure of young men from our Universities for the mission field has given a strong impetus to the missionary spirit in these halls of learning. The native convert is one who stands in special need of our prayers. The missionary, too, should be continually remembered. Let us ask that they may lead a holy and consistent life; that God will keep alive in their hearts the spirit of unity and love, and that they may have patience and wisdom to enable them to bear the trials and worries which are inseparable from a missionary's life.

On Friday the subject for prayer related to "Nations." In the morning, Rev. E. A. Stuart, vicar of St. James's, Holloway, dwelt with great earnestness on the cheering truth, "The Lord is King," and therefore above all waterflood. Rev. John Wilkinson also spoke.

In the evening, Mr. J. E. Mathieson read and commented on the second Psalm. Rev. Townsend Storrs gave a thoughtful address on the Relation of the Christian to the Government of the World, contending that, as we were citizens of a better country, our loyalty to Christ must ever have precedence to our loyalty to earthly powers, but as we were also citizens of earthly States, we could not be indifferent to the government of our country.

Mr. Finlay Gibson gave a brief address on "Thy Kingdom Come," as suggesting (1) A much-needed prayer; (2) an acceptable prayer; (3) a hearty prayer; (4) an earnest prayer; (5) an honest prayer. With his usual suggestive incisiveness he gave much matter for thought in a brief space of time.

Wandsworth.

The meetings in "Down Lodge Hall," which were brought to a conclusion on Friday afternoon, the 8th instant, were a time of great spiritual refreshment, and of abundant blessing to many. The daily topics for prayer were well remembered by the clergymen and ministers who led the devotions of the meetings. The note of praise and thanksgiving at the opening meeting, on Monday afternoon, was raised by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, who, with Revs. C. Carruthers, W. Reed, and Professor R. A. Redford, repeatedly attended the meetings, and assisted in leading the supplications during the week. Other clergymen and ministers were also present, and took part at some of the meetings. Early in the week it became manifest that the Spirit of the Lord was indeed present, and that many in the well-filled hall were conscious of the holy power which pervaded the assemblies. The words of admonition, uttered on Monday by Rev. C. Spurgeon, jun., were rich in godly counsel and encouragement to Christian workers, and were such as would have done honour to his beloved and revered father.

On Tuesday the attendance was even larger than on Monday. The address given by Rev. E. A. Stuart was heart-searching and deeply impressive. The attendance on Wednesday was visibly influenced by the sudden change in the weather. Many, however, were not afraid of the snow, and were richly rewarded on the occasion by being the privileged hearers of Rev. C. A. Fox. Many present must have rejoiced on account of the rich provisions of grace which were shown to be in Christ for the equipment of those who are willing to be fully consecrated in their Christian life. When admonished by this servant of God to "be strong," and to rest; and when assured by him that there is a deep rest in Jesus, that one might kneel in his own very weakness, and rise in God's great strength, it seemed scarcely possible that any real Christian present could have thought otherwise.

On Thursday those who were thirsting still for spiritual blessings, seemed to forget about the strange weather which had pressed so relentlessly upon them. They came to the meeting in larger numbers than on the previous day, and were amply repaid by the spirit of prayer which prevailed, and which was led by Mr. M. H. Hodder. The address by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins was, "A Word in Season," assuring the meeting of the certainty of God's faithfulness to his people. The closing meeting, on Friday, was addressed by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, with the manly energy and the spiritual impressiveness which, whenever he speaks, he never fails to exercise.

The interest which was manifest at "Down Lodge Hall" throughout the Week of Prayer cannot fail to strengthen the spirit of Christian union which already prevails, in a large degree, in the districts of Wandsworth and Putney. It is certain that if the hearts of God's servants are true, and their fidelity is unwavering, great results will follow the supplications which have been presented at the throne of grace for the salvation of the world, and for increased holiness and deeper consecration of Christians in the work of evangelisation. W. M. S.

Littlehampton.

The week of prayer has been duly observed at St. Saviour's by the minister of the church, supported by Christians from the various places of worship in the town. Recent missions held here by Mr. John Wood, Captain Drury, and Mr. Leisching have been much appreciated, and have left a good impression. As a result, a united prayer-meeting for Christian workers has been commenced, and is held in St. Saviour's Church every Sunday morning at 9.15.

Gosport.

The ministers of different denominations in and adjoining the town, united during the week of prayer to hold daily noon and evening meetings in Vernon Hall. Brotherly love was manifested by the presence of six ministers on the platform, in turn leading in prayer, preaching the Gospel and exhorting. Increasing interest in the meetings was seen as the week went on, and the services were enjoyed by all believers as a time of happy communion with one another and with the Lord.

THE EVELINA ROAD MISSION, Nunhead, S.E. (in connection with the Linden-grove Congregational Church), was started some three years ago as a cottage meeting, and has gradually developed into a large-attended evangelistic service. There is also a flourishing Sunday-school, and, as its most recent addition, a Temperance Society. So large has been the increase in the attendance at the various meetings lately, that those interested are looking anxiously round for larger premises.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER AT MENTONE.

THE public places where prayer is wont to be made are not many in Mentone, nor are the attendants at these generally very numerous. It is true that there are comparatively few visitors here this year. I was one of the little group that gathered in the room used by the Scotch Church at the Villa des Grottes. It is not large, but there met a good company at the morning service. The sun was shining gloriously across the blue sea, and the shimmer on the horizon increased the blaze of light which flooded the room. The effect was peaceful beyond description; the roses, narcissus, heliotropes, wafted their perfumes in at the open door, while all kinds of blooming evergreens, moved by the gentlest of breezes, covered the elevated terrace on which the house stands.

The service was quite in consonance with the external glory of Him who giveth peace. Rev. W. J. Miller, the Free Church minister of Tillicoultry, Scotland, was the preacher. He took for his subject John x. 17, 18, bringing out in a manner calculated to attract the unsaved, and refresh the Christian, the individuality, the intimacy, the depth and method of manifestation of the Father's love to Christ, and through Him to the world. At the Lord's Supper which followed, Mr. Spurgeon gave an impressive address from the words, "Thou hast visited me in the night." He drew from his personal experience the evidence, that such visitations are still made, and are not, nor ever were, any miracle. The effects, however, are as evident as they are various to the different classes of persons to whom they are made. The first consciousness of our lost and ruined condition is the effect of a distinct visit of God, bringing his own light to bear upon our refuge of lies upon which we trusted before conversion. Such a visitation cannot but incite to much searching of heart and confession of sin. He comes again and again to his own people, but now to refresh their spirit, and assure their peace. I make no attempt beyond the above few words to detail the cheering address.

Monday saw the opening of a series of meetings to be held at the French Church. The pastor, J. Delapierre, presided at the first. On Tuesday, Rev. J. G. Bichard, who is assisting the venerable Canon Woodroofe at Christ Church, presided. In the church were representatives of England, France, Italy, Germany, and America. The unity of the various races at the throne of grace had its own lesson. The commingling of the English and French languages in actual supplication; the joining in harmonious worship of Churchmen and Nonconformists of various shades, was good to behold. Mr. Spurgeon again gave the address. He took the appointed subject, Humiliation and Confession of Sins. He dwelt mainly upon individual sins; these must always be viewed in relation to our light. The sins which the members of the Church of Christ, if honest and sincere, ought to confess, each one must judge for himself; but manifestly there is far too much worldliness in the best. Indifference to the perishing millions is a terrible canker eating into our Church life. It is not ours to contemplate the time when these poor lost ones would cease to burn, but to do our best to snatch them from the burning. Is not the disunion among Christians a sin? If we come together with the Bible, and the spirit of the Christ of the Bible, should we not be more at one than we are? Unbelief, neglect of private prayer and meditation, are fruitful sources of spiritual weakness, both in our churches and in individuals.

Mr. Spurgeon concluded his address with the important but too much undervalued truth that "it is better to see God before we see man, and in looking at our fellow-men, see them through the wounds of Christ."

The meetings will be continued during the week. On Friday, Rev. J. W. Miller will preside over another meeting for prayer in the English language.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

THE usual series of four meetings that take place at the New Year season, in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, have this year been specially interesting and successful. The first meeting—that for the children of the night school—took place on the last evening of 1885, and gave clear indication of the continued success and growth of this most important department. The number present was about three hundred, of whom about half were on the roll of the school. After the usual hearty despatch of the abundant tea and cake, a hymn was sung, and Mr. Wilkinson made a few opening remarks. The children recited their well-chosen texts, &c. in a manner that left nothing to be desired; and after another hymn, listened with perfect attention to one or two appropriate addresses.

Mr. Hutchinson, who is an unfailing friend of the Mission, gave them a little sermon under four heads, viz., the four T's: Trusting, Taking, Thanking, and Telling, which were explained and illustrated in a way that the children are not likely to forget. Mr. Daniells and Dr. Dixon followed with suitable and affectionate counsels, and Mr. Field, than whom the Mission has no more sincere and faithful friend, addressed a few kind and hearty remarks to them before distributing the prizes, some of which were provided by himself. He contrasted what he remembered of fifty years ago with the present time, and illustrated to them the influence of Jews upon other people by the fact that, among the few Gentiles on the platform there were three Johns and one Samuel. After more singing and prayer, &c., the meeting dispersed, each child, outsiders and all, receiving an orange at the door.

ADULT MEETING.

The meeting for Jewish men and women on the following evening was, in respect of numbers at least, probably the most remarkable meeting yet held by the Mission. It was estimated that about four hundred and fifty Jews were present; the contrast between this and the earlier meetings of the Mission was shown not merely by the great disparity in the numbers, but by the quiet, orderly behaviour of these naturally restless and undisciplined Jews. After the tea, &c., there were hymns and prayers in German. Then Mr. Wilkinson and others addressed frank, loving, and earnest appeals to those present to bethink themselves and return from their long and far wanderings to the true and gracious Shepherd of Israel. Mr. Wilkinson, after offering them a hearty welcome, and wishing them all a happy New Year, through being delivered from sin, addressed them from Jer. ii. 22: "For though thou wash thee with nitre," &c., &c. After a hymn, Mr. Gough addressed them from Ps. xix., followed by Mr Adler, who spoke in German, and by so doing, riveted the attention of every man and woman among them. Mr. Baron prayed in German, Dr. Marshall and Mr. Hutchinson each made characteristic appeals to the intelligence and conscience of their hearers; Dr. Dixon addressed them with his familiar tone of unfeigned sympathy, and with wholesome words; and, after prayer from Mr. Barnett, Mr. Wilkinson brought this most encouraging meeting to a close by reminding the Jews that, if they did not trust Jesus themselves, they at any rate were greatly benefited by the fact that other people trusted and obeyed the words of Jesus.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

The other two meetings were held, as usual, on the morning and evening of the Monday that begins the annual Week of Prayer. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided, and infused into both meetings his own spirit of genial and Christ-like sympathy. After reading Isaiah lxii., and making some suitable comments thereon, Mr. Mathieson brought before the meeting requests for special prayer. Mr. Robert Brown, followed by other brethren, presented these requests, after which a novel and very touching episode was enacted. The little children, seven or eight in number, from the Jewish Orphans' Home, under Miss Wilkinson's care, were introduced to the meeting and sang first a hymn in Hebrew—viz., "Unto us a child is born . . .," and one in English, "Jesus loves the little children," with sweet voices. The heart of everyone present must have been touched by the simple pathos of the scene.

Mr. Wilkinson followed with his report of the Mission, under the division of Facts of the Past, Facts of the Present, and Purposes proposed for the Future; he expressed his gratefulness to the Lord for continued tokens of his care, and for especial answers to prayer. The progress of the Convalescent Home was also described, where 130 Jewish men had been entertained in the year, and where manifest tokens of spiritual blessing had been received. The visit to I. Rabinovitch was then referred to, and also the visit which Messrs. Baron and Barnett had paid to their friends in Germany. This gave opportunity to Mr. Wilkinson to introduce his great purpose or proposal for the future, viz., to distribute, if the Lord will, 100,000 copies of the recently issued admirable translation of the New Testament into Hebrew among the Jews of the Continent, and that by the hands, and recommended by the voice, of missionaries from Mildmay. The Trinitarian Bible Society issue this translation, and have kindly offered to let Mr. Wilkinson have copies ad libitum on very favourable terms. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. Denham Smith, chiefly on Paul's words, "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed," and from Luke i. 31—33 concerning "the kingdom."

EVENING MEETING.

The evening meeting was, in most respects, a reproduction of the morning meeting, with some important variations. Mr. Wilkinson read again Isaiah lxii., and said that it had been and would be his yearly practice to read that remarkable chapter. His report was amplified by several translations from Jewish Continental papers, which revealed the marvellous revolution taking place in the religious attitude of many influential Jews. This was followed by the Medical Mission report presented by Dr. Marshall, in the absence of Dr. Dixon, who had been called away to render professional assistance at a distance. The meeting was further addressed by Dr. Sinclair Paterson, whose striking thoughts on the present aspects of the Jewish question, based on wide and minute acquaintance with facts, left a keen relish on the mental palates of all present, so that, although the time for closing the meeting was considerably over-stepped, the desire was evidently unanimous that he should continue at his pleasure.

Thus was brought to a close this very interesting series of meetings, and all who had part in them will join in thankfulness to God for the refreshment and hopeful promise that they afforded.

YOUNG MEN IN BATH.

DEAR SIR,—As the newly-appointed secretary of the Bath Y.M.C.A., allow me to say that the committee of this Association are making a fresh start this year, in order to influence for good the many hundreds of young men in this beautiful and ancient city. I would earnestly ask for the prayers of your readers; and if there are parents who have sons in this city, and who would like me to write to them, or visit them, a letter to me here suggesting such a course shall receive my prompt attention. I will do all I can to make them thoroughly welcome.

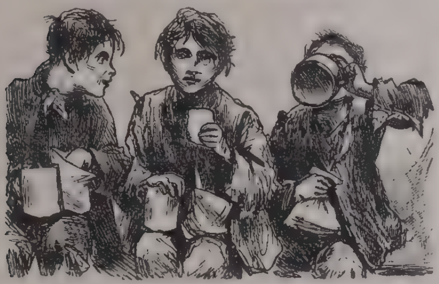
The churches here are doing a good and noble work, and I shall endeavour in every way to work in perfect harmony with them.—Yours sincerely,

John A. Stooke, General Secretary.

Y.M.C.A., 5, Quiet-street, Bath.

DISTRESS IN THE WEST-END.—Mr. C. Cook, of Hyde-park Hall, and his helpers, are giving free meals, as far as they are able, to the unemployed and destitute in their neighbourhood, of which he states there are a great many.

DR. BARNARDO AND HOMELESS CHILDREN.



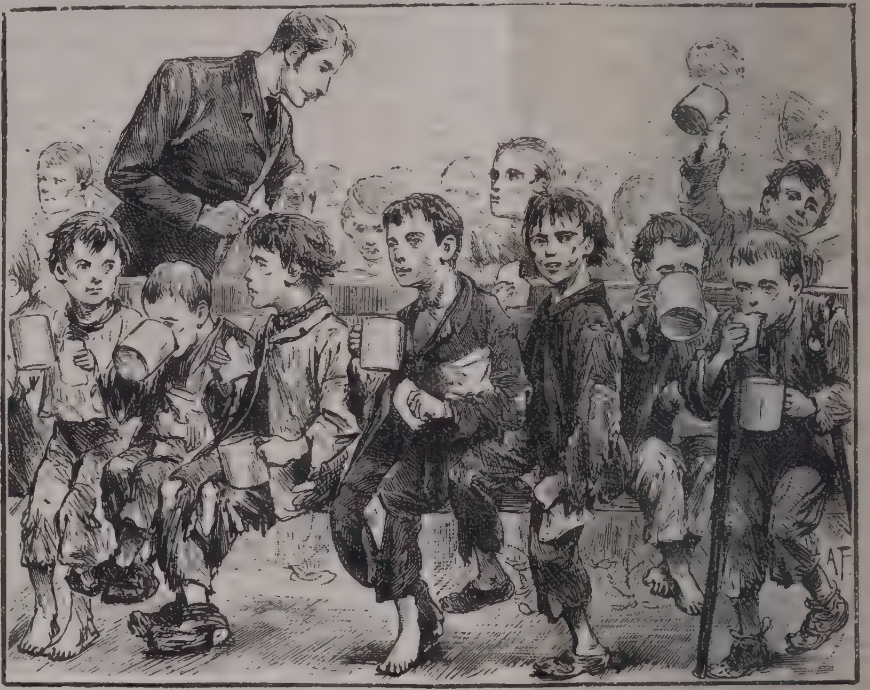
WAIFS, BAGS AND MUGS.

THE East-end of London presents many sights that deeply move the Christian philanthropist, but surely that which will most readily touch the regenerated heart is the terrible condition in which so many children live, move, and have their being. Last week it was our lot to witness some 2000 of them, gathered together by Dr. Barnardo, for his annual festival to the homeless waifs of this great and sorrowful city. The circumstances of the lives of these small social outcasts are such that their continued existence seems a miracle to all dwellers in comfortable homes. During the previous nights Dr. Barnardo, or his efficient helpers, had been scouring the streets, peering under archways, into deserted markets, waggons and carts, courts and alleys, throughout the poorest parts of the Eastern section of the metropolis. All children found sheltering in such places received a card of invitation. So also those found in the lodging-houses, which are said to be the only place that 60,000 persons can call a home. Of this number a large proportion are children under fifteen years of age. From these the searchers went to the "furnished rooms,"—dens not under the supervision of the police, and some of which, at the time of visiting, showed scenes which may not be here unveiled.

When all were gathered in the large Gospel Hall of the Edinburgh Castle, under the glare of the electric light, what a strange congregation they formed! What rags, what leanness, what wretchedness! We examined one section of the closely-packed crowd of wee fellows, specially with regard to shoes. About a third of them were utterly innocent of this item of attire, despite the fact that, without, the streets were covered with snow and ice, and it was one of the most biting, inclement evenings we recollect in a long London experience. Some of these morsels of humanity had come one, two, and three miles to be present at the feast. Think of it, ye mothers, who at that selfsame hour were saying, "Now I lay me down to sleep" with your darlings, and, with loving kiss and touch, were leaving them in the cosiest of cots.

Dr. Barnardo, with wise forethought born of his great experience, had his well-trained brass band in the gallery, and, as the juvenile guests fought their way in through the mob in the street, the stirring strains with which they all appeared to be familiar not only soothed the restless spirits but evoked an amount of musical talent that was simply wonderful. How they sang the popular airs, keeping time as if to the beat of Mr. Proudman's bâton. We must not stay to describe the admirable marshalling of Dr. Barnardo's attendant forces, or the superb generalship he displayed in the service of the tea, and the corpulent-looking bags, which soon grew smaller by degrees and beautifully less as the young ravens satisfied their hunger, causing the "chunks" of cake and bread-and-butter to disappear with the dexterity of a prestidigitateur. Presently there could be seen on the grimy faces a growing look of satisfaction like that expressed by the Italian Dives, who said, "When I have dined, all the world is happy."

Much yet remained to be done, and little time to do it. A company of well-drilled lads from the Home in Stepney-causeway appeared on the platform, clad in bright sailor suits. Their smart and comfortable appearance must have turned the eyes of the boy guests green with envy, even after such a tea. A text was slowly declaimed by the Doctor, that it might be learnt by heart, "Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow;" and here the work of the ragged or board-school was shown by many of them shouting it out before Dr. Barnardo, with deliberate voice, had got half through it. Mr. Henry Varley gave a very brief Gospel talk, which was received with remarkable attention; and then came the reading of a letter from Canada, which that morning's post had brought from a lad who was once a Whitechapel arab. Due stress was laid upon all the good news it contained; it showed that the writer was of the right stamp, for he enclosed ten dollars out of his savings to help other poor lads to go to his adopted country.



INNOCENT OF SHOES AND STOCKINGS.

Thereafter followed the usual cross-examination by which Dr. Barnardo endeavours to classify the motley throng and to weed out the likeliest and the most needy. "I want to help you to better lives than the streets and the lodgings can give you," he premised. Their occupations or want of occupation; their places of abode; their orphanhood or otherwise; some matters of an equally important nature, but which were regarded in a somewhat jocular light—all were made the subject of interrogations that were answered with the utmost alacrity. A good few admitted that they had been "in trouble," and many more that they deserved to have been. Those who confessed to have in their possession sufficient current coin of the realm to pay for the night's lodging might have been counted by units; for that night at least a bed was put within the reach of all, for there was on hand, as usual, a new sixpence for every one who had not forfeited his title to it by bad behaviour. The last question was one which we hope and believe marked the turning point in many a life, "How many are willing to come into our Homes to be trained for useful work and afterwards sent out to Canada?" It must have seemed to some as if the door of heaven had opened for their admission. Quite a little crowd rose, and, in less time almost than it takes to write the words, Dr. Barnardo was among them, finding out, as he well knows how, whether or not they were in serious earnest in their desire to lead the better life towards which he had proffered them his help.

The arduous work of enquiring into these cases lasted, we believe, till past midnight. The outcome is as follows: Sixty boys have been admitted into the Homes as the result of Wednesday's meeting; while the cases of a large additional number are still under investigation. Of course, such inquiries sometimes occupy a considerable amount of time.

This is but an imperfect peep at one night's rescue work among the neglected young savages of the East-end: one effort to give life for death, health for disease, happiness for misery, to those who never before may have had the alternatives placed deliberately before them. Does not the true Christian heart throb with unutterable sympathy for such Samaritan work as this? For the thousands of children who yet remain longing for deliverance, what shall we say? That the Father of us all is yearning to bless them, if but some of his stewards will prepare the channels through which the blessing may flow.

RICHARD WEAVER has been at work in Edinburgh—the Drill Hall, Carubbers-close Mission Hall, and elsewhere, and much blessing has rested on his labours.

EDINBURGH CASTLE.—Despite the inclemency of the weather, very large congregations assembled on Lord's Day last, when Mr. Varley was the preacher. Quite a number of awakened and anxious souls in the after meeting received the word, and went away rejoicing in Christ.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain a portrait of Pastor Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, with biographical sketch, and an important paper just written by Mr. Brown, on "Poverty, Clean and Squalid."

The Week of Prayer has been very extensively observed throughout this and other lands. May we not look for, and confidently expect, abundant answers to the united prayers that have ascended to God, in a revived Church life, and a consequent ingathering, at home and abroad, of those who have hitherto been straying on the mountains of indifference, neglect, or avowed unbelief? We give in this issue summarised notes of many of the addresses delivered at the London meetings; some are unavoidably held over till our next, including an important one on "The Christian Life," by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, and a report of the meetings of Saturday.

In the interesting account given on another page of the New Year's meetings held by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, it will be observed that Mr. Wilkinson, the Director, greatly desires to distribute among Jews on the Continent a large number of copies of a new Hebrew translation of the New Testament. This project is one that must commend itself heartily to every Christian, Jew and Gentile alike, and we hope Mr. Wilkinson will be greatly encouraged in the effort by the practical sympathy of his fellow-believers.

The cry for "Church Reform" has, for the nonce at least, taken the place of the movement towards the separation of Church and State. Whatever may be the fate of the latter, there is little difference of opinion as to the need of the former, as the pages upon pages of correspondence in our newspapers, both secular and religious, amply testify. In a lengthy letter to The Times last week, Lord Radstock, foreseeing that the Church of England is on the eve of great changes in its practical working, puts in a strenuous plea for a correct definition of the term "Churchmen." He rejects, as untenable from a Scriptural point of view, the notion that the term can be synonymous either with "baptized persons," or with "communicants."

He thus puts the thing in a nutshell, as it appears to us:—"Most thoughtful people would say that a national church should as nearly as possible comprehend the followers of Christ in the nation." And, again:—

> If membership in the national church were made to depend on real Christianity rather than on adherence to rubrical uniformity, and if in the government of that church it was recognised that the Apostolic order was, to "keep the unity of the spirit," and not to compel uniformity of method, then the energy and devotion of hundreds of thousands of devoted Christians, who are now in separation, if not in antagonism to one another, could be united by the bond of the one common life under the one Head to make known the Gospel at home and abroad. Thus, instead of the scandal to Europe which Canon Liddon fears, that England is abandoning the Christian faith, it would be seen that Christian life had taken a larger and more powerful development.

The admission to power of "the laity," in church government, is one of the most knotty and crucial questions, and there will be much contention, we fear, before a satisfactory settlement is reached—so far have we departed from primitive and apostolic simplicity and community of feeling. Our chief sorrow is that, meantime, the real aggressive work of the Christian Church in these realms must inevitably suffer neglect.

In spite of divisions among Christians, attempted alliances between the Church and the world, and the oppositions of infidelity and vice, there has rarely been a period when Christ's faithful witnesses entered on a new year with such vantage-ground. A destructive criticism of the New Testament books has been brought to confusion, and the grand facts of the Old Testament have asserted their historical value. Among the latter, few investigations promise to be more fruitful than those relating to the migration of Abram.

The recent work of the Bishop of Durham (Macmillan & Co.) on the Ignatian Epistles and Polycarp may well take a place among the most important contributions to Biblical criticism. Because the letters of Ignatius, written on his way to martyrdom in Rome, bear overwhelming testimony to the existence of the Church and the New Testament writings at the beginning of the second century, the author of "Supernatural Religion," and others of the same school, have done their utmost to discredit them. Dr. Lightfoot not merely vindicates the genuineness of the letters, but proves that the methods of these hostile critics are capricious and unhistorical. It is hardly too much to say that, before this astonishing advance, the Tübingen reconstruction of the New Testament has received its death-blow.

With respect to Mr. Gladstone's important article on Genesis i., in this month's Nineteenth Century, the main argument of which we gave last week, several further matters may be indicated. A material point in Professor Huxley's paper was that different orders of population are represented in the Mosaic account as having been produced in three distinct and successive periods of time. Mr. Gladstone contends that this objection is arbitrary, and lies altogether beyond the natural force of the words, which teach that while there was a certain time of creation, the component classes were, from that time, in course of production.

He argues, further, that whatever fossiliferous rocks may now tell scientists, the aim of the sacred writer was to describe the formation of the objects and creatures with which early man was familiar. The introduction of invisible and unknown orders would have injured his purpose. The revelation described the successive origins of life with which human experience was conversant, and it does this in an order which geological authority confirms.

In a postscript to the article, Dr. Dana (Professor of Geology, in Yale College, America) and Dr. Guyot (Professor of the same and of Physical Geography in New Jersey College) are quoted as adhering with increased confidence to the idea of a substantial harmony between modern science and the Mosaic text. The whole controversy is profoundly interesting, as showing that Inspiration begins with the very opening of the Scriptures. The complete solution may not yet be reached, but we have assuredly—as Mr. Gladstone affirms—a cosmogony which combines scientific precision with the majesty, simplicity, intelligibility, and impressiveness, of the Bible record.

It is said by some who are intimately acquainted with Indian affairs, that when natives visit England they seldom return with any positive impressions of Christianity. Not seldom they go back to India as atheists. This is a fearful statement if true, as we fear it is. We mention it for the earnest consideration of such readers as may know any of these Eastern visitors in our midst, that they may do their utmost to show them the attractive beauty and reality of the religion of Jesus Christ.

Rev. Cynddylan Jones, of Cardiff, in a prefatory note to "The Welsh Pulpit of To-day," remarks that "the denominational wall of separation in Wales is based in sentiment and association rather than in doctrine and conviction." This is proved by the harmonious whole to which seven-and-twenty preachers, representing most sections of the Christian Church in Wales, have each contributed their part. Mr. Jones adds: "All earnest men desire closer union, for of Wales it is especially true that division is weakness, while 'union is strength." But this is a truth of universal application. There is no greater hindrance to the spread of the Gospel than sectarian division, unless it be individual indifference. May God deliver his people from this twofold evil!

John did not speak hyperbolically when he closed his Gospel by saying that if all the things which Jesus did were written every one, the world itself could not contain the books. There was more in that one short life than in all the lives of other men; and every man would receive his own impression from each act and word. For no two persons see the same rainbow: no two see the same Jesus. Matthew sees a King; Mark sees a Servant; Luke sees a Son of Man; John sees a Son of God. Each sees what he has capacity for seeing, though each also sees, according to his measure, what the others see. Let us be careful how we judge the view of the Master taken by any of our fellow-servants.

"But God raised Him from the dead." Nothing could exceed the stately dignity of these calm words, in which again and again the Apostles gave witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. They are the Divine denial of the foolish boast, "Vox populi, vox Dei." The Holy Spirit had asked, "Why do the people imagine a vain thing?" anticipating the time when the Gentiles and the people of Israel gathered together to do what His hand and His counsel had determined before to be done. When they had fulfilled all that was written of the Christ, and had slain the Prince of Life, then He that sitteth in the heavens laughed; Jehovah had them in derision. God raised Him from the dead.

With the same majestic simplicity the Psalm, in the prophetic past, proclaims, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion!" Not by the voice of the people but by the voice of God will Jesus reign. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn till He shall come whose right it is—['The government shall be upon his shoulder!']—and I will give it Him!" Is it not remarkable that the distress of nations, with perplexity, which now exists, arises mainly from the instability of the various Governments? Unlike these, righteousness and judgment are the foundation of his throne whose kingdom ruleth over all.

The Church Missionary Society have arranged to hold simultaneous meetings in nearly 150 cities and towns in all parts of England, in the second week of February, with a view to setting forth the claims of foreign missions. Details will appear in our next issue.

There are many Christians in these days, when evil seems to be intensified and often triumphant, who forget the comforting assurance of the Saviour, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." It may be helpful to them, if their faith needs extraneous support, to take as a commentary upon the Master's words, some figures published by Professor Schem, one of the greatest living statisticians. The professor states that 685,459,411 people are living in "Christian countries," and 711,838,589 in non-Christian: 32,419,470 square miles of the area of the earth are under Christian governments, and 19,942,555 under non-Christian. In other words, nearly one-half of the population of the world is under Christian influence of a more or less potent kind.

Taking this in connection with the facts that Christ's assurance was spoken to only a few disciples, and as yet not a century has been spent in sustained and intense missionary effort on the part of the English-speaking races, there is room for thanksgiving and praise, and we may hopefully look forward to the entire fulfilment of the early promise to Moses, "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord."

At the same time, to be under a Christian government, or to be living in a "Christian country," does not necessarily involve personal loyalty to Christ; while to the large number of heathens abroad must be added the great army of heathens at home in our midst, who are living virtually "without God," and, alas for themselves, "without hope in the world." In Great Britain and Ireland, if it be true, as undoubtedly it is, that the fields indeed are white unto the harvest, it is equally true that the labourers are few, and there is therefore ample room for the cultivation of a missionary spirit on the part of those Christians who are unable to set themselves apart for labour in foreign and far-off lands. The man for whom Christ did "great things" was bidden by the Divine Master to go "home" and to tell his friends what the Lord had done for him, and it is recorded for us that when he obeyed all men did marvel.

"A Christian Girl behind the Counter," who states that she has been at business for over eight years, urges that very little is done for shop-assistants by those who have it in their power to do much. Commenting upon the dangers and temptations which surround young girls in such employment in large cities, she urges that a little sympathy with the girls who serve them, on the part of the lady customers, sympathy evinced even only in the giving of such a tract as that published under the auspices of the Y.W.C.A., "Perils of Young Girls away from Home," and, when possible, by a few kindly words, might, with God's blessing, be the means of saving a girl from the snares of the tempter and of bringing a soul to Christ. There certainly is room for much quiet Christian effort in this direction. Without in any way trespassing upon that time which belongs to the employer, ladies might seize many opportunities of speaking a few words of comfort and encouragement to those who frequently are alone in the midst of a crowd.

Alluding to the communication headed "A Crying Shame," which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN for December 24, and in sending a subscription to Miss Virgo's Work amongst Young Women, a lady says:—

> This crying shame is perpetrated by some of the best houses at the West-end of London, who are not ashamed to grind down, and defraud, those by whose services they are acquiring wealth.

No real blessing can attend the possession of wealth which has been heaped together at the cost of the bodies and souls of others, and employers who cast into the streets on the Sabbath morning, houseless and homeless for the day, those for whom they are responsible in the sight of God, cannot thrust aside that punishment which God has threatened He will not turn away from those who have "sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes."

The example set by Mr. and Mrs. Russell Hurditch in gladly welcoming "in the name of the Lord" any of those thrust out into the street on the Lord's day is well worthy of imitation by others whom God has blessed with a happy home. Now that the bitter wrong has been set before the public we trust many Christians will act as the Lord's stewards. In thus showing kindness to those who are forced into a position of temptation and danger they may practically show that they have learned of the Spirit of Christ.

A Conference on the "Evangelisation of the World" is to be held in Melbourne Hall, Leicester, in the first week of February next.

An extraordinary case of boycotting, not in Ireland, but in England, has just come to our ears. Mr. John P. Fison, a Christian worker, has resided during the last five years at his paternal home at Horningsea, near Cambridge, by special invitation. On December 15, his father, 93 years of age, was induced to spend a week at a younger son's in the village. During that time J. P. Fison was summarily turned into the street, and, failing to obtain his bed-clothes, was driven to find shelter in the workhouse on Christmas-eve, and returned, on Christmas morning, to live in an unfurnished house, and to sleep on a straw mattress. Not only so, but others under the same influence threaten people in the village that if they show him hospitality or do any work for him, they will never employ them any more. The cause would appear to be that Mr. John Fison is a zealous Christian, and some time ago set on foot a coffee tavern. There is a mortgage upon this house and land which is called in. There seems to be a determination to drive him out of the village.

We believe Mr. Fison to be a good man, and have proved our belief by advancing him some pecuniary help. It is an important thing to maintain him in possession of the coffee tavern, which may otherwise be turned into a public-house. We shall be happy to receive communications of any kind from those who are opposed to boycotting for righteousness' sake.

Some of the pellets of Colonel Ingersoll and Mr. Bradlaugh are very easily pinched into powder by Miss von Finkelstein in her admirable lectures on the Holy Land. Last week we had the pleasure of listening to her at the Baptist Chapel, Crouch-hill, and also at the Metropolitan Tabernacle; on both occasions she gave striking examples of the mistaken criticism of these sceptical Iconoclasts. We cannot, of course, reproduce at length Miss Finkelstein's inimitable talks. We recommend our readers to hear and see her for themselves.

☞ A great meeting will be held in Exeter Hall on Monday, January 18, to welcome Mr. W. T. Stead on the evening of his release from prison. The chair will be taken at 7.30 p.m. by the Right Hon. J. Stansfeld, M.P., and the following, among others, are expected to be on the platform: Mrs. Butler, Mrs. Fawcett, Mrs. Fenwick Miller, the Hon. Auberon Herbert, Mr. C. B. MacLaren, M.P., Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Rev. B. Waugh, Mr. W. Bramwell Booth. Reserved seat tickets, price 1s., may be purchased at this office.

In the recent death at Cairo of Judge Sheldon Amos, the cause of national and individual righteousness has lost an ardent friend and able advocate. We can ill spare such a man at the present crisis of our nation's history: may his mantle fall on some one equally gifted and equally devoted.

Judging from the accounts in some of our American exchanges the Mormon system at Salt Lake City appears to be in extremis, through the determined action of the United States officials in applying the law against polygamy. Every true-minded citizen of the great Republic, not to mention those in other lands whose friends have been beguiled, will rejoice when this unholy and Satanic imposture is made a clean end of.

A letter, signed by a large number of Christian students at Oxford and Cambridge, is being sent to youths attending our great public schools, inviting them to join the Schoolboys' Scripture Union (Secretary, T. B. Bishop, 48, Paternoster-row). This movement is one that ought to receive the widest encouragement, and is fraught, we believe, with untold blessing for the immediate future of the nation.

Mr. Henry Varley has written a new pamphlet on "Mr. Bradlaugh and the Proposed Affirmation Bill" (1d. J. Kensit). He shows the competency of the existing law to meet every exigency which can arise, and proves that Mr. Bradlaugh is alone responsible for the difficulty of the position in which he is placed. Mr. Varley's paper is addressed to the members of the Legislature, but it is well worthy of careful perusal by all who have taken an interest in this burning question.

Philip Henry Gosse, F.R.S., the well-known naturalist, is not so widely known as a Christian teacher. His volume of essays, entitled, "The Mysteries of God" (Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d.) is, however, well worthy the study of Christians. A reviewer in The Monthly Record of the Protestant Evangelical Mission for this month writes thus concerning it:—

> In youth it was our desire to walk as Christ walked. We would have given anything for a simple, honest Biography of Him. We often wondered that in those years of a man's life which are especially important—from twelve to thirty—the Evangelists do not give us one hint as to how Jesus spent His life, other than that He was a "Carpenter." Often did we wish that God had been pleased to give us more details of the life of Him with whom He declared Himself "well pleased." By a very singular incident we were led to purchase a book written by P. H. Gosse, "The Mysteries of God." We found it deeply interesting, but the chapters, "Christ in the Psalms" thrillingly so. Therein is given the Biography we so long sought; and so written, in the language of Prophecy, that one is compelled to enter with reverent steps the sanctuary, and listen with circumcised ear and heart to what the oracles of God utter. We now bless God unfeignedly, both for the silence of the EVANGELIST and the Revelation of the PROPHET. Had the Biography been written by an Evangelist and not by a Prophet it would have been very difficult for many Christians to read the narrative without being "offended."

The book contains many other valuabl and suggestive papers on important an unbeaten lines of thought.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR WITH MISS MACPHERSON.

IT was a dark misty morning; nevertheless children's voices were floating merrily around, as we elder workers were awaking from our slumbers, at the Hackney Training Home. Soon after six o'clock they were surrounding our bedroom doors, singing their glad carols, and Hallelujah to the angels' song. Dear little ones! to them it was a glad and happy day, and to some of them the first time that so many mercies and such loving-kindness had been their portion.

During the morning hours the Refuge workers dropped in, bright and joyous, anticipating a long, happy day with the children. Orphaned workers to-day esteem it a high honour awarded them, in being permitted to wait upon our fresh family of destitute and friendless little ones at dinner.

The blessing asked upon the midday meal had woven in it many a thanksgiving, and was followed by a soft hush of grateful sighs, and murmuring of echoing "Amens." "Can these be wandering waifs?" asked one fresh worker. Yes, these are they, who are lent to us by the Lord of glory for a few brief years, that we may tell them the story of his wondrous love. High honour thus to wait upon them, and see in them the loved Babe of Bethlehem accepting our offering, our motive purified by his own perfected service as High Priest, and now waiting to help us with the grace to follow in his steps.

Meals over, and each one refreshed, we mingle again in the school-room, about seventy in number, one of the happiest families in all the land. We overhear one telling to another memories of other days, and, child-like, repeated loud enough for older ears to hear. Another tells of having had only a crust of dry bread thrown to him the previous Christmas, by his drunken father. Several had spent their day in the workhouse, and no such bright cheer as this had fallen to their portion. Some of the little girls have as yet scarcely recovered (even if their brief lives ever had any sunshine in them) the power of childhood's merry laughter. The number of those called "deserted" daily increases; still it will be our joy to teach them yet to say, "Mother," and to know a father's care too.

Afternoon hours flit swiftly by, filled with merry singing and joyous fun, as old and young together endeavour to make each other happy. We look on for a few moments, adoring the grace which brought us to know the East of London, twenty-two years ago, and most of all for the love given to us for the poor children who have few of their own to care for them. It is a joy to look on our forty-seventh family! Our hearts are warmer than ever to save another child, and by God's help place another thousand beyond the reach of city temptations in the wide Dominion of Canada.

Christmas presents, oranges, and sweet-bags were not wanting; honey upon the children's bread, the gift of a young lady in the country. The happy day closed as usual with kind words from our young nephews, and fervent prayers for the Holy Spirit to rest upon these young hearts, that they should be washed in the precious Blood, and join us to sing his praises in heaven.

The following Lord's Day such a blessed answer came to these longings. The weather was still grey and foggy, but it was the opposite in our happy Home. During the afternoon about twenty of the elder boys sat with us around the dining-room fire; we talked familiarly of all sorts of things, but gradually leading them to the one thing needful. Whilst deep stillness rested upon us, we heard again the Master's voice: "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" Ere long, without the least excitement, lad after lad fell on his knees, weeping bitterly. Soon broken voices were heard asking for mercy and forgiveness. The eldest, and apparently most hardened, was up early the next morning, writing to his father (a Christian man) the glad news that the dead was alive, the lost found.

On the following day we abode still at the Hackney Home, and continued our conversations around the fireside with the lads. A tender, inquiring spirit was among them, and we were at home with each other. My thought was to show them what God's blessed book says about our sins when we have trusted the Lord Jesus. "Put away by the sacrifice of Himself." It is helpful, when training the young, to get their own ideas of the words we use in conveying our fluent thoughts. We are often brought face to face with the fact, that they are like very narrow-necked bottles, and much is spilt in the process of filling, by our anxious desires to give our own views.

"Put away," says one boy, "means to lay it by in the pawnshop."

"Sacrifice," means "to sell cheap," as his father used to do on his coster's barrow on Saturday nights.

"Purged." They could only imagine that senna and salts and jalap could do that!

"Forgiven." This was easy. Seven rose, and told stories they had heard about forgiveness, mostly incidents from tracts, and their own experience.

"Love," shown by hair-breadth escapes in the streets, in a burning house; two had been rescued from drowning by loving help.

Our scholars talked a great deal more than we did, and we found out where they were wrong or ignorant. Our hearts burned to say the right words: very few sufficed, and their young hearts were drawn closer to ours. The deep yearning that they all might be saved, was, we believe, being answered. They are babes as yet, desiring the "sincere milk of the Word," and are often seen creeping up to their bedside to pray, when overtaken by a fault.

The year 1885 closed with an earnest watch-night service, when nearly 200 assembled, most of them poor and homeless. The meeting was conducted by our two nephews and other workers. Before leaving each received a cup of coffee and bread and butter. We were glad again to have this opportunity of giving out the Gospel message during the closing hours of the year.

Early next morning we were busy preparing for the New Year's treat to our widows, men's Bible-class, adult Sunday-school, and members of the mothers' meeting. All were delighted with their unexpected present of a packet of tea, and special thanksgivings were entrusted to us, to give to all the kind donors of warm garments, and the contributors to the cost of the nice dinner and tea. Truly it was a house full of joyful, grateful poor saints. Words fail to convey all the prayerful wishes and thanks expressed.

Former favourite teachers, who spent the happy day with us, were hailed with joy. Widows, of great age, looked calm and peaceful, telling of the rest of soul within. Their talk was hearty; as we passed in and out among them a pair of wrinkled hands would grasp ours, and a kind wish be expressed for another New Year. Many breathed their favourite text into our ears; others had received for us a special one that morning, such as "The joy of the Lord is your strength" (Num. vi. 24). Truly for a few hours it seemed the very vestibule of heaven to be among so many holy, happy poor, who were yet rich in faith.

To the younger mothers, two of us used the opportunity, and gave a strong dose of sound Gospel Temperance. We felt the opportunity was one not to be lost, and the result was that a number signed the pledge. This theme pervades all our work, especially at this season, when drunkenness abounds. We are always looking out to enlarge our Sunday Bible classes, for then we increase our staff of real workers for God among the people living in these courts and alleys around us. It is only as we get individual influence, and become assured that they are born of the Spirit, that we can depend upon their shining for Jesus in the awful darkness of these East-end courts and alleys.

The first Sunday in the New Year, at our adult Sunday-school monthly prayer-meeting, we gave the men and women our motto for the New Year: "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." Then we dealt with them as with our boys and girls in the Training Home; took the motto for our text, and asked what were some of the things they could do, if spared through the New Year. Many of them are very poor, and some almost homeless, depending on pittances from hour to hour. Not a few faces were beautiful, shining with love to our blessed Lord, willing to obey that word, "If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." Answers rose quickly from responsive hearts:—

"Nurse our neighbours when they are ill." "Make an old woman's bed, and keep the room clean and tidy." "Get or give a cup of tea to those who need it." "Make them a bowl of broth." "Mind the children while 'mother' goes to the hospital with the sick one." "Clean up a neighbour's place when she is busy." "Make a little custard for one dying of consumption." "Lend some of your bedclothes to those who have none." "Give the blind a helping hand" (we have no less than six blind women in our adult school). "Persuade those who drink to give it up." "Keep on persuading them to give it up." "Pray for unconverted kindred." "Live before them, and show forth patience."

Thus it is our happy privilege to live among the poor, enjoying foretastes of heaven, learning from them sweet lessons of love and Christ-like self-denial.

Before this reaches the eye of the reader, the treats for Sunday-school children, factory girls, and the sick and poor in workhouses and infirmaries will belong to the past. We are happy to be your almoners, and now tender our united thanks to our many kind helpers for the cuffs, comforters, toys, cards, &c. How sweet to remember that when the motive is pure, the smallest service done for the Lord will not be forgotten. Certainly fragments of time have been most lovingly used, in preparing these many warm garments for the poor at this season, when so many bread-winners are out of work.

We think it desirable to form a paid sewing class for our "Mothers," as many decent families scarcely know how to exist; yet we never hear a murmur. The garments made would clothe the several hundreds of destitute little ones, whom we hope to plant out in Canada during the coming spring and summer. This would tend towards honest independence, and twice turn over any shilling thus expended. We have plenty of lady workers, clever-handed, ready to superintend when funds are sent for this purpose. Annie Macpherson.

"LET HIM THAT HEARETH SAY, COME."

O THOU who hast heard the sweet Saviour's voice,
Which told thee of pardon and sin forgiven,
And found in believing such rest and peace,
The foretaste on earth of the joy of heaven,
Art thou telling to others, "Christ suffered for thee,
He's able to save thee—He savèd me"?

Remember e'en now that the day draws near
When Christ will sit down on his judgment throne
Will any be there who have heard from thee
The news of salvation through Him alone?
Will anyone give thee the greeting so sweet:
"'Twas thou who didst lead me to Jesus' feet"?

Is "No" the reply which thy heart returns?
Then now 'mid the perishing souls around
Go spread the glad news, "There is pardon free,
The gift of that Saviour whom I have found."
And soon thou wilt prove that no work is so blest
As leading the weary to Christ for rest.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on mission services at Congregational Chapel, Church Stretton, by Mrs. K. Yeoland.——That an abundant blessing may rest on a Gospel mission in Lowestoft.——For special individual and united prayer, on Sunday, the 17th inst., that God may graciously guide and bless the efforts to get the sale of intoxicating liquors stopped during the whole of Sunday; and that the Bill for this object may be passed in the first session of the new Parliament.

"A GRAVE CHARGE."

DEAR SIR,—I am not surprised at the indignation of "H. G. M.," expressed in your issue of December 31; and my delay in answering his challenge is owing to the desire to make the answer complete.

Having seen the extended notes of a shorthand writer who attended the meeting referred to in my letter of December 24, I find that my statement was substantially correct, except that I used the word "abroad" instead of "in India." The statement was made by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, at a public meeting for men only, in London, on November 26 last.

Its accuracy is confirmed by extracts from replies elicited by the Royal Commission on the Contagious Diseases Acts. As I do not wish, unnecessarily, to repeat in detail the accusation brought against our military authorities, let me refer "H. G. M." and others to two sermons preached in Salisbury Cathedral, by Rev. Prebendary Fowle, entitled "Aholah and Aholibah" (Banks, 27, Great George-street, Westminster, 1½d.), and to a little pamphlet, "Modern Heathenism" (Dyer Brothers, Paternoster-square, 1d.), in which the shameful details can be perused. See also, especially, Report of Royal Commission on Contagious Diseases Acts, vol. ii. c. 408. Answers to Questions 15,130, 15,168. 15,179 (Eyre & Spottiswoode).

The history of sin is instructive and awfully solemn; one downward step most surely leads to another and another, all tending to a lower depth of iniquity. The public governmental sanction to vice in the passing of the C.D. Acts was followed by deliberate provision for men's passionate desires, and sinning was made as easy as possible. It may be that such arrangements are more or less localised, and have not been adopted universally in connection with the army and navy of England; but, if not, we believe it is in consequence of public attention having been drawn to the existing wickedness, rather than to any change of mind (repentance) on the part of the authorities; and I must beg to differ with some Christian brethren who wish to impose silence on the Christian Press upon a subject of this kind. In all courtesy, but with much earnestness, I ask them, would they have silenced ancient prophets warning and admonishing princes and peoples on similar subjects? Nowadays the Press seems compelled to usurp the prophet's place, since so many of those who ought to tell forth God's warnings are holding their peace.—I am, dear sir, yours truly,

January 8. LESS THAN THE LEAST.

[We are sure our correspondent did not intend to make a charge against any individual commander or officer, naval or military. His remarks were made with respect to the system, and not to those who enforce it. The influence of godly men, like Havelock, would be such that their regiments would not be likely to demand the hideous supply to which he referred.—ED.]

CARING FOR FRIENDLESS GIRLS.

DEAR SIR,—I wish to draw your attention to the necessity of providing some refuge in every town for young servant girls locked out at night or dismissed suddenly by their employers. During the last six weeks I have accidentally met with three such cases in my own neighbourhood. In two of these, girls of fourteen and fifteen spent the night in the streets or in out-houses. The third girl, aged twelve, I fortunately heard of on New Year's night; I went out to seek her, and brought her home with me. Every year large numbers of friendless girls leave workhouses to go into service. The Local Vigilance Association to which I reported these cases have requested the Guardians to communicate with them whenever a workhouse-girl goes into service in our town; lady visitors are undertaking to call on them, so that they may not feel themselves wholly friendless in any emergency. A respectable lodging has also been provided where they may be taken in temporarily at the expense, if need be, of the Association, and the address has been given to the police, so that any girls they find homeless may be taken there.

Yours faithfully, AGNES COOK.

HELP US TO SAVE THE GIRLS.

DEAR SIR,—May I ask for a little space in your paper to suggest how help may be rendered by your readers and the public, as opportunity may offer, towards checking the hellish traffic in girls for Continental prostitution? Within three weeks of this date I have received information of no less than three girls who, I have no doubt, were taken abroad in the expectation of finding respectable employment, but who are now, I doubt not, in the toils of the procurers, from which there is little, if any, hope of their escape. In the particular cases referred to the girls might have been saved, had those who saw their imminent danger spoken a word of caution to them. This was not done, and they passed over to France, and, I believe, to their certain doom; while those who might have saved them wrote when all clue was lost, and it was too late to attempt their rescue.

The whole subject is painful in the extreme, and surrounded with difficulty; but it becomes especially distressing when we are convinced that innocent and unsuspecting victims are forwarded, as sheep to the shambles, under the very eyes of Christian men and women, who might have saved them by a timely and a kindly word. —Yours, &c., BENJAMIN SCOTT,

Chairman of the Committee for Suppression of the Traffic, &c.

London, January 8.

"A SERIOUS DANGER."

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Varley is quite right in saying, in a recent issue of your paper, that persons are doubting the truth of Mr. Stead's statements made in the columns of The Pall Mall Gazette. There is a strong feeling abroad that the less said concerning these things the better. I think any who are of that opinion would quickly change it had they listened to what I had to hear recently, as one of the grand jury at the Old Bailey Sessions. We had sixteen cases before us of the most dreadful cruelties perpetrated upon young and innocent children. The details of the outrages are too awful even to hint at. Suffice it to say, that out of these sixteen cases, twelve at least were those of little girls between seven and eleven years of age. When some of the jurymen expressed their horror at such crimes being committed upon children so young, Mr. Sims, acting on behalf of the Treasury, in defending some of these babies, said, "It is nothing, gentlemen; we have them sometimes at two years and a half."

I asked one of the ushers of the court, who has occupied his position for thirty years, what he thought of Mr. Stead's revelations—whether he was of the opinion that he had exaggerated. He replied, "No, sir, that would be impossible; and if Mr. Stead had only listened to what I have during my official capacity here, he would have written even stronger than he did." These and similar cases do not appear in the public Press; if they did, it would be impossible to imagine that the statements recently made were in any way overdrawn.

Faithfully yours, EDWIN H. KERWIN.

THE BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND during the past year have effected sales amounting to £8,600, representing nearly a million publications. There are some sixty colporteurs scattered through Ireland, in connection with the Society, and in many places they supply the only means of purchasing Bibles, periodicals, and books; for Ireland is still without book shops, except in the larger cities and towns. Beside the work of colportage, the Society establishes book agencies in smaller towns and villages, for the sale of Bibles and other literature. The Hon. Secretary is Rev. John Elliott, Armagh.

Y.M.C.A., 186, ALDERSGATE-STREET, E.C.—The Salters' Company have voted an annual subscription of £10 10s., and the Goldsmiths' Company a donation of £50, to the funds of this Association. Friends will be glad to hear that the Countess of Aberdeen has kindly undertaken to act as President of the Ladies' Auxiliary Committee, and her sister, Lady Marjoribanks, has agreed to be a member. On Monday next, at 8 p.m., as announced elsewhere, Colonel C. E. Stewart, so well known in connection with Central Asian matters, will deliver a lecture on "Some recent developments of religious fervour in Persia, and the rise of a new religion in that country." A large attendance of friends is desired.

ALL NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

LAST winter we sought to mitigate the bitter cry of the outcast, by opening the Mission Hall, in Thrawl-street, all night, to give shelter to the homeless. The work was resumed in October last, and now we are able to state the result.

A batch of energetic workers betake themselves to the streets, inviting the wanderers to the hall for shelter till the morning. On every occasion they have secured sufficient to fill the hall, and often have had to leave scores of poor fellows without. The poverty and wretchedness met with are most heartrending.

While this process has been going on in the streets, the hall has been opened and warmed for their reception; and the men begin to drop in by ones and twos; then they come almost in a stream till the place is full and the door is shut. Many wait for hours in the cold damp night, hoping to get in, but it is found impossible to admit them for the want of room.

Over 120 men will probably be found in the hall, their ages varying from 76 to 14. There are many from 20 to 40, strong, able-bodied men, willing to work if they could get it. Many declare they have tramped the streets night after night; the only wonder is how they stand such terrible exposure, with little food to sustain them. No wonder that one poor fellow, when the friends were on London Bridge recently, jumped into the river below, crying out that he was tired of life. He was, however, rescued by the Thames police, and, of course, taken care of.

During the night the men lie about on the forms and matting, sleeping and resting as they best can; while others sit and chat, telling their tales of sorrow to each other, and to friends who converse with them. At seven a.m. breakfast is announced. A number of active ladies attend at six o'clock to prepare the meal. The men are supplied in the hall below with an abundance of bread and butter, with a good piece of bacon, and plenty of good hot coffee. To see the way in which they eat is indeed a sight. This over, a religious service is held till nine o'clock. The men are invited to a class at three o'clock in one of the rooms, which many attend.

As many as thirty-six have signed the pledge at the close of one meeting. Many have been assisted with lodgings, and some with work, and altogether much good has been done. Somehow the women manage much better than the men in getting shelter for the night, as we very seldom meet with any. As long as we are able this imperative work will be continued; any Christian reader wishing to know more about it, or to assist in it, can communicate with me as under. JAS. ATKINSON, Secretary.

GIRLS' HOME, CLIFDEN, CONNEMARA.—From this Home, which was founded in 1848, after the famine, many girls have gone forth to service, and many cheering testimonies concerning them have been received. Persecuted by the Romish Church, they are gathered into the Home, where they find shelter and relief. Twelve inmates are now enjoying its advantages. Two others were admitted, but the priest interfered and obliged the mother to take them away. Mrs. M. A. D'Arcy, 16, Vanbrugh Park-road, Blackheath, S.E., will be happy to receive communications.

ROYAL ALFRED AGED MERCHANT SEAMEN'S INSTITUTION.—The Committee wish to inform the public that the Home at Belvedere is capable of receiving 100 more inmates, and the out-pension list is limited by want of funds alone. Since the opening of the Institution 722 old sailors, hailing from 150 ports and places of the United Kingdom, have enjoyed the benefits of this charity, but hundreds of others have reluctantly been refused. Mr. W. E. Denny, the Secretary, will be happy to send reports and pamphlets entitled "Poor Jack," to any who apply at the office, 58, Fenchurch-street, E.C.

THE JUBILEE IN FIJI.

THE celebration is now going on of the fiftieth year of the establishment of the Wesleyan Mission in Fiji; or, in other words, of the beginning and onward progress of Christianity in this fair group of islands, whose more than 150,000 people were benighted with the worst heathen darkness, and notorious for atrocities of the most fearful kind. October 12 was the fiftieth anniversary of the arrival of the two first missionaries, Revs. Wm. Cross and David Cargill at Lakeba, each of these leaders of the vanguard of the Cross bringing an heroic wife with him to a land to which it was a fearful thing for an English lady to come. A special reminder of the event was given by a sermon printed in Fijian at the Mission Press, and circulated throughout the country so as to be read in every pulpit on Sunday, October 11. This gave the natives an admirable sketch of the history of the mission. A sermon somewhat similar was also delivered on that day in the English tongue, and published in the newspapers.

Special deputations from the neighbouring Australasian colonies arrived to congratulate the native churches. Special services and monster gatherings of native Christians have been going on for some weeks past, and are still to be celebrated in various parts of the land. One of the most interesting of the deputations came from Tonga in the person of Ratu Joni Faubula, a Fijian chief, and a native minister, who was the first convert made in this country, and the first Fijian to preach the Gospel. He addressed large meetings of English and Fijians, and in the course of his telling addresses he said: "For my faith I was exiled. My father, Tue Nayan (a man of supreme rank in the Windward Islands), banished me to Tonga because of my religion, and there in Tonga, which was partly heathen then, I preached the Christ, became a native minister, and, after fifty years of service, have returned just to look at my native islands."

When Ratu Joni left Fiji coast there was not a score of Christians on it. Now that he comes back after his long absence he does not find a score of avowed heathen in the whole of the group. Let this fact speak for itself, without it being necessary for me to go into figures. One thing the old chief said "brought down the house" in a large English meeting: "The early missionaries were so threatened, tormented, and annoyed, that once I said to Mr. Cargill, 'Why don't you leave this land, and go?' 'Nay!' replied the Scotchman; 'we of Britain can stand to have our throats cut, but we can't run away!'" Men and women of that heroic mould, filled moreover with the love of souls and devotion to the Master, Christ, aided by natives who caught their spirit, and followed them as they followed Him, wrought such a work in cannibal Fiji, by the blessing of God, as men will scarcely believe when they hear of it. And now, in a land filled with churches, where every village has a school, and all the children are taught to read and write; when man-eating and polygamy, torture and horrid forms of war are things of the past, and the light of Christian teaching shines over the length and breadth of its hundreds of islands, there are sounding now the silver trumpets of Jubilee, and men cry in their gladness, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, goodwill to men!" "Hallelujah! For the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ!"

As a proof of the reality of this work, over which the Jubilee clarions are sounding, let me mention that last Saturday morning the mission vessel Moeeyan sailed away from Levuka Harbour with a band of youthful Fijian preachers—some of them with wives—for the far-off wild and deterrent country of New Britain and adjacent islands, haunt of ague, and abode of lawless savages. Here there is no inconsiderable mission work going on, which was commenced ten years ago. Only the edge of the work is touched as yet, and the labourers faint at their work through sheer physical weariness, and some lie down to rest for ever. Fresh soldiers are required year by year, and here were some. Converted themselves, they offered to face all that that land of savagery presented to them, and they have gone there in true self-sacrifice, evidencing the genuineness of their own religion, and the love of Christ constraining them.

"A marvellous thing," said a gentleman to me the other day, "that these erstwhile savages should go off themselves to preach to savages." As I stood on the deck giving them a parting address my eye rested on Animio Bale, their leader and minister. He was one of the first party that went to New Britain. Right before us stood the Government buildings in Nasora Bay, where that band of pioneers had been interrogated by Mr. Administrator Layard as to whether they knew of the evils of the country to which their missionaries were taking them. And an appalling feature did that official gentleman draw of the disease and danger and general misery to which they were hastening. And Animio spoke up for the rest. "All these things have been told us by our missionaries already. We are willing to leave ourselves in God's hands. If we live, we live! and if we die, we die!" And that answer settled the question. Now, ten years after, Animio was looking at the same pile of buildings in which he had played his part so manfully then, and, as I reminded him, how God had dealt with him in accordance with that speech, and how much easier the path had really been to what it seemed, and that he, spared so long, was enabled to return to so glorious, if trying, a sphere, his eyes moistened, and doubtless his mind, as mine, was filled with many thoughts.

I must not forget, in speaking of the great events of the Jubilee, to mention one charming little incident. At our Levuka native Jubilee gathering a large number of pretty cards were put into the hands of the Fijians to keep between the leaves of their Testaments. They came as a thoughtful, beautiful present from a lady in England (Mrs. Johnstone), who had availed herself of the taste of Mrs. Grimké, of Manchester, whose name I have seen more than once in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN. You doubtless know what these cards are, with a pretty design in one corner, and the sweet words of a Gospel passage, printed in different colours, and with elegant types, and in the Fijian's own mellifluous tongue. The native Bible-readers—and they are very numerous—are delighted with these charming presents of the kind English lady.

Levuka, Nov. 3, 1885. ARTHUR J. WEBB.

THE WANDSWORTH WATERSIDE LABOURERS.

ON the borders of Wandsworth and Battersea, and along the bank of the Thames, there is a large, densely-populated, and poverty-stricken district, inhabited in great part by waterside labourers, bargemen, and others. Here, as elsewhere, the deadly fruits of drink, vice, and infidelity are seen on every hand. The public-houses are crowded, the women are degraded, the children are old in sin. This condition of things was observed some time ago with deep sorrow by a few Christian friends, members of the Open-air Mission, and a small band of workers commenced an open-air service in the neighbourhood on Sunday afternoons, which has been carried on regularly with success, numbers of working-men gathering Sunday after Sunday to listen to the Gospel message.

At the corner of the street in which the meetings had been conducted stood an empty house, with a large shop-front, the latter admirably adapted for fitting up as a mission hall. With the help of various friends the hall, which had been comfortably but plainly fitted up, was lately opened with tokens of great interest on the part of the population around. Further help to sustain this good work is urgently needed, as it is desired to fit up the upper rooms as reading-rooms for the men and youths of the district, as a counter-attraction to the public-house. The name of the organisation carrying on the work is the Onward Christian Mission, and the Hon. Secretary is Mr. Frank Cockrem, Open-air Mission Office, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

PASTOR A. G. BROWN'S ANNIVERSARY.

ON Monday week the nineteenth anniversary of the pastor of the East London Tabernacle was held. In spite of persistent rain about 2000 persons gathered in the tabernacle. The chair was occupied by Mr. James Coxeter, of Highgate-road. After a season spent in singing and prayer, the chairman asked the pastor to make a statement concerning the work of God in his hands.

Mr. Brown then gave, among other incidents, the following facts and figures: During the nineteen years it had been his privilege to give the right hand of fellowship to over three thousand five hundred persons, the vast majority of whom had been won directly from the world. This blessing had followed the plain preaching of the truth. If preaching Christ in the Saxon tongue failed to draw the people they must stay away. Experience, however, for many years had convinced him that the Gospel was still the greatest attractive power with the masses. The novelty of Calvary never wears off. Reference was made to the Orphan Home, and to the fact that one of the lads had decided to devote himself to foreign mission work.

With regard to the outside mission work, which has gradually grown up with him, Mr. Brown gave the following figures:—During the past year the missionaries had made 26,340 visits; those visits only were reckoned where there had been actual personal intercourse with the people. Mr. Brown deprecated the mere calling at a door and leaving a tract being called "a visit." Relief had been granted 8428 times, 3938 sick ones had been attended and helped, and 112 death-beds visited, and the dying pointed to the Saviour. With regard to the relief afforded, the following figures, among others, were given: The Seaside Home had been maintained at the cost of £338; special cases of distress had cost £104; 35,490 loaves had been given away; 80 cwt. of rice, 2502 lbs. of meat, 35,958 lbs. of potatoes. Help had been given in saving homes from the broker's man; in purchasing sewing machines; in emigration; in sending the poor to various Homes in the country; in rescuing girls; in providing garments for the destitute. Concerning the latter, Mr. Brown said that every garment given away was booked. The total consisted of 5615 different garments. The cost of Home Mission work, including Orphan and Seaside Homes, now exceeded £2000 a year. Money and garments had come in from all parts of the kingdom. There never had been any debt on any branch of the work, and there never would be, as he would close it first. He looked trustfully to God to provide for his own work.

Rev. J. T. Wigner, New Cross, followed, and was succeeded by Revs. T. Skerry, of Woodbury Down; A. Sturge, of Dartford, and Fleming Shearer, of Mile-end. The meeting was an exceedingly joyous one, and many a kind wish was expressed for this the twentieth year of Mr. Brown's work in East London.

MISSION TO SAILORS, MADEIRA.—The past year's needs have been met, says the report, and the work carried on with success. Many hundreds of vessels entered the port, and thousands of tracts were given to the crews and passengers. One said, "I have come to tell you that I was converted by means of a tract which you gave me, and am now an active member of the Church. I could give you the names of several other men who have been converted in the same way." The Treasurer is Major Toone, Qumta do Ribeiro Secco, Funchal.

REGENT'S-PARK COLLEGE, N.W.—The Preaching Station Society have published their annual report. Eleven spheres of labour have been regularly occupied by the students, who report favourably of the work done. The Society undertakes to supply churches which are unable to sustain a pastor, and in this way some of the small churches ultimately become self-supporting. The Committee earnestly commend their work to the ministers and members of the denomination, who may render them valuable assistance, either by suggesting new spheres of labour or by subscribing toward the defrayal of its expenses. Mr. Alfred Thompson is the Secretary.

ALL AND IN ALL.

"The abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee."—ISAIAH lx. 5.

REJOICE, rejoice, ye isles afar,
  Rejoice each mountain, hill, and plain,
For o'er the night we see the Star
  Of Morn rise from the boundless main.
Soon shall the darkness vanquished be,
And light shall dawn beyond the sea.

Oft have the fishers toiled in vain;
  The prince of darkness still doth keep
Those treasuries where rich gems have lain,
  The caverns of the ocean deep.
But now e'er long Christ's power shall be Triumphant o'er the farthest sea.

Toil on, toil on, through storm and calm,
  Safe shall your spoils be gathered in;
Firm is the Rock, no gale shall harm
  While trophies from the depths ye win.
Anchor of Hope! "Thine, Lord, shall be,
Thine the abundance of the sea."

Toil on, toil on, spread far and wide
  The nets, for One is standing near;
Doubt not, but cast on every side;
  Soon ye the Master's voice shall hear.
Let the rich harvest of the sea
Be gathered for eternity.

O glorious day! Faith sees thy beams
  Shine o'er the universe. Where night
Still broods, or dawn but darkly gleams,
  God shall proclaim, "Let there be light;"
And Christ our King shall come, to be
Lord over all the earth and sea!

"BEFORE THEY CALL I WILL ANSWER."

ARE we modern Christians in the habit of receiving definite answers to definite petitions, or is such experience exceptional? Do we usually expect our Heavenly Father to manifest Himself to us by supplying our wants in little things, and in direct personal reference to our needs and prayers? Surely the loss, physical and spiritual, incurred by the lack of definite purpose and expectancy in prayer is incalculable.

We have lately heard, in familiar talk with Rev. J. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, how quite recently, in his own experience and in different ways, he has proved the blessing of going to God with clearly specified need, and with definite expectancy. We give our readers the benefit of one of these instances.

The last week of September, 1885, had come, and by Oct. 1. a large sum must be paid in salaries to his missionaries. The sum in hand on the current account was quite insufficient. For a week he prayed that the Lord would send him all he wanted, but no answer came. Yet, no! There did come to him, as he prayed again and again, an answer he had not looked for. He had at the Bank another, a deposit account, a sort of reserve fund of about £300, which for sufficient reason, as he thought, he was very unwilling to use for ordinary expenses. He believed it would soon be wanted for other purposes. As he prayed, he was led more and more to think of this reserve. "Why ask for more when you have it? If you profess to trust, can you not trust for your extraordinary as well as for your ordinary needs?" At the end of the week he felt that in this thought he had got his answer. He accordingly threw the whole of his reserve fund into the current account, paid the salaries due on October 1, and had money in hand.

But a further answer was on its way. Just five days after his decision there came a cheque from Australia, drawn six weeks before, for £100. "Before they call I will answer."

PASTOR CHINIQUY'S NEW BOOK.—SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to say that I have received from Pastor Chiniquy's publishers a packet of his "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," and shall be happy to send a copy of it, post free, to any address for one guinea.—Your obliged,

ROBERT A. STEELE.

Letters to the Editor.

RAGGED SCHOOL WORK.

DEAR SIR,—Your recent notice of the suggestions of a "Lady Correspondent," that young ladies might be usefully engaged as voluntary visitors and teachers in Board Schools, leads me to say a few words in accordance with your own observations upon ragged schools as presenting an excellent sphere for the consecrated energies of Christian young women, and where their services would be of great value. I suppose that it would be found upon inquiry in all the chief centres of our population where ragged schools are established, that there is a scarcity of teachers. In Manchester every Sunday evening between eight and nine thousand children attend our ragged schools, and more could be gathered in, but the great want is teachers. The instruction is needed, the children are there, but a full supply of teaching power is lacking. Earnest, devoted young Christians may do much in helping forward this important work.

Where it is not possible to attend on Sunday evenings, something may be done in various ways during the week. Most ragged schools have sewing classes, and in these valuable service may be rendered by young ladies teaching the use of the needle, which is a most important part of the education of this class of girls. Besides the direct teaching of sewing and making garments, a well-conducted sewing-class may be made a source of recreation to girls after their day's ordinary work, and may also afford an opportunity for religious instruction, and the inculcating those Christian principles which are the foundation of virtuous, useful and holy lives.—I am, yours truly,

RICHD. LE MAIR,
Treasurer, Manchester and Salford Sunday
Marple, Cheshire. Ragged School Union.

PRAYER FOR THE NATION.

SIR,—The article in THE CHRISTIAN for Dec. 31, headed "A Call to Prayer for Ireland," gives occasion for very serious reflection. The call for united prayer and confession is most opportune, but prayer must be intelligent and confession must be real and thorough if we hope to prevail against the tremendous power of evil. We need to be as those children of Issachar who came to David, "men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do" (1 Chron. xii. 32), and, like Nehemiah and Daniel, who can take up the grievous burden of national, Church, and individual sins, and make them our own in heartbroken confession to God (Neh. ix; Dan. ix.).

It is impossible to separate the case and condition of Ireland from that of England. Moral corruption saps the very foundations of the national life—social, commercial, religious, and political.

Turn to the history of Israel as a nation, when suffering at God's hand because of those abominations which were the result of departure from Him, and what is the complaint God makes? He says: "I sought for a man among them that should . . . stand in the gap before Me for the land, that I should not destroy it, but I found none" (Ezek. xxii. 30). Long before, when they fell into gross idolatry under the very shadow of Sinai, a man was found, for Moses "stood before God in the breach," and, by the audacious faith of his vehement prayer, saved the nation from entire destruction (Ps. cvi. 23). At the same time, the very man, who could thus plead for his nation's pardon, even at the cost of his own destruction (Ex. xxxii. 32), was the same who executed unsparing judgment on the idolaters.

And when, in their after history, the gross outward abominations of idolatry had given place to the more deadly, because fair-seeming, pharisaic hypocrisy, God Himself raised up a man (John i. 6) fearlessly to expose the rottenness which was festering in the nation's life, under the fair covering of the "whited sepulchre" of correct religious observance.

Is not this one of the crying needs of this day in every department of the national life? Thank God for the few who have dared to brave the voice of public opinion in the fearless exposure of vice; but the conscience of the nation can hardly be said to have been awakened. And truly the heart sinks as we contemplate the political situation, and as we look round on the crowd of mere party politicians that is about to fill our senate house.

Let us then cry to God, not merely for Ireland, but for the nation, that its sleeping conscience may be thoroughly aroused to see the true state of affairs, and, by God's help, put an end to it. Let us ask that true men of God may be raised up to do his will, both in the Church and in the State; and may all the Christians in the land rise to the dignity of their position as intercessors with God, and, like Abraham, seek to avert the doom which threatens our country.

PRISONERS AND POOR IN CORSICA.

SIR,—Some extracts from a letter just received from our evangelist in the interior of Corsica may interest your readers, and, I hope, enlist the sympathy of the Christian public in a peasantry so entirely neglected, and steeped in ignorance and superstition. We are unable, for lack of funds, to respond to the appeal of our agents for more extended operations. The treasurer of the mission in the interior of Corsica is Mr. Donald Matheson, 120, Queen's-gate, S.W.:—

Corte, Christmas Day, 1885.

"Permission was granted on Christmas Eve to go to the prison here with some food for the prisoners. It was a trifling action, but as no one else ever thought of the prisoners, and I am an Englishman, it went a long way as a fact. Of course, it permitted me to say some words à propos, and opened the way for returning. The prison is a veritable dungeon; the cells are underground, and the light reaching them is of the faintest by day, and at night (it was dusk when I went), the only light is a wick dimly burning in a glass of oil, in a cell containing ten men. There are six of these cells, with about ten prisoners in each. Not one of those incarcerated is there for any crime. They are poor fellows who could not pay their rent, or have been guilty of contravention of the slightest kind: all of the men are peasants, and of a bright, honest, pleasant countenance.

"Such an unhealthy place is Corte at present; intermittent fever is the rule, and not the exception. The Government does little for the towns, and nothing for the marshy low-lying districts, where drainage and arboriculture might soon change the aspect of things. The poor, and even the less poor, do very little or nothing for the sick, but give them up as a bad job: the doctor is rarely sent for, and the illness, which is perhaps but a trifle, becomes aggravated. I do hope that an earnest effort will be made to do all that can be done for these poor people."

Yours faithfully,
J. CECIL BERGER, Hon. Sec.
Sion House, Lower Clapton, E.

NEW-YEAR REUNIONS.

AS usual at this season, many social gatherings have been held in connection with our religious and philanthropic organisations. The Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. had its customary social reception, when words of counsel were addressed to the young men by Mr. George Williams, Canon Cadman, and Rev. C. B. Symes.

A very pleasant gathering was held at the Finsbury-park Y.M.C.A., in connection with the "Ladies' Council," lately formed. Mr. Orchard, the secretary, and his lady helpers provided material for a most enjoyable evening, the results of which we trust will strengthen their good work.

At the New Year's meeting of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, held at 32, Charing Cross, the assembled workers were earnestly exhorted by Canon Barker to further united effort in fighting "the awful forces of atheism, vice, and crime."

HOLLOWAY EVANGELISTIC AND OPEN-AIR MISSION.—During the year two hundred out-door services have been held, at which 30,000 persons have been present. In the mission hall near the railway arch, services have been held on Sunday morning and afternoon, and meetings for preaching, testimony, prayer, and temperance, on each evening of the week; the same at the Warlters-road branch. "As the result, precious souls have been saved, backsliders restored, drunkards reclaimed, and one hundred and five pledges taken." In the common lodging-houses of the neighbourhood Christ has been preached, fallen ones have been introduced to Homes, free breakfasts have been provided, and the sick and dying visited in their own abodes. The Secretary is Mr. H. Topple, 55, Palmerstone-road, Finsbury-park.

CONFERENCE on the COMING of the LORD,

MARCH 2, 3, AND 4, 1886.

Beloved Brethren in the Lord,

A "WEEK OF YEARS" has passed since we met together at Mildmay, to confer one with another concerning our "blessed hope"—the return in glory of our absent Lord; and by such Conference to stir up each other's hearts to look, to watch, to work, to pray more earnestly that that return might be hastened.

Surely it will be well for us again to meet for the same purpose. When "upon the earth (there s) distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth"—it is well that we should "look up," and lift up our heads, for "our redemption draweth nigh."

We have found it good and helpful in times past thus to encourage one another, and we believe that it will greatly tend to the "trimming of the lamps" and the "girding of our loins" if we can come together for a few days to commune with our Lord and Master, concerning his coming, and to exhort one another, as we "see the day approaching."

We purpose, therefore, in dependence upon the goodness of our God, to hold another Advent Conference here on the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th of March.

It will be well, as on past occasions, that the addresses at the larger gatherings, in the mornings and evenings, should deal with the broad facts of the future, concerning which there is comparatively little diversity of opinion among those who look for the pre-millennial advent of our Lord; but there will be opportunities in the afternoons for smaller gatherings of a conversational character, at which lesser details of the prophetic word can be prayerfully and quietly considered.

The subjects we propose for the former meetings are as follows:—

"The Word of Prophecy: its Place and Value."
"The Second Advent, the Hope of the Church."
"The Signs of the Times."
"The Coming of the Lord—Personal, not Spiritual."
"The Millennial Reign."
"The Judgment Seat of Christ, and the Great White Throne."

These subjects, as you will see, though unspeakably important, are elementary rather than profound; and we have selected them because we feel that though acquaintance with minute and more difficult questions of prophecy is undoubtedly needful, there are large numbers who have never as yet seen the place which, as we believe, the Lord's return, and the events connected therewith, occupy in regard to the characteristics of the present days, and to the close of this dispensation; and we hope that many such will be present with us at the Conference.

We need much guidance from on high with regard to the selection of speakers, and all other arrangements. We therefore ask you to join us in earnest prayer that the Holy Spirit may in all things direct and rule the hearts of those on whom these matters devolve; and above all, that the presence of our Lord and Master may be so graciously vouchsafed to us all at the Conference, that it may be for his supreme glory, and for the good of his whole Church.

In expectation of much blessing and profit, we remain, beloved brethren,

Yours, in the hope of the Gospel,

S. A Blackwood,
Cavan,
James E. Mathieson,
H. C. Nisbet,

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY WIGGAN, with Rev. J. Johnson, have held twenty-one days' Gospel services in the Primitive Methodist Iron Church, Dartmouth. A number of persons have professed conversion.

MR. W. FORBES has been for several years chiefly engaged in conducting Gospel Temperance Missions, but he is open for engagements to hold evangelistic services. His address is, 71, Windsor-road, Holloway, N.

SURREY CHAPEL.—This is still a hive of spiritual industry. On New Year's Day sixteen reports were given of the various institutions of the work. The pastor, Rev. B. Senior, made a most encouraging statement of the New Surrey Chapel Building Fund, £4600 having been received in cash and promises. £12,000 is wanted to open the chapel free from debt.

THE BISHOP OF RUPERT'S LAND concludes an account of his visitation of the Church Missionary Society's Mission at Lac Seul, in the east of his diocese, thus:—"There is a most remarkable difference in the readiness with which the Gospel is listened to and accepted by different tribes of Indians. In the case of some—as, for example, in the tribes along Rainy River—there has to be long waiting and sowing, with little result. In other cases the Gospel is heard gladly, and there is great joy in its reception. The Indians of Lac Seul seemed as a body very accessible to the truth, and there is the greatest promise of the whole tribe being shortly added to the Church of Christ, and not a few of them presenting themselves a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God."

THE GREATEST RELIGIOUS REVIVAL which has ever been known in the region of the Schoharie Valley has been in progress in several churches at Cobleskill, N.Y., for several weeks, under the direction of the well-known evangelist, Rev. A. B. Earle, of Boston. From the very first night people of every walk in life began to go forward to the altar for prayers, with the result that as many as three hundred have made profession of faith on a single night. The greater portion of the young men of the community have been converted, and the Fire Department of the place has given up its annual ball. A recent entertainment was patronised by only twelve persons, while the church could not half accommodate the crowds. Mr. Earle has left for other fields of labour, but the interest still prevails as deeply as ever.

MR. ROBERT BAXTER, whose name and influence has been used in favour of almost all the great religious enterprises in London during the past thirty years, is lying dangerously ill.

Y.W.C.A.—A branch of this Association was opened at Kingston-on-Thames on Friday last. An address having been given by Mrs. Legg, of Harrow, thirty-two gave in their names as members, and a very happy evening was spent.

PRAYER FOR THE POLICE.—Christians, both in the Force and outside it, are asked to observe Thursday, January 14 (this day), as a day of special prayer on behalf of the Police Force all over the country, and particularly the work of the Christian Policemen's Association.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A Freemason Lodge, on teetotal principles, has been formed at Hull.

The Temperance outlook in Australasia, it is said, has never been more encouraging than now.

Rev. A. G. Marment, of Texas, has conducted an eleven-days' successful Temperance Mission at Crewe.

The City of London Abstainers' Union have arranged for a series of meetings in City houses of business.

In the new Parliament there will be eleven labour representatives, all abstainers and prohibitionists.

Mrs. Joseph Lucas, Sunderland, has had a nine days' Temperance mission at Preston. Many pledges taken.

The commanders of military districts have been ordered to report on military coffee-bars and grocery stores.

The Lancet reiterates its condemnation of grocers' licences. They increase secret drinking, and are most injurious to homes.

On Christmas Day soldiers in barracks are allowed great licence, and drunkenness used to be the rule; now it is the exception.

A Conference of Temperance workers from Yorkshire, Derbyshire, and Nottinghamshire, is to be held, January 18, at Sheffield.

Monster Temperance meetings are to be held, Sunday evening, January 31, in four churches in the eastern district of Brooklyn.

The Daily News says there is in a London workhouse a dairyman who formerly owned sixty cows, but "swallowed" them all in drink.

A Gospel Temperance and Total Abstinence paper in German is to be started this month, from the office of the Union Signal, Chicago.

Cocoaine is a new stimulant, which produces effects like those of alcohol. Its use is said to be secretly extending in the cities of America.

The Quarterly Journal of Inebriety (American) thinks arsenic as a stimulant or narcotic is extensively used. It gives a distressing instance.

The Liverpool Ladies' Temperance Association had a successful Christmas festival. Seven hundred pledges have been taken during the year.

In South London, January 3, there was a great united demonstration by leading Temperance organisations in aid of the Metropolitan Hospital for Children.

The Lancet urges the time has come when "moderation" in drink should be clearly defined. It says much drinking called "moderate" is "mortal."

At a recent election for West Melbourne, the mayor, who is an extensive wine merchant, won the seat against a Blue-ribbon candidate by a large majority.

Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala has consented to become President of the newly-formed Kensington Barracks Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society.

At a large meeting of natives, held at Butterworth, Natal, great indignation was expressed at Government providing for free trade in intoxicants among natives by proclamation.

The Temperance papers, as a rule, do not expect much aid from the new Parliament. In the immediate future the hope of the movement is in the vigorous action of the Churches.

At Upsala, Sweden, a university town, 771 students voted for extending the time for closing public-houses to eleven instead of ten, and only 411 against. Fortunately the proposal was vetoed by the Governor.

At Brooklyn, in December, there was a great public debate on High Licence v. Prohibition. The majority were for the latter. Mr. Graham, of the American Church Temperance Society, formerly Church of England Temperance Society Diocesan agent, advocated high licence.

A special public meeting of the National Temperance League is to be held in Westminster Town Hall, this evening (January 14), to welcome the abstaining Members of the new Parliament, twenty-five of whom have promised to be present. The Bishop of London will preside.

The Bishop of London presided at the Band of Hope New Year's gathering, held in Exeter Hall, and delivered a stirring address. An examination into the nature of the progress of Temperance, he said, showed that it was not merely in numbers, but it was laying hold of men of science, and had permeated what was called "Society."

The Book World.

An Awful Famine. 1d. Partridge. A very striking little narrative in the form of a dream, picturing the terrible realisation of Jehovah's warning in Amos viii. 2. "A famine . . . of the words of the Lord."

Grace and Truth for Old and Young. Volume for 1885. 1s. 6d. W. B. Horner. True to its title, it contains sound, honest words of counsel and help to the Christian, as well as admonition to those who are "out of the way."

All Things New. By G. F. Trench. 1d. Shaw & Co. A very timely, helpful, and spiritual discourse for the New Year. The writer's points are practical and well-defined, presenting a rule of life which, if followed, would make the year truly blessed.

Rest and Victory. By W. Spencer Walton. 1s. Marshall Bros. Rev. E. W. Moore writes the preface to this little book, which skilfully and clearly enunciates the precious truth, so valued by many of God's people, of the redeemed soul resting in the Lord, and conquering in rest.

The Church. Vol. X. 2s. Elliot Stock. The great feature of this volume is the series of addresses on the "Life of Joseph," by Rev. F. B. Meyer. They will be found very helpful by many. Pages for the young, and a variety of spiritual articles combine to make a very acceptable serial.

The Teachers' Storehouse. 2s. Elliot Stock. This is the tenth yearly volume of a monthly magazine for Sunday-school teachers. Many a bright gem of thought is to be found in its pages. The expositions, sketches, and outline lessons deserve a careful study, and the reader will be amply rewarded by their perusal.

Hints and Outlines for Children's Services. By Rev. C. A. Goodhart. 2s. Nisbet & Co. Any who find difficulty in speaking successfully to children will do well to study this little volume, which sets forth a number of terse and eminently practical lessons in an attractive and telling form, which will be easily remembered.

From the Pit to the Throne. Scenes from the Life of Joseph. By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. Elliot Stock. Thoughtful, Scriptural sermons, eminently adapted to those starting in life. Containing many fresh and beautiful thoughts upon the ever-new theme, and written in a practical style, it ought to be a helpful study of this grand character to all young men.

Year Book of Sermons and Golden Texts for 1886. By J. E. Kittredge, D.D. Cassell. Intended for "young people connected with the Sabbath-school." Questions from the Shorter Catechism, Bible-readings, golden text, with spaces for sermon text, and outline, and the name of the scholar, make this a very useful little book, and pastors and teachers will value it for their young people.

Three daintier little books it would be difficult to find than Rev. W. R. Nicoll's Songs of Rest, first and second series, and his late brother's, H. J. Nicoll's, collection of One Hundred Sonnets (1s. 6d. each. Hodder & Stoughton). The songs and sonnets are the choicest of the choice, and are culled from many sources; they will be as perennial founts of comfort and strength to the sad, the worn, and the weary.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. stand unrivalled as caterers for the general reading public. Their latest literary project—a National Library in weekly numbers, edited by Professor H. Morley, is worthy of their great reputation. Macaulay's "Warren Hastings," which is the first issue, will enlighten many readers on a forgotten chapter of our imperial history. The second volume of Longfellow's Poems makes the fourth instalment of the delightful Miniature Library of Poets (1s.) There is begun a reissue of Farrar's ever attractive Life of Christ, in popular form, in sixpenny monthly parts. Next week we shall notice some of their regular serial issues.

The Vaudois of Piedmont: Visits to their Valleys. By Rev. J. N. Worsfold. John F. Shaw & Co. This little book will impress on many the recent commemorations of French Protestantism. The writer not only gives a graphic history of the noble martyr church, but has lately visited the Vaudois valleys, and gives the latest information of a church which richly deserves the title of Evangelist of Italy. A good map aids the reader. We urge any admirers of Roman Catholic unity to ponder this narrative, and refute it if they can. We recommend lovers of free Italy to study it; we hope lovers of the Gospel will be tempted to visit these noble churches and liberally aid this truly missionary cause.

The Minister's Diary and Clerical Vade Mecum. 2s. Hodder & Stoughton. A most handy little pocket memorandum book, which every clergyman will greatly value. It has "a place for everything" regarding Church matters and engagements.

Oldham; or, Sow beside all Waters. By L. E. Guernsey. 5s. Shaw & Co. A most interesting story of several children who attended the same school in an American village, and of the good influences exerted over them by a godly teacher. The characters of the girls are capitally sketched.

Days of Remembrance: A Memorial Calendar. Compiled by A. L. W. Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. In appropriate dress, and containing selections from the Scriptures, suited to the mourning and the departed, this little book is devoted to death-days, and will doubtless find many to value its object.

The Welcome Hour. Volume for 1885. S. W. Partridge & Co. Full of interest, giving much information valuable to all classes of readers. The short biographies of some of the "French stars" of the Christian Church are capital. The volume is attractive in outward appearance and copiously illustrated.

The Way Home: An Earthly Story with a Heavenly Meaning. By Rev. Charles Bullock. 1s. 6d. Home Words Office. This eighth edition of a well-known exposition of the Parable of parables needs no fresh commendation; its sweetness, truth, and reverence make it indeed a book for fathers and mothers, and sons and daughters, and all on "the way home."

Faithful Service. By Mary Prior Hack. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. We have in this goodly volume one more picture gallery of consecrated women, who in varied social positions adorned the doctrine of Jesus Christ by faithful and self-sacrificing lives. Miss Hack is doing splendid service to her sex and to the cause of true religion by showing from example that under every circumstance and condition of life, it is within woman's province and capacity to act as the saviours of society, the salt of the earth. To thoughful young women, the presentation of such a book might be the turning-point in life, pointing out the path and furnishing the spur to an honourable and useful career.

Across the Jordan: an Exploration and Survey of part of Hanran and Sanlan. By Goltfiel Schumacher, C.E., with Additions by Laurence Oliphant and Guy Le Strange. Richard Bentley & Son. This volume will prove interesting to those who have visited the country or who are well posted up in the doings of the Palestine Exploration Society. The principal part of the book is a survey for a railway between Haifa and Damascus. The account of a "Ride through Ajlun and the Belka" is one of the brightest parts of the book. It has numerous illustrations of stones found among the ruins of cities and towns mentioned in the Bible, showing inscriptions, carvings, &c., and will be valuable as a work of reference.

Memorials of R. Harold Schofield, M.A., M.B., &c., late of the China Inland Mission. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. These memorials are taken chiefly from letters and diaries, and is compiled by the brother of the deceased. It forms a valuable record of a short, but singularly earnest life. Dr. Schofield was possessed of great mental gifts which were wholly consecrated to the Lord's work. He might have had a brilliant professional career, but he heard the call to go to the mission field, and he willingly obeyed. The China Inland Mission lost a splendid worker, and the Church a true soul-winner in Dr. Schofield, when he was called away in full flush of ardent manhood. This deeply-interesting account, which covers the period from happy school days to earnest work in China, is a very valuable addition to missionary records. It will do much to stimulate evangelistic work generally, as well as fire many young men, and even women, to go forth into the regions beyond to preach the Gospel.

MORE MAGAZINES FOR JANUARY.

The Expositor. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. Mr. Nicoll makes a good start with the new year. Canon Westcott leads the way with the first of a number of papers on the Hebrews: the sample is excellent. Bishop Lightfoot has an article for the learned. Canon Driver another on "The Cosmogony of Genesis," for the thoughtful (on which we may have some adverse comment to make next week); Dr. McLaren another, on Col. ii. 8—10, "The Bane and the Antidote," for everybody. We must not, however, omit Dr. Delitzsch on "The Bible and Wine," and Principal Sir J. W. Dawson (President Elect of the British Association), on "The Probable Physical Causes of the Destruction of the Cities of the Plain"—a most interesting paper. The fine etching of Professor Godet will be welcome to the many admirers of that learned expositor.

The Monthly Interpreter. 1s. T. & T. Clark. A good number opens with the first of a series of articles on "The Difficulties of Scripture," which promises to prove very suggestive. Prebendary E. Huxtable gives a paper—his second—on "The Brethren of Our Lord," whichh as a curious interest about it. Among other papers, we may mention one by Canon Rawlinson on "Elam, its Chief City and its Chief River."

Joy Bells (½d. Partridge) is an evangelistic and Temperance monthly, and a new issue of "Gospel Echoes." A brief notice of the life of Rev. J. Scott, "a Labourer for God," and "Thoughts on Consecration," are the leading features this month. The Indian Female Evangelist (3d. Nisbet) has a very thoughtful and interesting paper on the "Emancipation of Women in India." The Church of Scotland Mission Record (Clark, Edinburgh) contains a deeply-interesting paper on the "Introduction of Christianity into India," and a portrait and notice of the late Rev. H. W. Smith, the former editor. The Monthly Review (1d. Exeter Hall), the organ of the Y.M.C.A., goes in largely for athletics and the gymnasium, and wisely so. This goes well beside a paper on the White Cross movement. Mr. George Williams' New Year's Letter is excellent. Woman's Work in the Great Harvest Field (4d. Partridge) is full of interest. The papers on Y.W.C.A. work and "Our Blue Jackets" are good. The Christian Treasury (6d. E. W. Allen, Ave Maria-lane). Besides three excellent serial stories, the "Hints on the International Lessons," and a very good article on "The Inspiration of the Bible," there is much that will profit and please all readers. All the World, a monthly record of the work of the Salvation Army in all lands, is an excellent pennyworth—twenty-four pages of cheering facts. The Friends of Missions (1d. Partridge) is full of interesting details and many fresh items for all friends of the Mission cause. The London City Mission Magazine. (2d. Seeley). The reports of work among the hop-pickers, and mission to omnibus men, will enlist the sympathies of all earnest Christians. Church Missionary Intelligence. (6d. Seeley). The survey of the month, and a long notice of the biography of William Carey are the leading features in this always interesting magazine. Church Missionary Juvenile Instructor will keep up the missionary spirit among the young people. Old Jonathan. (1d., Collingridge). Admirably adapted for distribution, by reason of its bright, cheery articles. China's Millions (1d. Morgan & Scott), being the only monthly entirely devoted to the interest of China deserves a place in every Christian home. Sunrise, a magazine for young folks, (½d. Kempster), contains full details of the Silver Star Brigade for young people. Church Missionary Gleaner (1d. Seeley), is intensly stimulating. The paper on Mount Kilima-njaro reports the latest work and discovery there. Miss Whately's "Chicken-Raiser" is touchingly written.—Eastward Ho! (6d. Swan Sonnenschein) is taken up chiefly with social topics, which are handled trenchantly and well. Mr. Marson's interview with a detective lets in some light on the methods of our "protectors." Little Folks (6d. Cassell & Co.) is a literary and pictorial gem; young people who are fond of prize competitions should take it in.

New Magazines.

Three of these are before us. The Housewife (3d. 4, Ludgate-circus Buildings) claims to be a practical guide to everything in and about the house, and may be commended to the attention of actual or prospective "better halves." Light from Aloft (1d. 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.) is the organ of the Thames Church Mission, and pleads well the cause of that excellent Society. The Shield and Spear (1d. Dalton, 520, Old Ford-road, E.) is edited by Rev. W. E. Hurndall, of Harley-street Chapel. A great proportion of it is made up of smart sayings and poor jokes. Mr. Hurndall must either transmogrify the title of his bantling, or change its contents, if it is ever to emerge from the cradle.

Our Indian Sisters, the magazine issued by the Ladies' Zenana Mission, in connection with the Baptist Missionary Society, is now published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

Notes on Sunday-school Teaching. Worthy, 472, Battersea Park-road. A few wise words on position, work, experience, and responsibility in the Sunday-school. 1d. each; 6s. per 100.

Messrs Marcus Ward & Co have issued two very artistic Calendars suitable either for the office or the home—Every Day; To-day—each containing pointed selections from celebrated authors (1s each)

Practical Hints on Coffee-stall Management, and other Temperance Work. 1s Gill, 170, Strand. These hints will be found most valuable and helpful to all interested in coffee-stalls and the Temperance cause generally.

Dwell Deep. By Rev. T. W. Thomas, B.A, Vicar of Wicken, Cambridge. 2d. Jarrold & Sons. A word to Christians based on Jer. xlix. 30. Nothing more helpful have we seen for the new year. Christians should read it, and pass it on.

Fresh Springs from the Word of the Lord. No. 1, "Weariness and Rest;" No. 2, "God's Way Better than Any Way;" No. 3, "Clouds and Sunshine." Three small books at a penny each, with appropriate selections of Scripture bearing on the titles given (Partridge & Co.).

The Educational Almanack, 1886. 6d. National Educational Union, 19, Warwick-street, Cockspur-street, S.W. In addition to the usual matter contained in this valuable annual, the present issue furnishes facts and articles relating to over-pressure in schools, free education, and other important subjects.

Burden-Bearing. By John R Palmer. 1s. W. Mack. Brief chapters on "Burden-bearing," "The Good Shepherd," "The Gospel and Romanism," "Christian Fruitfulness," and "Perfect Peace." They are words in season to all lovers of Bible teaching; the note of warning against the insidious growth of Romish doctrine is valuable.

The Evangelisation of Arabia. By Major-General F. T. Haig. 3d. Hazell, Watson & Viney. The author directs attention to Arabia as a field, hitherto untilled, for missionary effort. He appeals to the Church of Christ at large to see to this; and points out that at one time Christianity prevailed over no inconsiderable portion of Arabia. The author is very much in earnest, and deserves a patient hearing.

Mission and other Appeals.

Distress in South Wales.—We are feeling most keenly the depression in the coal, iron, and steel trades. We have felt compelled to provide stew dinners and porridge breadfasts for 400 children weekly, whose parents are out of work. I am anxious to be able to continue this help for the children, and earnestly appeal for help. Thos. M. Wintle.
Pontymoile, near Pontypool, Monmouthshire.

Working Men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New-cut.—This Mission is surrounded by many working-men who are in great need through want of employment. The friends of the Mission are anxious to bring them under the preaching of the Gospel, and in order to effect this they purpose giving a good meat tea to 200 poor men on Thursday evening, January 14. They also desire to give a free tea to 700 poor children. Help towards these objects would be thankfully received by the superintendents, T. and J. Young, 16, Queen-street, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

North London Home for Aged Christian Blind Women.—We have a strong desire to open a Home for aged blind men. We have on the present building a loan of £750, which we are most anxious to clear off. This being done, we shall be free to labour for the thirty-one inmates we have at present in the Home, and also extend the benefits to other aged and deserving sufferers, of whom there are more than eleven thousand over sixty years of age.—We are, dear Sir, faithfully yours, H. Bright, Hon. Superintendent.
Mansion House, Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, N.

MESSRS. MATEER AND PARKER have been attracting large numbers to hear the Gospel spoken and sung, at Mount Vernon, Ohio.

THE SALVATION ARMY.—We regret to learn that Mrs. Booth is so seriously indisposed as to be obliged to relinquish all active work in connection with the Army. Arrangements are being made for an International Congress in London in June.

MR. J. HOARE.—We much regret to learn, says The Record, that Mr. Joseph Hoare, of Hampstead, the Treasurer of the Bible Society, is very seriously ill. His condition is such as to cause a good deal of anxiety to his friends. Our readers will, we feel sure, remember him in prayer.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF.—The first of the monthly gatherings for the New Year was held on the 8th instant, Mr. Colin Young in the chair. Mr. Kelleway spoke of the need for more helpers in tract distribution. Mr. Jackson also appealed for helpers in teaching the children. After remarks by Mr. Grellier, Mr. Isaac (secretary), and Miss Macpherson, Lieutenant Mandeville gave an excellent address on "Be of good cheer."

DISTRESS IN SUNDERLAND.—The Sunderland Town Council have memorialised the Local Government Board for leave to borrow £7000 to be expended in providing work for the unemployed workmen in the town, who number several thousands. It is feared that, should the threatened strike in the shipbuilding trade not be averted, the supply of food will almost cease, the tradesmen and public men declaring that they will stop contributions.

GOSPEL TENT WANTED.—Dear Sir,—Myself and wife are leaving this month for North Africa, in connection with the Kabyle missions. Our proposed field of work is the southern part of the province of Constantine, Algeria, a mountainous country called the Aurès (with, it is supposed, from six to seven hundred thousand inhabitants.) In pioneering amongst them a tent would prove most useful, if not invaluable, and as a new one would involve too heavy an outlay, we are on the lookout for some second-hand bargain. Amongst your readers some one might gladly be willing to part with such a tent at a moderate price out of love for Christ and the North Africans.

Kilcooley Rectory, Urlingford, Co. Kilkenny, Ireland.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THE LATE MDLLE. GRUET, of Neuchâtel, established a Bible Depôt in her own house, in 1845, from which she had the privilege of seeing more than 140,000 copies of the Word of God sent forth.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.—During the past two years and three months the Salvation Army is said to have received nearly £10,000 in South Australia, and they now own property worth £6,000. Major and Mrs. Thurman, the leading workers, are leaving for England.

LUCKNOW.—The missionaries of the Indian Female Normal School Society at Lucknow are rejoicing over the conversion and baptism of a young Bengali widow who, homeless and friendless, was brought to them some time ago by native Christians for instruction.

PALESTINE.—A missionary station has been established at Hebron, and an evangelical school. Pastor Schneller, of Bethlehem, regularly visits this town where the Gospel had not been preached since 1187, when it fell into the hands of Saladin. A certain number of Mussulmans go and listen to the Word of God.

CINCINNATI, U.S.—The Y.M.C.A. of this city recently celebrated its thirty-sixth anniversary, when the announcement was made that the institution was free of debt. It has 1000 members, and appears, under the secretarial direction of Mr. G. T. Howser, to be actively engaged in varied work among young men.

PARIS HOSPITALS.—The Municipal Council of Paris proposes to remove all the Sisters of Charity from the hospitals, and to replace them by "lay" nurses. Ninety-two doctors and surgeons—many of whom are well-known Protestants—have signed a petition, praying, in the interests of the patients, the Sisters be allowed to remain.—Christianisme.

PASTOR ROUVILLE, of the Reformed Church, Paris, has just died at the age of 74. He made little noise, but did much good, especially in one of the prisons. He never went empty-handed into the cells, and helped many of the condemned in various ways. During the terrible months of the Commune he continued his ministry at the peril of his life.—Journal Réligieux.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.—Just now there is special activity on the part of Christians at Los Angeles. Meetings are being held by Dr. Munhall, of Indianapolis, at a tabernacle which has been erected at a cost of about five thousand dollars, to seat about five thousand persons. The churches are giving this movement their earnest support, and faith sees a multitude of awakened church members and reclaimed wanderers as the result. The meetings will be continued for two months.

THE TRADE IN ITALIAN CHILDREN.—The Italian police, says The Daily News correspondent in Rome, are making vigorous efforts to suppress the purchase and exportation of children. Several persons engaged in this nefarious traffic have been arrested recently. The latest culprits are an organ-grinder and his wife who have been arrested in possession of three lads, whom they were taking to France to dispose of in the labour market. Papers found show that they bought the lads of their parents in the province of Caserta. One had been sold for £5 4s., the other two, who were brothers, for 13s. each.

LAFORCE ASYLUMS.—The last report of the various departments of the philanthropic work under the general name of "Asiles John Bost," at Laforce, in France, is deeply touching. There are nine distinct Homes for different forms of destitution and suffering, including provision for orphan girls and boys, girls in dangerous surroundings, epileptic, idiotic, blind boys and girls, or men and women ill or infirm, and also for the incurable. All these are surrounded by loving and Christian care. It is gratifying to find that the financial position is good, though, as in all such works, the tendency is to widen, to increase.

PARIS, Y.W.C.A.—The annual gathering of members and friends of the Y.W.C.A. was held last week in their Rooms, 26, Faubourg St. Honoré The comfortable rooms were well filled. At the close of a pleasant evening Miss Leigh spoke to the girls from Ps. cxliii. 8. She entreated all to commit their way this new year unto the Lord, and to trust his guiding hand. During the past year thirty young women, chiefly engaged in millinery and dressmaking, have been boarded in this Home, whilst many frequent the rooms on Sunday for meals, and many others attend the Bible-readings. Visitors in Paris are cordially invited to come and see the rooms. C. M. H.

CHICAGO.—In a recent letter from Colonel G. R. Clarke, of the Pacific Garden Mission, he states that the past year's work has been the most prosperous of any during the eight years of its existence. The friends in Chicago are anticipating great things from the meeting to be held there by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, Jan. 17—27.

THE PEOPLE OF HOLLAND are showing much energy and perseverance in maintaining and developing their free schools, where the Bible is honoured; in the official schools all religious teaching is banished. There are already 424 free schools attended by more than 70,000 children. These schools annually cost 3,000,000 francs, but their happy influence is already sensibly felt through the country.

FEROZEPORE is a city in the Punjab, of nearly 40,000 inhabitants. When it was decided to open out a mission there, the pioneer work was entrusted to the I. F. N. S. Society's senior missionary, Miss Emma Fuller. She commenced her work there, a Bible-woman who through her had received Christ and had been trained by her, and a blind girl, also a convert, being her only helpers. Yet, in the few months she was permitted to labour there, she had obtained access to twenty Zenanas, had established a dispensary, and opened a school. But in the midst of this the Master sent for her, and for a year no one has come forward to take her place. An earnest appeal is made to some Christian young woman in England to step into the breach. Communications should be made to the Secretary of the Indian Female Normal School Society, 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

ALL YOUR NEED.

"My God shall supply all your need."—Phil. iv. 19.

I AM a pilgrim, and I need a Guide
On life's long road;
For perils threaten me on every side,
The path untrod.

I am a stranger, and I need a Friend
To calm my fear,
When called to face what life may give or lend
Of smile or tear.

Storm-tossed and swept, I need the Risen Rock
As Hiding Place,
To shield me from the tempest's sudden shock
In sure embrace.

I grope in darkness, and I need the Light,
To clear the mist;
And cause the purposes of God to shine
Through clouds sun-kissed.

I grow so weary, and I need a Rest—
Calm after strife;
To lay my head upon a loving breast,
And end earth-life.

Eva Travers Evered Poole.

MARYLAND POINT, E.—We are giving away to the extreme poor in the neighbourhood of the Maryland Point Mission fourteen gallons of good soup, beside bread, coals, dinners for the aged and infirm, weekly. We recently gave a tea to 120 waifs and strays, and on another occasion tea for 100 attending the mission services. Our Temperance effort is very successful; 400 have signed the pledge during the past two years, and many have become true Christians. Help is needed to continue our good work.—Yours faithfully,

John Stabb.

SOLDIERS AT CURRAGH CAMP.—A few years ago, Mrs. Perry established a Soldiers' Home at the Curragh Camp, Kildare, and very richly has the Lord blessed her efforts. Many of the men have become "good soldiers of Jesus Christ," and when transferred to other stations have carried a blessing with them. Letters received from Africa, India, &c., testify to the warm appreciation of these converted soldiers for the work maintained on their behalf. At Christmas and the New Year camp social gatherings were held, special attention being given to the newly-arrived 2nd Battalion of Royal Highlanders. It is expected that many of the Highlanders will frequent the "Home." In these dark days of Ireland's history, it is pleasant to be able to chronicle such gracious enterprises as that in which Mrs. Perry is engaged, and it is hoped that friends who take an interest in such blessed work, will not allow it to suffer through lack of funds.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JAN. 17.—LEVITICUS IV.

2.—If a soul shall sin through ignorance.—It is now generally admitted that this should be rendered, "through inadvertence." It is literally "through error." R.V. renders it "unwittingly" in the text, and puts in the margin, "through error." The thought of ignorance is expressed in other passages, such as ver. 28, or chap. v. 17, but does not necessarily belong to this word. "In the abridged rules for sin offerings in Num. xv. this kind of sin is contrasted with that which cut off the perpetrator from among his people;" in other words, with presumptuous sin. "It appears to have included the entire range of 'sins, negligences, and ignorances,' for which we are accustomed to ask forgiveness. It is what the Psalmist spoke of (Ps. xix. 12): 'Who can understand his errors? Cleanse Thou me from secret faults.'"—Sp. Com.

4.—Shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head.—"In the case of the sin offering there was the same principle of identity with the victim by laying on of hands, but he who came, came not as a worshipper, but as a sinner; not as clean for communion with the Lord, but as having guilt upon him; and instead of his being identified with the acceptability of the victim . . . . the victim became identified with his guilt and unacceptableness, was made sin in his behalf, and was treated accordingly."—J. N. D.

6.—Sprinkle of the blood seven times before the Lord.—"In the inferior sin offerings the officiating priest smeared some of the blood on the horns of the altar of burnt offering (verses 25, 30, 34), while in this offering for the high priest, and in that for the nation, the high priest himself sprinkled the blood seven times within the tabernacle and smeared it on the horns of the altar of incense."—Sp. Com. See Heb. xiii. 10—13.

8.—And he shall take off from it all the fat.—"In the case of the burnt offering it was not merely the fat, but the whole sacrifice, that was burnt upon the altar, because it was Christ without any question of sin bearing whatever. In the case of the sin offering there was nothing but the fat to be burnt upon the altar, because it was a question of sin bearing, though Christ was the sin bearer."—C. H. M.

MONDAY, JAN. 18.—LEVITICUS V.

This chapter (from ver. 14 onwards) contains the rules for the trespass offering, which was a form of the sin offering, used in cases where in addition to the thought of the guilt of sin before God came in that of the injury it inflicted upon others, in some cases upon God Himself. This injury called for reparation or compensation; hence a prominent feature of the trespass offering was a pecuniary fine equal to the value of the injury done, with the addition of one-fifth.

6.—And he shall bring his trespass offering.—"Rather 'as his forfeit,' that is, whatever is due for his offence. The Hebrew word 'asham' is generally translated 'trespass offering,' and that rendering might have conveyed the sense here, had not the term 'trespass offering' become the current designation for a distinct kind of sin offering mentioned from ver. 14 onwards."—Sp. Com.

The subject of the trespass offering as distinguished from the sin offering begins at ver. 14. From this to the end of the chapter "wrongs done to the Lord in his holy things" are treated of; while "wrongs done to the neighbour by breaches of confidence and the like" occupy the first seven verses of chapter vi. The difference in principle between the sin offering and the trespass offering is well stated by Kurtz: "Originally and primarily a sin offering was appointed for the transgression of any of the commandments of Jehovah; but in the further development of the laws in question all such breaches of the commandments of God as could be looked upon in the light of a violation of the rights or claims of others were excepted from this rule, and a different kind of sacrifice, viz., the trespass offering, appointed. This appears, therefore, as a subordinate species of sin offering, modified in a peculiar manner."

TUESDAY, JAN. 19.—LEVITICUS VI.

The first seven verses of this chapter properly belong to the last, and in the Hebrew Bible form part of chap. v. Our translators unfortunately adopted the division of the LXX.

5.—Give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, in the day of his trespass offering.—"The restitution was thus to be associated with the religious act by which the offender testified his penitence."—Sp. Com. The Lord would thus teach how hollow professions of penitence for sin are, if not accompanied by restitution to those who have been wronged thereby, so far as restitution is possible.

13.—The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar; it shall never go out.—This fire came down from heaven on the occasion of the dedication of Aaron and his sons to their priestly functions (see chap. ix.). The "Speaker's Commentary," on ix. 24, speaks of "the very ancient Jewish tradition that the sacred fire of the altar originated in this Divine act, and was preserved in the tabernacle until the dedication of the Temple, when fire again 'came down from heaven, and consumed the sacrifices' (2 Chron. vii. 1). It represented Divine justice fully satisfied, feeding continually on the sacrifices offered on the altar, and especially on that which, repeated daily, afforded constant satisfaction—the daily morning and evening sacrifice of a lamb—the well-known type of the coming sacrifice of Christ. See Exod. xxix. 38—46."

29.—It is most holy.—"In none of the offerings is Christ's personal holiness more strikingly presented than in the sin offering. Never was the Lord Jesus more fully seen to be 'the Holy One of God' than when He was made sin upon the cursed tree. Though a sin-bearer, He was sinless. Though enduring the wrath of God, He was the Father's delight."—C. H. M.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 20.—LEVITICUS VII.

1.—It is most holy.—Though the trespass offering in some of its features (such as the treatment of the blood) differed from the sin offering, it is identified with it by this feature of holiness already referred to, in which both typify Christ as the Holy One of God, "made sin for us, who knew no sin."

13.—Besides the cakes he shall offer for his offering leavened bread.—This permission to offer leaven, which was forbidden in all offerings made by fire (ii. 11), is probably rightly explained thus: "The leavened bread was a distinct offering, not a part of the sacrifice for the altar of which the 'memorial' was burnt."—Sp. Com. As to its typical significance, occurring as it does in relation to the law of the peace offering, which set forth in symbol that "our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ," it is the typical expression of, "if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1 John i. 8).

20.—The soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offerings having his uncleanness upon him . . . . shall be cut off from his people.—The typical teaching of this verse finds its New Testament expression in the context of the passage just quoted, "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7).

37.—This is the law of the burnt offering, &c.—This retrospective summary of the preceding seven chapters gives a sixfold instead of a fivefold division of the offerings, introducing "the consecrations" which though appointed in Exod. xxix. and carried out in chap. viii. are not spoken of in the previous chapters of this book. As this consecration offering was a species of peace offering, it seems as if a threefold division, each of two kinds, was intended. (1) Burnt and meat (or meal) offering; (2) sin and trespass offering; (3) consecration and peace offering. This threefold division corresponds to three principal aspects of Christ's work: (1) in its relation to God, including his manhood; (2) in its relation to man, involving sin and trespass to be borne; (3) in its results, fellowship with God and consecration to his service.

THURSDAY, JAN. 21.—LEVITICUS VIII.

The consecration of Aaron and his sons to the office of the Priesthood forms the subject of this chapter. After a preliminary washing with water (ver. 6), Aaron is by himself clothed, girded, crowned, and anointed (ver. 6—12). His sons are then clothed, but not anointed (ver. 13). Then both Aaron and his sons take part in the sin offering, and in the burnt offering, and in the consecration offering; in each case it being said that "Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of" each offering. In the case of the last, "the ram of consecration," the most important of all, Aaron is first by himself smeared with the blood on ear, hand, and foot (ver. 23), and after him his sons are also similarly touched with the blood, and then both Aaron and his sons together offer a "wave offering before the Lord" (ver. 27); and, lastly, both Aaron and his sons are sprinkled with the anointing oil, and with blood.

Aaron here typifies the Lord Jesus as the Great High Priest of our profession, but his sons typify the body of which He is the Head—the royal priesthood—composed of all true Christians; and while in some points priority and singularity (as in the case of the high priestly garments) are attributed to Aaron, in the matter of consecration they are identified. "This identification (of Christ and his people) is typically set forth in Aaron and his sons laying their hands upon the head of each of the sacrifices. They all stood before God in the value of the same sacrifice. Whether it were the 'bullock for the sin offering,' 'the ram for the burnt offering,' or 'the ram of consecration,' they jointly laid their hands on all. True, Aaron alone was anointed before the blood was shed. He was clad in his robes of office, and anointed with the holy oil, before ever his sons were clothed or anointed. The reason of this is obvious. Aaron when spoken of by himself typifies Christ in his own peerless excellency and dignity, and (as we know) He was anointed by the Holy Ghost previous to the accomplishment of his atoning work. Still there is the fullest identification afterwards between Christ and his people."—C. H. M.

FRIDAY, JAN. 22.—LEVITICUS IX.

In the concluding verses of chapter viii. we read of Aaron and his sons feeding together on the flesh of the consecration offering, and that for seven days, during which they were not to leave the tabernacle. "A striking figure of the present position of Christ and his members, during the entire of this dispensation, shut in with God, and waiting for the manifestation of the glory."—C. H. M.

1.—And it came to pass on the eighth day.—Moses now summons "the elders of Israel" in addition to Aaron and his sons, and directs them and "the children of Israel" (ver. 3) to offer the appointed offerings, "for to-day the Lord will appear unto you."

"'The eighth day' is a shadow of that bright millennial morning which is about to dawn upon this earth, when the congregation of Israel shall behold the True Priest coming forth from the sanctuary where now He is hidden from the eyes of men, and with Him a company of priests, the companions of his retirement, and the happy participators of his manifested glory."—C. H. M.

22.—And Aaron lifted up his hand toward the people, and blessed them. 23.—And Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation, and came out, and blessed the people.—"That is, there is first Christ, as Priest, blessing them in virtue of the offered sacrifice; and then Christ as King and Priest, going in and hiding Himself for a little in the tabernacle, and then coming out and blessing the people in this twofold character. When this takes place, as it will at the coming of Jesus, the acceptance of the sacrifice will be publicly manifested, and the glory of the Lord will appear to the people, then become true worshippers by that means."—J. N. D.

SATURDAY, JAN. 23 —LEVITICUS .

1.—Offered strange fire before the Lord, which He commanded them not.—"The particular offence which was perpetrated by Nadab and Abihu has been a subject of much discussion. The greater number of commentators, Jewish as well as Christian, have supposed that the 'strange fire' was common fire, not taken from the holy fire of the altar."—Sp. Com. This fire coming forth from God and devouring the sacrifice (ix. 24) represented Divine justice satisfied with the appointed sacrifice, and points to Christ's sacrifice of Himself as fully satisfying the claims of God's righteousness. To approach God, therefore, in prayer or in worship, on any other ground than that of the sacrifice of Christ having satisfied the claims of His justice, is to offer "strange fire before the Lord, which He commanded not."

9.—Do not drink wine nor strong drink . . . when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation.—This prohibition, coming as it does immediately after the record of the sin of Nadab and Abihu, points strongly to intemperance having been the cause of their self-will in offering "strange fire." This is admitted by many commentators, both Jewish and Christian. "We are to refrain from everything which would produce the same effect upon our spiritual man, as strong drink produces upon the physical man. The effect of wine is to excite nature, and all natural excitement hinders that calm, well-balanced condition of soul which is essential to the proper discharge of the priestly office."—C. H. M.

17.—Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin offering, &c.—The chapter "opens with positive sin, and closes with negative failure. Nadab and Abihu offered 'strange fire,' and Eleazar and Ithamar were unable to eat the sin offering. The former was met by Divine judgment, the latter by Divine forbearance. There is obviously a wide difference between a deliberate rejection of a plain command, and mere inability to rise to the height of a Divine privilege."—C. H. M.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Miss JOHNSON, ASHBY, BRIGG, LINCOLNSHIRE.

The mother of this patient (MRS. MARY JOHNSON) applied to me on behalf of her daughter in August of last year, having known the benefit of my treatment in her family before.

At this time the patient was in a very low, weak state. In addition to all the other usual symptoms of decline, there was anæmia ("she seems to have no blood in her," was the mother's remark); the appetite was gone, and sickness prevailed.

In three weeks the mother reports:—"Appetite much better, and feels stronger."

In another three weeks:—"I am thankful to say my daughter is rapidly improving."

In another month the mother writes:—"The improvement in my daughter is wonderful; appetite, strength, and flesh increased, no cough, pains gone."

In addition to my usual remedies, as the patient continued anæmic, a tonic of Perchloride of Iron, with Quinine and Syrup of Orange, were directed.

Steadily persevering till the Spring, she entirely recovered. In June last the mother writes me as follows:

"I wish to bear my testimony to the benefit received from your most valuable medicine, which, by the blessing of God, has so restored my daughter, that for some time she has discontinued its use, and been for three months in a situation. I am thankful to say she keeps quite well."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

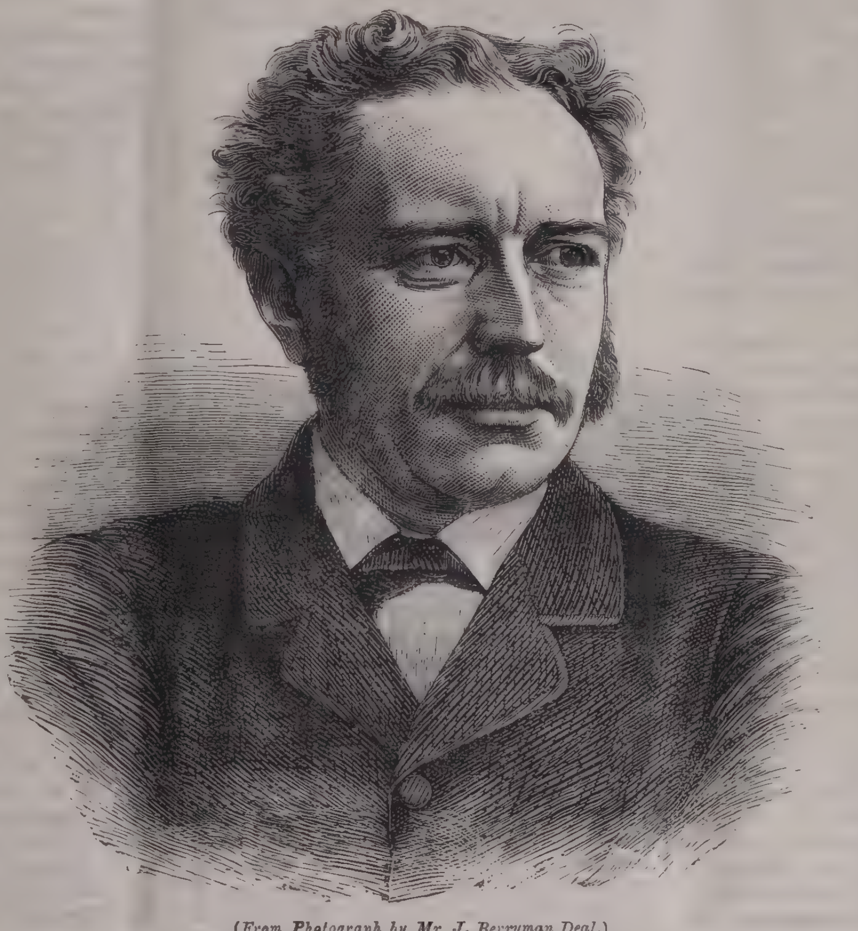
ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.



(From Photograph by Mr. J. Berryman Deal.)

TO anyone who enters on the sacred work of the Gospel ministry merely for the sake of securing a fat "living," with the accompaniments of beautiful surroundings, and little or nothing to do, the East-end of London can offer no attractions. To one who is moved with the all-mastering compassion of Christ for the multitudes, who are as sheep having no shepherd; who recks not the heart-pain that must come from its daily sights and sounds; and who courts a ceaseless struggle with sin and vice in their Protean shapes, this same East-end affords a field of service that an archangel might envy. Among the many devoted, faithful men and women who labour for the weal of its seething masses, Mr. Archibald G. Brown has for the past nineteen years held a prominent and honoured place. Next to the great Metropolitan Tabernacle in Newington-causeway, his church in Burdett-road is the largest and most numerously-attended place of worship in London in connection with the Baptist denomination.

"Man proposes, but God disposes." We do not imagine that in his early days the subject of our sketch had the most distant expectation of becoming a preacher of the everlasting Gospel. Though of Scotch parentage, as his name implies, ARCHIBALD GEIKIE BROWN was born at Brixton Hill in 1844; he is, therefore, now in the very prime of manhood. He is cousin to Cunningham Geikie, the renowned author of "The Life of Christ;" and also to Archibald Geikie, who is no less illustrious as a geologist. During his schooldays, which were spent at Brighton, under the tutorship of Rev. Albert Creake, an event occurred indicative of the high spirit of the youth, which has found its development in the fearless action and independent thought of the man. A dispute arose between him and his teacher on some point—we know not what—and Master Archibald settled it forthwith by running away from school. It was intended that he should enter on a business career; but between the time of his rebellion against pedagogic authority and that of commencing life on his own account, he was led to see himself as a rebel against God and His Christ. The honoured instrument of his conversion was Mr. Stevenson A. Blackwood. We well recollect hearing Mr. Brown touchingly and gratefully tell the story in brief at a public meeting, and in Mr. Blackwood's presence.

Mr. Brown's conversion was not only the commencement of a new inner life, but the turning point in his public career. He entered Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's Pastors' College, and was, we believe, one of the very first students sent out by that Institution to take the spiritual oversight of Christian churches. His premier pastorate was in the pretty, suburban Kentish town of Bromley. Here he laboured for four years, gathering in a congregation and building a church structure. A more important sphere awaited him, though doubtless the apprenticeship at Bromley afforded a good preparatory training for the tougher and more responsible post in East London. At the time to which we refer the Stepney-green Tabernacle was without a minister. The deacons took counsel of Mr. Spurgeon, who, recognising the gifts and capabilities of his young student, recommended them to call Mr. Brown. After preaching several times he was unanimously elected to the Stepney-green pastorate. That the church has not repented its choice is proved by the fact that he still ministers to it, after a lapse of nineteen years, and, as far as human eye can see, will continue to do so till his dying day.

When Mr. Brown undertook the pastorate the church numbered about three hundred members, but it very soon took a jump forward. A few weeks saw the chapel filled to overflowing, and the faithful and vigorous young preacher received so many seals to his ministry that the roll of Church membership soon exceeded the number of sittings in the building. Extension was inevitable, and the outcome was the present East London Tabernacle in Burdett-road, which has a seating capacity of three thousand. It was filled on the opening Sunday, and has kept so all the years since then. During the term of his East-end ministry over three thousand five hundred persons have entered into the Christian fellowship of the Church, the great majority of them being direct converts from the outside world through the living voice of the preacher. This simple statement of fact is surely one of the best possible answers to the cynical question that we have so often heard as to whether life is worth living.

Mr. Brown has throughout his public life asserted and maintained a strong individuality. In some matters he may seem to carry this to an extreme, as, for instance, in his invincible repugnance to the use of the conventional "Rev." as a handle to his name. The real reason, we doubt not, is an abhorrence of any assumption of superiority or of caste on the part of a minister of Christ. He is very severe—we do not presume to decide whether he is too severe—on what have been termed "sensational" methods and expedients, in Christian and evangelistic work. In this respect he is a Puritan of the Puritans. If he errs, we think experience proves that his error leans to virtue's side. His pulpit motto is, "Expound the Word of God in its plain sense, and in honest, simple Saxon." That has been his sole weapon of offence, and this at least is true, that the slain of the Lord have been many. We believe that fresh converts have been added to his church roll every succeeding month throughout the nineteen years of his East-end experience.

For a good many of those years the deplorable condition of the surrounding masses, physically, morally, and spiritually considered, has weighed heavily on Mr. Brown's spirit; he has made this open social sore a matter of close and careful study. That study has fructified into earnest action. At the present time there are no less than eight home missionary visitors actively engaged in connection with the Tabernacle; while he is himself a constant visitor among the poor of his great parish. A large and well organised system of practical relief of the destitute poor has grown up in connection with the church; our readers will have observed in our last issue some striking figures relevant to this branch of the work, in the report of Pastor Brown's anniversary.

By pen as well as by voice and purse, the pastor has shown his intense interest in the condition of the poor. His articles on "One Room Life" and "Cruel Cheapness," published in past reports of his work, secured wide public attention, as vigorous and well-considered contributions to the discussion of one of the grave social problems of the time. No less valuable and striking is the paper on "Poverty: Clean and Squalid," which we are privileged to give in succeeding columns, and which will form part of Mr. Brown's forthcoming annual report. We need hardly ask for it the most earnest attention and study of all Christian workers and practical philanthropists.

The Tabernacle in Burdett-road is the centre of a network of beneficent agencies, in addition to these we have mentioned. Conspicuous among them are an Orphan Home, with seventeen boy inmates; and a Convalescent Home at Herne Bay, whither many of the poorest of East-enders are able to go for a fortnight's holiday and rest: during the past year nearly 300 persons have shared its hospitality. We believe we are only expressing the genuine desire of all our readers, when we pray that alike on the pastor and people of the East London Tabernacle God's richest benediction and equipment for service may rest, while they are spared to co-operate in the happy service of the Great King.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY, after the meetings at Montreal, will visit Cleveland, Detroit, and Chicago, and from thence turn south to Louisville. They will visit New Orleans, Atlanta, and other Southern cities as time may suffice. They have invitations from all parts of the country.

POVERTY: CLEAN AND SQUALID.

By ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

POVERTY, like most things, has found some to sing its praises. Dryden declares:—

> "The daring of the soul proceeds from thence,
> Sharpness of wit and active Diligence;
> Prudence at once and Fortitude it gives;
> And, if in Patience taken, mends our lives."

Poets, however, will have to sing a long time before the poor believe them, or, indeed, anyone else who knows anything about the matter. That many poor have developed "active diligence" and "prudence" is true, but they have done so, in spite of, rather than owing to their poverty. Unless there is a tremendous power of will and force of character, poverty dulls and deadens and ultimately makes reckless. Charles Kingsley, more true to fact, says, "The sickening weight of debt, and the miserable grinding anxiety, crushes a man's soul down, and drives every thought out of his head, but how he is to fill his stomach and warm his back, and keep a house over his head, till he daren't for his life take his thoughts one moment off the meat that perisheth. The rich man never feels this, and therefore never dreams that there are thousands who pass him in their daily walks, who feel it, and feel nothing else."

For some years now, I have studied pretty closely, and also in close quarters, this huge thing called "poverty." It grows darker and more baneful, as I better know it. Itself often the child of vice, it becomes the mother of a brood of evils. That the poor are no worse in morals is often a matter of surprise as well as thankfulness to me. Scripture recognises the awful force of poverty's temptation, when, without extenuating the sin as before God, it says, "Men do not despise a thief if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry" (Proverbs vi. 30). Solomon also acknowledges the terrible tendency, when he asks for food convenient, "lest I be poor, and steal." Let those sing of poverty who feel not its pinch. Those who do cannot. How many of those who read these lines have ever honestly tried to put themselves in the place of the poverty-stricken, and realise what it means?

Have you ever thought, reader, what it must be to wake of a morning, not only without a shilling in the house, but without a shilling in the world, or an idea of where to find one? To start the day without breakfast, to tramp miles to find work, and then tramp miles back without any—to see the wife take some of her underclothing to the pawnshop to get something for the children—to be obliged at last to part with the only decent suit, and know that in parting with that you are parting with all hope of getting a respectable situation—to battle with hunger until chairs, tables, blankets, beds, have all gone in the conflict, and there remains nothing between you and "the House"? Have you grasped the anguish suffered through those weary days? If you have, poverty will never be counted one of the little ills of life. Yet all this is being endured by thousands as I write and you read. We imagine it; they feel it. Our fiction is their fact.

Remember, also, that the bitter pangs of this poverty are upon those who as little expected ever to feel them as ourselves. There is a comforting delusion abroad that the poor are born so, and, therefore, never having known anything different, hardly feel their surroundings. In some measure this may be true of "squalid poverty," though not to the extent fondly imagined; but it certainly is not true of the

"CLEAN POVERTY"

I am dealing with in this part of the article. Here we find hundreds upon hundreds who have known "better days." They do know what comforts mean. They have had them. Their pinching poverty pinches the more as they remember days free from care if not days of affluence.

I have seen not a few hurled from comfort to want by one of the expedients of "Cruel cheapness." It is this. A man has been for many years in one firm. In thought he has become almost part of it and speaks of "our" firm. By dint of many years' service—all the prime part of life—he has reached a salary which enables him to keep up a nice home and have something over for the cause of God. The idea of ever being out of a situation or "getting the sack" never enters his head. He came in as a boy, and he will end his days there. Poor fellow! The old governors are dead, and the sons have taken their places. With the death of the old governors dies the old style of business. There is more "pace and go" now. Determined not to be outdone by any, and to offer goods at hitherto unheard-of prices, all expenses must be cut down. Where begin if not at the salaries? Where among the salaries if not at the highest? While our poor friend at home is congratulating his wife that amid the surrounding want, they at least are provided for, the partners are discussing whether it would not be better to get rid of some of the "old hands," and put boys in their places. "It would be a great saving," they say, and then "the old fellow," mentioning our friend, "is hardly worth his money now." True, his strength has been spent in their service, but then that is not business. So, the man leaves—a boy takes his place—expenses are saved, and a heart is broken. But stay, that last item should be omitted. It is not business. This is no mere picture. I paint from life; I had nearly written "death." The following speaks for itself:—

December 11, 1885.

DEAR PASTOR,—Many thanks for your gift of £2 10s. It was indeed a shower of blessing. I redeemed my clothes for £2, so you may guess I have been sparing to the last of the remainder. Unfortunately, nothing has turned up at present, and I am in sore straits, but trust in the goodness of my God that things will take a turn after Christmas. I have laboured assiduously for employment, tramping the boots from my feet, but at present, with no success. I must hope in God, for I believe without hope a man must perish. I am sorry to say the wife is far from well, as she is not strong, and worries herself so very much, added to which, my little daughter is subject to fits.

Praying the blessing of God may rest on you and yours, and with Christian love,

Believe me, dear Pastor,

The writer of the above is one of the victims of the "cutting" and "cutting down" style of trade, all but universally prevalent at the present time. I have dwelt upon this side of the question because I am certain it is a side too much overlooked. The squalid, ragged, ignorant, semi-brutal poor have had a long innings of public attention. They deserve it, though I fear they are not yet much the better for the attention they have received. To have, however, anything like a true conception of London's poor, clean poverty must be viewed with squalid —viewed at the same time, and with equal carefulness. We must deal with the subject as we do with the stereoscopic picture; view it with both eyes. The two pictures taken under a small difference of angular view—each eye looking upon one picture only—are conveyed to the brain, there uniting into one and exhibiting the objects represented in a high degree of relief. The two pictures become one vivid whole.

The public, however, like a child, needs teaching in this matter. First, it won't look at all, and then it persists in always shutting one eye. Some have no pity for poverty that does not shock, and others no compassion for poverty with a dirty face. They forget that too often the latter is only the former a year or two older. Clean poverty, with the heart out of it, becomes "squalid." Help the one and you often save the other. And now as to feeling it. The wish is, I suppose, father to the thought—that the poor are blunted in sensitiveness. Like most fallacies there is just an element of truth in the comforting delusion. The poor do in course of time get blunted, but God only knows what they suffer in the blunting process. Not a few break down and die before the hardening is completed.

Let me tell you an incident; I can guarantee each item. The last only occurred a few weeks since. Some years since, two devotedly attached young people were married. They had as happy a home as London holds. The husband was a skilled worker in a branch of industry requiring the greatest delicacy of touch and finish. There was plenty of work and it was remunerative. Though a large family sprang up there was no anxiety. Until of late the wife was able to keep up not only a comfortable home but to employ aid in the house work. Both husband and wife were Christians, and the former was an active teacher in the Sunday-school. Family worship was never neglected, and Sankey's hymns used to ring through the house. A change, however, came over things. Competition grew keener. The same amount of labour produced nothing like the same profits, until at last profits disappeared. Anxious to make some provision for wife and children, all he had and some borrowed from a relative besides, was invested in a business represented as very promising. It was soon found that a fearful and final mistake had been made. A gloom came down on the otherwise happy Christian. The mind was not as strong as the heart. Still he taught in the school and prayed at home; but the wife marked with loving anxiety a cloud gradually but surely settling down upon the once happy face. Absent in mind, he would speak aloud in disconnected sentences. The theme was always the same, "Everything going." No eye could fail to see that the inward anguish was breaking down the mental powers.

One morning the wife wakes to find him absent. With strange forbodings she calls downstairs. The answer comes, "With you directly, darling." He enters. The face tells the dread secret. With fearful haste she makes mustard and water and pours it down his throat. The doctor comes. He is hurried to the hospital. The corrosive used in his work has, however, done its deadly mission. The broken-hearted, brain-turned man, once the happy husband and the earnest teacher, lies still in death in the hospital ward. The coroner finds a verdict of "Died by administering poison to himself while temporarily insane." The funeral follows, and a few days after the wife gives birth to a little one. I sat with her in the room where the desperate act was done, and she nursed a child of two weeks old as she told this story as I can't tell it. It would have to be punctuated with sobs. Do not hurl the epithet of "coward." He bore up till he could bear no more. The poor brain failed in the long fight. It takes a tough bit of brain to see wife and children slipping into poverty despite every frantic effort to save them, and yet hold its own. "Do they feel it?" Yes, sometimes up to insanity and death.

This is no isolated case. I have seen similar this year. How little one dreams of the agony working in the heart of many a clean, decently clad man as he respectfully asks you "if you know anything he can do." It is agony that ages if it does not kill. I have seen scores look ten years older in six months while they were undergoing this process of "being blunted." The rush of life is too great for many. It sweeps them off their feet and hurls them under the feet of thousands to be trampled into mire. They are utterly crushed in the mad stampede. No blame is to be attached to them. Their only fault lies in not being strong enough, and that they cannot help. George R. Sims has well put it in the following few lines: "It is the increased civilisation of this marvellous age which has made life a victory only for the strong, the gifted, and the specially blest, and left the weak, the poor, and the ignorant, to work out in their proper persons the theory of the survival of the fittest, to the bitter end."

To help the "clean" poor is one of the fine arts. It requires no little study, and is not to be learned in a day. First they have to be found. Clean poverty, like charity "suffereth long" and "beareth all things." It does not make its presence known by clamour. It is not to be found haunting every soup-kitchen, knocking at the door of every man who, rightly or wrongly, has a name for benevolence. It does not smell out every dinner that is to be given within a radius of a mile, and come armed with letters of recommendation for a ticket. It shuns publicity, and, when discovered, will speak so moderately of its straits, that it needs no little experience to distinguish the hard facts under the modest drapery of self-respectful language. To assist without seeming to, to remove want without degrading, to show charity without wounding, to relieve yet leave the spirit of self-respect inviolate, demands gracious tact and loving thoughtfulness. No work, however, in our judgment yields so rich a reward. While gripping the filthiest, let the clean have our grasp.

Let us now turn for a few moments to

"SQUALID POVERTY."

It is a revolting part of the picture, but must be looked at with the other. It is only another aspect of the same thing. The substantive is the same, only it has changed its adjective. Trace the pedigree of "squalid" far enough, and you will find it in most cases a descendant of the "clean" family. The blunting process has been complete. Hope has gradually declined and died. Self-respect has starved to death, and the man sinks to the level of his surroundings, and the level sinks lower and he follows it. I know nothing on earth so awfully depressing as a sojourn in the realm of abject, squalid poverty. It burdens the heart, fevers the head, and dumbfounds the brain. How often have I reeled rather than walked home, with one cry ever breaking from my soul—"God never intended men and women to live like this." Squalid poverty lies in horrid patches. There are districts that seem socially damned. When once a family locates itself in them, decency and cleanliness are done with. Nothing clean or bright can live in such an atmosphere. It is no exaggeration to say that I can generally tell by the appearance and smell what district the applicant hails from. The worst are generally found where the houses are either old or large. The more massed together, the greater the mess in which they live. They corrupt one another and drag each other down.

There is now no need to give the minute details there was years back. A lurid light has been cast on the sweltering crowd, and people know somewhat of how the abject live. They still, however, know but little, and perhaps it is as well. Enough is known to make indifference or indolence a crime. What more is needed? My visits to squalid poverty are most frequently made at night; it is quieter and easier to escape recognition, and consequent solicitation. With a box of wax vestas to find where the stairs and doors are, and a few bread tickets in the pocket, the work is easily done, and never have I had a rebuff, while many an opportunity of telling our Saviour's love has been as precious as any sanctuary service. But, O the squalor! dirt on the floor, dirt on the walls, dirt on the stairs, dirty rags on dirty people, and an indescribable collection of filthy sacks and rotting rugs for the "shake-down" or bed. Dirty children coiled up on dirty boards, sleeping until dull light finds its way through the window of dirty glass, and awakens them to look out on a dirty street. Do you wonder if they live morally dirty lives, and die squalid in soul as well as body? Under the coverlet of night what a fermenting-vat of misery and muck lies simmering in London, or, to quote Thomas Carlyle—"All these heaped and huddled together, with nothing but a little carpentry and masonry between them; crammed in like salted fish in their barrel; or weltering, shall I say, like an Egyptian pitcher of tamed vipers, each struggling to get its head above the others." Clean and squalid alike need the Saviour. To Him both are equally welcome. To both we seek to carry his salvation. From both we have seen the jewels rescued.

The final record of many a weary, dreary life has been—

"Carried by the angels!"

OUR WORK IS SEEKING TO SAVE.

This is carried on amid the clean and squalid alike; there is no picking or choosing; respectable or disreputable they need God's salvation. From room to room, therefore, the missionaries make their way, sometimes encouraged, sometimes sickened—often saddened; but ever seeking by all means to save some. Never satisfied with the people being simply "clean," and never despairing, because they happen to be dirty. Our work is to seek their salvation. Unsaved cleanness is as far from God as unsaved dirtiness. Saved in dirtiness, is far removed from "Saved dirtiness." That we have no faith in; neither have we in a salvation that has no better foundation than soap, and knows no cleansing "deeper than the skin." "There is no difference." All alike need Christ, and all equally so. This is a truth human pride hates, but it is the truth of Scripture, and a truth the worker soon learns by experience. Cleanliness does not necessarily mean a welcome for Christ; neither does squalor a refusal. We have known clean doors shut in his face, and dirty ones opened; we have seen clean faces grow scornful at his name, and dirty ones become wet with tears, and we have seen the reverse. Cleanliness does not introduce to Him, and dirtiness cannot stay with Him. He saves not by human washing, but He always saves to it. We have therefore no variety in our Gospel. What does for the squalid must do for the clean. Christ a Saviour because a sacrifice—suits both—and each must learn to sing—

My only plea, Christ died for me,
But "Take me as I am."

and He does. . . .

The following are a few figures culled from one little district:—

Street.	Number of Houses.	Rented Rooms.	Families.
H Street	19	107	58
E Street	25	130	76
B Street	13	59	28
G Street	30	135	71
P Street	24	118	66
S Street	24	99	42
	135	648	341

Please look at this. Not for a moment only, but until you have mastered the details and comprehended the facts hidden behind the figures. It took some little time to compile, small as it is. Give it some thought. Nineteen houses in H street contain one hundred and seven rented rooms. We have left out unlet rooms, as they deceive by making the average of rooms to families better than it is. For instance, we know three large houses at the present time containing 54 rooms and 16 families. This gives an average of over three rooms to each family, but when we add that out of 54 rooms 33 are unlet a very different result is reached. It then stands 21 rooms and 16 families, an average of little more than one room to a family. Now these 107 rented rooms contain 58 families, not two rooms per family. Indeed the totals do not come up to that, for there are only 648 rooms for 341 families, we want nearly 40 rooms more to give each family the privilege of possessing two. Bear in mind also that these rooms include little back kitchens. Now, giving each family a living room, we have 324 rooms left for sleeping purposes, and 341 families (not persons) to put in them. Does some reader ask "How many persons would there be?" We are able to tell him, as we had them all counted when the rooms were reckoned—just 1,500.

No comment is needed. Let it also be carried in mind that many a gentleman's house has larger cupboards than the places we are reckoning by the highly respectable title of "rooms." The less said about sanitary arrangements the fewer nerves shocked. Yet from these districts there is "fruit unto Christ." Verily, much of Christ's fruit is gathered in strange orchards. Let it ever be remembered, when passing judgment on the squalid poor, that proper development

DEPENDS ON PROPER CONDITIONS.

"Plants, as well as animals, nurtured and grown in perfect darkness never acquire their natural colour. The former become white instead of green, and the leaves deprived of the sun's rays do not obtain their normal growth or form. A stunted moral and physical manhood is inevitably the result of certain conditions of existence which can easily be named." So writes a scientist. His words are true and we have named the "certain conditions."

The masses of ill-developed, stunted and blunted men and women constitute a grave danger which it is folly to ignore, specially as political power is falling more and more into the hands of the democracy. The following paragraph, taken from "Scientific Symbols," contains a profound truth, and with it we close this section of our article:—

> "The experiments in deep-sea soundings have thrown much light upon the subject of undercurrents. There is reason to believe that they exist in all or almost all parts of the deep sea, for never in any instance yet has the deep-sea line ceased to run out even after the plummet had reached the bottom. If the line be held fast in the boat, it invariably parts, showing, when two or three miles of it are out, that the undercurrents are sweeping against the bight of it with what seamen call a swigging force that no sounding-twine has yet proved strong enough to withstand. To understand the sea you must go below its surface—just as in social life, if you would understand the world, you must look below its conventionalities, its Court ceremonies, and its respectable Acts of Parliament. You must take into account its undercurrents. Beneath the Throne, the Parliament, and the Church, are bad undercurrents which sweep along with a 'swigging' force."

Won to Christ, they will become the mightiest power for good. Governed by sin, they will prove a resistless and ruinous force. Let us seek to win them.

SOUTH AFRICAN MISSIONS.

SIR,—Your readers may be aware of the great distress prevalent in South Africa. In some places there has been no rain for over three years. The results have been most painful. Natives, unable to get food for their cattle, have had to sell good cows and oxen at £1 and £1 2s. each. They have even had to go out to gather wild roots to maintain their own life. Missionaries of fifty years' standing tell us that many have lived a long time on one meal a day. The spiritual need has corresponded to the physical. Churches that were without pastors and teachers when the drought began, have been unable to invite labourers amongst them in their distress. Some of the mission churches have been without regular religious instruction for years. They, therefore, deserve our compassion.

Now the drought has broken, and while vegetation is growing again in the country a spirit of hope is stirring among the people. The larger churches are anxious to help the smaller and weaker ones. In their endeavours to this end the Congregational Union of South Africa have asked me to go and work amongst these people. They promise to support me in doing so, if English Christians will bear the expense of my journey to the Colony. Believing that these facts only need to be known to ensure the necessary help, I have accepted the invitation. £160 is needed to send myself, wife, and family. Rev. R. W. Thompson, Foreign Secretary of the London Missionary Society, says, in a letter to me on the subject, which I have full permission to use: "I am very glad to assure you of my hearty sympathy with the Congregational Union of South Africa in their effort, &c. The needs of the colony in this direction are, and must for some years be considerable." Friends willing to help may communicate with Mr. A. L. Hall, Secretary Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.; or with yours very truly, ARTHUR F. BULMER.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—A New Year's meeting of the City Police, their wives, and friends took place on the 12th instant, at the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate-street, Mr. George Williams in the chair. Rev. Dr. McAuslane, in the course of a practical address, urged upon those present to go forward in knowledge, in Christian life and effort. Mr. Russell, the missionary, stated that two meetings are held every Tuesday at the Y.M.C.A. for the police for Bible reading.

THE TWOFOLD CHRISTIAN LIFE.

BY REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

Address at Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate.

"The voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common."—ACTS x. 15.

THE Christian life, has three distinct and separate branches, when we consider it in detail. First, there is the life as received direct from God into our own souls; secondly, the life as exhibited day by day in our character and conduct; thirdly, the life as communicated to those round about us, whether near or distant. You will understand that it is not possible for us to enter at length into each of these.

The life as received from God the Holy Ghost must be assumed to be a fact in the experimental enjoyment of all to whom I speak; but of the life as exhibited, of the life as communicated, we ought, I think, very earnestly to endeavour to speak to one another on occasions like this; especially when, as I felt, it was my duty to combine the two headings placed before us, the one by the branch of the Christian brotherhood to which we are indebted for our meeting [Y.M.C.A.], and the other—the Evangelical Alliance. The two strikingly bring together these two sides of Christian life—the one as exhibited in our personal character and conduct, and the other, the life as communicated by Christian missionary work, whether it be at home or abroad.

Now, whose voice it was that spake to Peter from heaven, we are not here, or afterwards, informed, even when he retailed the account of this matter in the presence of the brethren at Jerusalem. It has always seemed to me perfectly clear that the voice was no human voice, but the voice of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. Peter answers the voice as "Lord;" nor does he withdraw this word when he recounts the matter at Jerusalem; therefore I have always felt it is one of those occasions where the Lord Jesus Christ speaks directly from heaven, after He had ascended to the glory of the Father. And if it be so, that this voice is the voice of the Lord Jesus Christ, it comes to us with very peculiar force, because it announces definitely to us what was the glorious purpose for which He had died: that He had died on purpose that He might cleanse the whole human race. It also announces the mighty power of that work which He had accomplished here below, as the Sacrifice offered for the sin of the world; that He had judicially been placed into a position in which potentially all might recognise their cleansing, and in which everyone might proceed to claim the benefits of the work of the Lord Jesus, if so be that the Gospel were properly announced to them. And so, assuming that the Lord Jesus Christ is the speaker, and assuming that He directly speaks with the purpose of exhibiting the magnificence of the work that He accomplished both in its potentiality before God, and in its future possibility for a sin-stricken world—do you not see what a splendid utterance this becomes: "What God hath cleansed, call not thou common." Let us apply it both to our own lives, and also to our operations with regard to the world at large.

Now, the dispensational beauty of this utterance—if I might so speak of it—is manifest to us all from the utterances of Peter, and from what we have gathered from other parts of Scripture: that the intention of the Lord Jesus Christ was to bring before Peter's mind the fact that all were welcome now; that the old ideas of the Jew, the dispensational privileges which he claimed, were altogether put away; and that now all mankind might accept the Gospel, and were welcomed into the presence of God by virtue of what the Saviour Jesus Christ had accomplished. The glory of this as it relates to ourselves, I should like to dwell upon if time allowed, but I can only say that it is by virtue of such a revelation that we have this day the privilege of claiming to be the children of God. Were it not for what the Lord Jesus Christ had done, and what He here exhibited to his servant Peter, none of us, unless there be some Jews present—and I thank God if there are—none of us as Gentiles could claim the blessings which are now announced to ourselves and our brethren as servants of the Lord Jesus and children of God Almighty.

Assuming that the purpose of the Lord Jesus was to exhibit to Peter the universality which his great work accomplished on earth, even then, there still remain very solemn thoughts that are not upon the surface. In the first place, have we ever comprehended why the Lord Jesus exhibited a gathering together of all classes of creatures known upon the face of the earth, whether beasts or birds? Surely if it be a universality of comprehension that He is exhibiting, then He is bringing before us all the human race, whether the educated, the philosophical, the refined, the highly trained; or whether the poor, the low, the ignorant, the debased—all alike are here accepted. Secondly, we have them brought together in a special vehicle, or vessel in which they may be exhibited before God; and man has entered into one great position or condition. Thirdly, they are bound or knit together (as the expression is, joined together); therefore, not only in position but apparently as alike in nature and alike in condition in the sight of God who gives this revelation. Fourthly, they are knit together at the four corners, which is by universal agreement now supposed to mean as gathered from the east and west and north and south, as comprehending the whole of the human race or globe. Now, if they be as exhibited here in this combination, all joined together in position and condition in the sight of God, what can that condition be but that of uncleanness, that of utter helplessness in nature? Because we are told that God hath cleansed, but God could not have said that He had cleansed unless there had been preliminary uncleanness. So we come to this, that notwithstanding the confidence and the vaunting ideas of men in the present day, who, with their so-called liberalism and very great ideas of humanity, would bid us believe that man is altogether like God, and, at least, perfect in his position, we come to this assertion—God declares that all men are by nature unclean, and, therefore, in need of the cleansing which He here has offered to the world.

That brings us to another point, that He announces them to have been cleansed. I know some differ from me in this and in kindred passages, yet I discover, thank God, the fact that judicially and potentially the Lord Jesus Christ's work is this—that it has provided a cleansing for all the human race. Not that that cleansing becomes experimentally beneficial until each individual soul is brought into direct relationship with the Lord Jesus, but that as in Adam all died, so judicially, so potentially, and so justly, I believe, God provides in the person of his Son a positional cleansing and possibility of salvation for all the human race, as it was here exhibited to Peter. Therefore, God announces through this vision to the man who was the most jealous for the rights of the Jewish race, that all the Gentiles had now come into a position in the sight of God, and should be in the sight of their neighbours equally justified in claiming the salvation of God as being appropriated to them individually. Thanks be to God for such a gift as this. Surely our souls must be kindled with deep emotions of gratitude and joy when we see that there is no hindrance to any of the sons of Adam who ever lived, but that "God in Christ has reconciled the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them," and that Jesus Christ has become, not only the propitiation for our sins, but also for the sins of the whole world.

If we accept, or even if we decline, this universal provision in the person of Christ, because we hold strongly to the doctrine of election, I say, let us proceed to take the instructions Christ Jesus gives. First, in order that we may take up that great leading thought that I put forward at the outset,—the exhibition of Christian life in ourselves. Does not this utterance to Peter bring before us a most exceeding solemn demand that we put away all sort of narrowness and exclusiveness—that utter want of charity which so contravenes the beautiful chapter that our brother read (1 Cor. xiii.) and which is so painfully exhibited among us in the present day; that narrow censoriousness of judgment of one another, that bitter cliqueism which separates one denomination from another, and prevents one man shaking hands with another man because he cannot pronounce his shibboleth or his -ism. Learn the great doctrine of Christian life, which makes us put forth the right hand of fellowship and the heart of true brotherhood to every single man, of whom we can believe in any degree he loves the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth. What right have I to judge my brother because he does not exactly agree with my ideas of Church government and discipline? Why should such narrow barriers prevent Christian fellowship?

Secondly, does not this word call upon Christians to work in the name of the Lord for the salvation of those who know not God, and have not obeyed the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ? When my Saviour says that He has cleansed that poor corrupted brother, or that poor nation, how can I refuse to work so that he, and it, may be brought into the fulness of the enjoyment of the Gospel of Christ? This word calls upon me at once to arise, and in the love of my Master seek to do what I can to bring about the salvation of the individual or the nation.

Thirdly, does it not open up to parents the door of hope as regards children who have brought them well nigh to despair? If there be one here to-day—and I do know, alas! there are many parents whose hearts are disconsolate over their boys, because they have sunk into the depth of iniquity—would not the Lord Jesus Christ still say to you through this grand and glorious word of encouragement, "What God hath cleansed, call not thou common or unclean"? The Lord can bring him back. Peter says, "Jesus Christ has taught me that I must call no man common or unclean." If we learn the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ aright, never, never let us say concerning any poor sinner that he is too vile, too filthy for Christ to save, or too much removed from the brotherhood of man for us to give him the right hand of fellowship. The lower he has sunk, the more blessed the privilege of going after him and seeking to win him to God. And if there be Christian charity at all, it hides, or covers up, a multitude of sins. God grant you grace to see this as Christians.

Then we turn from the Christian to the world, and we say what a wondrous word this is; for it calls upon us to realise that everyone should comprehend, the moment the Gospel is preached unto him, the purpose for which Christ Jesus has called him—called him from uncleanness to become clean. The judicial is meant to become the practical; the theoretical to become the real. The Gospel is preached not that men may wallow in sin, or dare to continue in iniquity, but that all, universally, should comprehend the power of Christ, as wrought for them, and come forth, now no longer to be unclean, but clean. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," and go bid every man upon earth to be cleansed in the Fountain that has been opened for sin and for uncleanness. We may not tarry in sin because grace is abounding, or leave the world to wallow in darkness or iniquity because Christ Jesus has declared that He hath judicially cleansed it.

Why, it is in this very passage that Peter is told to go and preach the Gospel to one who has a record like Cornelius. "If all are judicially cleansed, why go to them at all," some people might ask; "why not leave them?" It is because of this that the Master says, Go and preach to Cornelius, a man who is acceptable. Go to him; and how much more to the poor outcasts and the poor sunken sisters who, it may be, in one sense dishonour the streets; but I tell you the brothers have dishonoured the streets of the nation far more than the poor sisters themselves. We are to pity the drunkard as he reels along, far more than we should pity the legislature that has allowed him to be where he is. How we should be stirred, too, when we hear of the degradation of heathen lands, and how England's sons and daughters have gone to those lands and spread corruption amongst them.

Then we ought to pity the poor heathen themselves. Let us pity them at the fountain-head. Let us pity them in England, and begin the work of salvation in England, and cleanse the Augean stable of England, before we proceed to deal with the heathen. At the same time, let us seek to spread our wings of love and cover the nations with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Christ meant that the Church, and each individual member of it, should begin to be clean—begin to be pure. "He that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure." We long for Christ's return, and often wonder what it will be to us Christians. Perhaps many of us, as St. John says, will be "ashamed before Him at his coming;" for it is believers he speaks about in that passage.

The Lord give you and me grace to purify ourselves, and to begin from to-day! "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common." That hand of thine is not a common hand. That head of thine was never meant to be abused by being given up to worldliness and folly, or to calculate how much money you could make for your family, but to be dedicated to the service of God. Those feet were ever to be ready in the service of God. No common feet; no common brains—they are all set apart for the service of the Lord. And so with regard to each part of our being; it is consecrated, it is sealed to God. Blessed be the Lord when He says, "What God hath cleansed." He means it to become a practical power, and He will take the vessels and take the praise, and the heart and the life, and He will cleanse them step by step; though we shall never be perfect or delivered from the bondage of corruption on earth, still we shall be cleansed more and more as we yield ourselves up to Him. There is a day when we shall be pure even as He is pure. We shall be like Hiim, because we shall see Him as He is. Rest not content with any low level of holiness, but seek to rise to the highest that may be known.

Then with regard to the world outside, does it not give us a glorious promise of power for mission work? Does it not tell us that if He has rescued the worst there is no impossibility for us to do mighty works in his name? We have hitherto held back on the plea of our feebleness and powerlessness in the face of such a mass of ruin and degradation as the world contains. The Lord never bid us look at the weakness of the vessel. The vessel that has no power in itself may be filled, and fit for the King to drink from. The power that the Lord Jesus Christ has put in us is this: "Yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God." May God this day call us to realise that the life given is the life of Christ. The life to be accepted is to be more and more the life of the blessed Master; and the life to be communicated is the life of Christ which He has bestowed upon us. If He has deigned to say that no man is common or unclean, then the most helpless soul in this room may take courage to believe that He hath put out his hand to use us, as Peter was used, to communicate the Gospel to those who are in darkness; He will enable us to do his will, for He is able to save to the uttermost, and also to use to his glory and honour all that come unto God through Him.

RESCUE WORK IN GLASGOW.—The Salvation Army in this city have instituted a Relief Brigade for midnight work among the fallen. Mr. Edmond, who superintends the Scotch branches of the Army, states in a recent letter that very distressing cases are frequently met with. At one of the meetings there was a young woman who had just been prevented from drowning herself in the Clyde.

BRIGHTON Y.M.C.A.—Mr. Wiffen, the active and enterprising Secretary of this branch, has lately added to the many attractions of the place by introducing the telephone. City gentlemen in London, who desire to get a whiff of the sea air at Brighton, can inform themselves of the state of the weather and the accommodation at Steine House, through the call-rooms at Oxford-court, Cannon-street; 36, Coleman-street; or, 27, Chancery-lane.

AT THE MASTHEAD.*

A NEW YEAR OUTLOOK.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD, of Paris.

EVANGELICAL Christendom, at the present time, might be compared to a ship in the midst of a storm. The main questions are these: Where does the chief danger lie? What is to be done to save the ship? What reason is there to believe that the efforts made will be successful?

(1) Our Perils.—It has been well said that the waves outside of the boat can do it no harm; it is when they get inside that the danger begins. The flood itself, outside of the ark, can only float it. Even so the world, outside of the Church, may assault but cannot harm it; the world inside of the Church is what causes the ship to sink.

The present danger is that we are being invaded by the world, and the world is perverted to an appalling degree. The level not only of morality but of common decency is being perceptibly lowered from year to year; nor are the most shameful theories wanting in justification of the vilest practices. Spiritual things are ridiculed, and physiological laws are held to rule supreme over body and mind, heart and soul. Sin is quietly ignored, or openly denied. "I suppress sin," said M. Renan, a few days ago, in an after-dinner speech, where he recommended the philosophy of "good humour."

What then is the danger for the Church? It is to suffer herself to be stealthily poisoned by sensualism, fatalism, and the spirit of levity that tends to minimise sin. It is to play into the hands of the enemy, if not by open complicity, at least by silence and inertia.

Shall we be told that there is also a danger from an excessive reaction against formalism, leading to eccentricity? a danger lest the flesh should be pressed into the service of the Spirit? We grant it, although the chief peril at present lies on the side of congelation, not of undue effervescence. Christian churches, while praying to be filled with the Holy Ghost, are afraid of the Holy Ghost, afraid of boldness, afraid of anything that recalls the gifts and powers of the Apostolic age.

(2) Our Duties.—Our duty is to protest and fight against a religion of mere forms and ceremonies; of mere formulas and notions; of mere ideas (as though the idea of bread could be a substitute for bread, or the idea of Christ a substitute for Christ); of mere poetry and mythology. Our duty is to hold fast and to hold forth a religion of fact, of redemption, of grace, of faith, of strength Divine; a religion at once real and supernatural all the way through.

In order to do this effectually, we must cultivate retirement, prayer, fellowship with "our Lord Jesus Christ Himself" (2 Thess. ii. 16), familiarity with the Scriptures, submission to their teaching, love to man as well as love to God.

We must become apostolic in doctrine, holding fast "the form of sound words;" apostolic in life, i.e., "slaves of Jesus Christ" (Rom. i. 1). It is not enough that we should possess a religion, however correct, we must have a religion that possesses us. Divine life must be the very staple of our own life, not merely its seasoning. Sin, as such, the least taint of sin, must be viewed with horror, and cast away as we do a rotten egg.

We must learn, teach, and practise the doctrine of Christ's death as our death to sin, as well as of Christ's life as our life to God (Rom.[1] vi. 10, 11). We must be men, strangers to no legitimate interest and pursuit. We must create an atmosphere in which the beautiful as well as the good and the true will find their healthy growth, in and for God. As has been well said, "the natural man must first be changed into a spiritual man; and then the spiritual man must learn to be natural." A Christianity of that type, self-renouncing, loving, pure, bold, and beautiful, will not be without its attraction and influence upon the world, especially upon the young. Shall men nowadays be devoted, prompt, sacrificing, audacious, daring, doing, dying for every cause except the cause of God?

We must keep the flag high and follow it. If we fail to go forward we shall accomplish nothing; we shall repel the most generous and enthusiastic hearts; we shall strengthen the enemies of Christianity; we shall lose even that which we have.

A Church is not merely an audience, an infirmary, a school, a household; it is a holy band of warriors enlisted under the banner of Christ, and going forth in his name, "conquering and to conquer." If we are not doing this, the very doctrines of grace will make us the feeblest and most despicable of men, taking from us the resources of our natural strength, and not replacing them by the mighty energies of the Spirit. Two things we chiefly lack—personality and cohesion; that is to say, the Christian is not often to be found who is truly himself (not the imitator of some other man); and yet we are sadly wanting in the spirit of solidarity, we hardly know how to give "a long pull, and a strong pull, and a pull all together." Now, if we truly and practically place ourselves in the hands of the Lord as our Commander-in-Chief, we shall at once find the remedy for these two apparently opposite evils: for He will at once place each soldier at the post for which he is peculiarly fitted, and He will thus combine the efforts of each and all in one united action. The result will be power, oneness, mutual respect, ay, brotherly love throughout the ranks of regulars and irregulars.

Nor let us forget to add to our faith knowledge. Moses and Paul were fully educated men. So were the Reformers. So should our leaders be. So should a host of our youth become. God is not glorified by "science falsely so called," nor yet by ignorance truly so called, when it ventures to pronounce upon matters with which it is not sufficiently acquainted.

The Rev. Joseph Cook, who is doing such good service as a man of faith and of knowledge, has said that the Church of the future should be "scientific, Biblical, and practical." The Religious Tract Society lately observed that our young men are calling for books "not beneath the intellectual standard of the age." Let them have such books, by all means. When we consider the average talent now to be found in every range of literature and within the reach of the million, we may feel assured that the days of success and efficiency for pious platitudes are numbered.

Let us be bold in exposing the errors and assumptions so confidently put forth by many of the most popular anti-Christian writers. Let us show up in their true light the heartlessness of many of their theories, their worship of force, their contempt not of God only, but of man. In such controversies there is often a degree of exceeding courteousness on our part that boarders closely upon treason. Against the dictum of the secular friars, seeking to lay upon men a heavier yoke than any clergy ever did, let us be the true laymen, the true Protestants, the true free-thinkers; a noble ideal, this, for the loftiest ambition.

Let us speak to the men of our generation in their own tongue, or they will not care to listen. Let us give to the material world and to the human body their proper and important place. There has been a mistake made on those points which is neither rational nor Biblical.

Let us be ready to examine every fact and try every spirit. This is not the time to pronounce anything "impossible," a priori. Let us be interested in whatever relates to the welfare of our fellows. If we stand aloof from great social questions, many a noble heart will lay it to the account not of our spirituality but of our selfishness, and will be careful to stand aloof from us and our religion.

Let us ascertain whether there may not be some readjustment of our social habits that will create among Christians, as such, some visible bond of union other than what is found in our formal meetings for worship, so that the sense of fellowship may be strengthened, and the young, the lonely, the new convert, find a warm, happy, congenial, spiritual home.

It is high time we should be ready, and every man at his post, for the barometer is falling, the clouds are gathering, the sky is darkening, and who knows how soon the storm in full fury may be bursting upon us?

(3) Our hopes.—First of all "the Lord Jesus Christ, which is our hope" (1 Tim. i. 1); his person, his work, his presence, his promise, his coming.

(b) The fact that all earnest Christians are longing for and reaching after a better life more humble, more holy, more scriptural, more apostolic, more emptied of self, more filled with the Spirit, more passive towards God, more active towards man.

(c) The groaning of mankind, sick at heart, weary, affrighted, despairing, in spite of the increase of knowledge and material comfort. The most far-seeing thinkers are the most despondent. It begins to be perceived that the choice will have to be made between Divine life and a life not worth living; between God's fulness and a vacuum; between holiness and loathsome corruption; between the reign of force and the kingdom of love; between the Christian's hope and blank despair; between salvation and perdition. The darkest hour is before the dawn. It is for us to speed the day, and to manifest, by its own shining, the world of light, the presence of the Lord; a Christianity which the world may hate, but will be constrained to recognise and to respect, or better still, by the grace of God, to desire and to adopt.

(d) The success of every single-hearted effort made in the name and in the strength of Christ.

Let us then take courage and press forward, shoulder to shoulder, not inquiring of one another whence we hail and how we are called, but rather what we desire and whither we are tending: is it towards God, his righteousness, his Christ, his kingdom? On our banner let there be no name of man, no symbol of high science or fascinating art, but only a cross that stands and shines by the side of an empty grave.—Hoc signo vinces. "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

SPANISH EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

PASTOR and Señora Lopez Rodriguez have lately sent forth an Occasional Paper, with balance-sheet of their past year's work in Figueras. They make no grand show, but write very simply of the work done, and in a quiet, earnest way intimate their confidence for the future.

The object of this devoted couple is the spread of the Gospel, and to this work they have given their lives. Figueras is a district (in the province of Gerona) of twenty-five miles radius, if we include the various towns and villages evangelised by the Mission. There are a Gospel Hall and Sunday-school, adult Bible-class, day-school for boys and girls, night-school for adults, and cottage hospital. At Vilabertran, Gospel Hall and Sunday-school, with day-school; while at Rosas, in addition to similar agencies to the foregoing, they have a Stranger's Rest for Sailors.

Many interesting incidents are given of conversion and interest among the people. On one occasion Pastor Rodriguez, after a Gospel service, left his bag behind. It contained only a few Gospels, but he took measures for its recovery. The next day he received the following original telegram, "Your bag is safe with me. 'God is love.'" Madame Rodriguez writes of this: "Very few, if any, such Gospel telegrams have been sent in fanatical, priest-ridden Spain." Priest-ridden, indeed! On refusing to give up his Bible to be burnt, one convert was excommunicated and his wife commanded to leave him.

The cholera has bereaved and saddened and made destitute very many, and the trial of faith has been severe. The Pastor and his wife seem to have gone heartily into the work of relief, and by their help have won the confidence and affection of the people, besides strengthening the cause of Christ. Don Luis says: "What Spain needs is more Sunday-schools, so that through the children the Gospel may be carried into the homes." A Spanish boy, who had a Gospel leaflet given him, said, "I, Miguel, love the English for thinking of me, and I love Jesus more for telling them to do so." On his birthday, the pastor had letters from some of the boys and girls, who are docile and affectionate, while others sang under his windows.

These true labourers for Christ make a very earnest appeal for help, which is now more needed than ever. The following extract will give an idea of but one of the many difficulties to be encountered: "Two wards, one for men and one for women, had been furnished in part of a house, kindly lent to us by an old convert, and we looked forward hopefully to the sweet work of caring for the sick, and pointing them to the 'Great Physician.' No sooner were all arrangements complete, than a wealthy member of the Order of St. Vincent de Paul bought both house and land, in order to deter us from our work. In consequence, we were obliged to give up our little cottage hospital, which would have been such a blessing in the town. After many months of unsuccessful searching, we have at length in answer to prayer found a small, suitable building. The workmen are now cleaning and repairing it, and when this has been done, we shall joyfully furnish, for the second time, the first Protestant hospital in this province."

Help towards this excellent mission may be sent to Rev. J. C. Stewart Matthias, Wingham House, Harrogate, Yorks; or to Pastor Lopez Rodriguez, Calle Pedro, 3, Figueras, Spain (Par Perpignan).

MR. WM. FORBES has completed a Gospel Temperance Mission in connection with the Congregational Church, Pownhall-road, Dalston. The addresses were calculated to do much good. The Gospel of Jesus Christ was preached in connection with every address.

BIBLE STUDIES.—1.

HIDING FROM GOD; HIDING IN GOD.

THE world is divided into two classes: (1) those who are trying to hide from God, and (2) those who are hiding in Him. When sin had entered, we read, "Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord" (Gen. iii. 8). The sin-stained cannot face a holy God. "We hid, as it were, our faces from Him" (Isa. liii. 3), though He was calling, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved." And, in the great day of wrath, the despairing cry of those out of Christ will be: "Hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb" (Rev. vi. 16). A vain cry, for "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit, or whither shall I flee from thy presence?" (Ps. cxxxix 7—12). There is only one way to hide from God, and that is to hide in Him. Flee to God if you would flee from Him. "Thou art my hiding-place" (Ps. cxix. 114).

He hides (1) the sinner under the blood (Exod. xii. 13); (2) the troubled in his pavilion (Ps. xxvii. 5); (3) the persecuted and slandered in the secret of his presence (Ps. xxxi. 20); (4) the weak from tempest, and refreshes them (Isa. xxxii. 2); (5) the worker in the shadow of his hand (Isa. xlix. 2). "Your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. iii. 3). "With Me thou shalt be in safe guard" (1 Sam. xxii. 23). "Thy hidden ones" (Ps. lxxxiii. 3).

WORKING GIRLS' HOUSE, DRURY-LANE.

THIS House was opened in the spring of last year. Friendless girls are taken in, boarded and lodged at a small cost, until situations are procured for them. Very young girls receive training for service. Cooking and sewing classes are carried on daily. A Temperance class has been started once a week, to which mothers are invited, and on Sundays a Bible class is held for the girls placed out at service. This locality is perhaps second to none in the necessity for providing some place of resort to gather in young girls out of the cruel streets; it is a district of theatres, music-halls, public-houses, and worse than these.

The Home is in some measure the result of a touching reply given by a group of girls who were standing at the entrance of a very evil court near Clare-market, one bitter winter's night. Two of our ladies, returning from a meeting in the neighbourhood, stopped and spoke to them, urging them to go home away from such sights and sounds. "Surely you have some place to go better than this?" The girls, who evidently had some knowledge of the lady who spoke, said, "No, we have not; you have women's meetings, and places enough for men and lads, but for us girls there's no place but the streets."

It was in a sense true. The wretched dens they sleep in, and occasionally have a meal, probably without a fire (for the parents are out selling in the streets, or attending at the doors of the theatres until midnight), can scarcely entice them to leave the well-lighted public-houses, or the sights of these streets, with carriages and cabs flashing backwards and forwards with gaily-dressed occupants, bound for the different places of amusement on all sides.

The circumstance was mentioned at the next meeting of workers. The result was the formation of a committee to carry out the idea then started by the Working Girls' House. Our day nursery was moved to the first floor. This is usually quite full. We have engaged the services of a Christian lady, as housekeeper and superintendent. Different friends take the several classes, and our girls are all total abstainers. Christian parents, when your own girls gather round your hearth, thank God for it, but think kindly of the homeless and friendless ones, remembering the Father's will that not one of them should perish. Help will be gladly received by Mrs. Willis, 33, Gordon-square, W.C.

THE GOSPEL FOR ARABIA.

THE BEDOUINS.

DEAR SIR,—I recently sent you a pamphlet, which I am endeavouring to circulate, on the evangelisation of Arabia. In it I pointed out that there are at least three distinct fields for mission work in that long-neglected land: (1) among the Bedouin tribes of the Euphrates valley and Northern Arabia; (2) in El Hasa and Oman on the Persian Gulf; and (3) at Aden, and possibly also at other points in the South, and along the shore of the Red Sea. I wish now to suggest what might be done, by way of a commencement, in the first of these three fields of labour. If any of your readers should wish for more detailed information, I shall be happy to send them copies of the pamphlet referred to.

My proposal in regard to the nomadic tribes of the North, is that the missionary should attach himself to some one of them, share their wandering life, living, as far as possible, in respect of food, dress, &c., just as they do; making himself useful to them in any way that he can (especially by his medical skill, if he be a doctor), and making it the business of his life to teach them the truth and to lead them to the Saviour. Since my pamphlet was written I have heard of two instances of men, neither of them Europeans, indeed, but one of them a Christian, who, in the one case for gain from the sale or barter of goods, and in the other for the purpose of imparting Christian instruction, have actually lived such a life for a time among the tribes. In the case of the Christian, the Arabs, when he wished to return to Syria, could with difficulty be persuaded to let him go, after only a few months' stay with them; they yielded only on his giving a solemn promise to return if he could, so highly had they learnt to value his services. Thus the practicability of such a life, however rough and trying, has been sufficiently demonstrated.

What qualifications would be required in the men who should devote themselves to it? (1) High education, a University course, a degree, is not essential. (2) Still less is ordination necessary. (3) It is not necessary that the missionary should be very young. A man of forty-five might succeed just as well as a man of twenty-five. As to what is necessary: (1) True conversion to God. (2) A thorough missionary spirit. (3) Experience in soul-winning at home. (4) Good health and constitution. (5) The determination to devote his life to this work. (6) A preparedness to "rough it" to any extent. A few months' training in Mr. Guinness's or some other missionary institution would be very valuable. I am uncertain, at present, as to whether the missoinary should or should not be married.

I believe the cost would be comparatively small. If Christian people knew that four men, of tried and approved character, were willing to devote their lives to the evangelisation of the long-neglected Arab tribes, and only awaited the needful funds to send them out, these would surely soon be forthcoming. What is to be the next step? What will the Church of Christ do in this matter? The need and the opportunity have been plainly put before her. The immediate question is: Who is willing to consecrate his life to this work? May the Lord Himself call out some for it. Will your readers join me in prayer for this? In another letter I will, with your permission, point out the openings which present themselves in other parts of Arabia.

SEAMEN'S CHAPEL, LONDON DOCKS.—On Monday week there was a joyful gathering of Sunday-school children in the chapel to celebrate the annual festival. A great work is being done by the Seamen's Christian Friend Society among the children in the district; many attend the Sunday-schools and the Band of Hope, so that even now the premises are becoming too small to accommodate those who attend.

For the Young.

DAISY DAY.

BY MISS L. M. VON FINKELSTEIN.

DAISY DAY was an only child. Her Christian parents consecrated her to the Lord, and daily impressed upon her tender mind a love for prayer and a reliance on God. Daisy's trials began early in life. She was twelve years old when her father died suddenly, leaving her mother in the last stages of consumption. When near her end, Mrs. Day sent for her only brother and entrusted her child to his charge. Mr. Graham was a man of large wealth, who lived only for this world. Mrs. Day dreaded the influence that a worldly home would have on her daughter; but it was her only resource, and she prayed earnestly that God would keep her child pure and unspotted from the world.

Calling Daisy to her bedside, she said: "My poor little lamb, you are now going out into the world; remember all we have taught you; read your Bible every day; pray to God to guide you in everything; never give up trusting in Him; and have this one object in view—to prepare yourself here for a better life hereafter." Daisy promised, with bitter tears, that she would, with God's help, fulfil all her mother's wishes. After the death of her beloved parent, Daisy was taken to her new home. A feeling of awe and loneliness filled her soul as she entered the magnificent house of her uncle, and she longed for her simple home again. Mr. Graham was a widower, and had two children, Arthur and Violet, about the same age as Daisy. Mrs. Graham had been a woman of fashion, and had seldom occupied herself with anything but worldly pleasures. Family prayer was unknown in this household.

Daisy had never associated with her cousins, and now she felt very timid. At breakfast next morning she folded her hands, closing her eyes, bowed her head, waiting for the accustomed blessing; but she was shocked to hear her cousins titter, and Arthur call out to her and ask what she was waiting for.

Her face flushed, as she looked around in bewilderment, and said: "Why, for the blessing."

"What an old-fashioned girl you are! What's the blessing for? We can eat just as well without it," said Arthur, laughing.

"But we ought to thank God for the things He has given us," said Daisy.

"We would have them all the same, if we did not," said Violet.

"Hush, hush!" said Mr. Graham, looking up from his paper, which he had been busily reading.

Daisy's food remained almost untouched, and, when she rose from the table, her little heart was overflowing. She went to her room, and, throwing herself on her knees, asked God to comfort and guide her.

Several weeks passed, and Daisy felt very lonely, for the breach between her and her cousins seemed daily to grow wider and wider. They laughed at her for praying and reading the Bible, and when she sang hymns Arthur would join in by singing some frivolous song.

"Oh, Arthur!" said Daisy one day, "why are you so rude? Don't you ever pray?"

"No; what shall I pray for? I have everything I want. It is only poor people who need to pray."

"Why, don't you thank God for all the beautiful things He gives you?"

"I have them all the same, although I never pray."

"Ask Him to give you a grateful heart, Arthur, and that He may be your Guide and Defender from all evil."

"Daisy, you have got such funny ideas!" exclaimed Violet, who was reading a novel. "I would much rather read this book than your old Bible."

"That's because you don't read about our Saviour with love in your heart for Him; if you did, you would find it a great comfort."

"Pshaw!" said Violet, "all I care for is to read nice stories, play and sing well, draw and paint."

"Mamma used to tell me that an education without religion is like 'sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.'"

"Do you mean to insult me," said Violet, haughtily, "by saying that all my acomplishments are worth nothing without your religion and your Bible?"

"Don't be angry, Violet; I mean to say that for a happy life here, and to be prepared to enter heaven, we must love God while here on earth, with all our hearts, and serve Him faithfully, for this world is not our home."

"It is mine!" said Violet, emphatically, "and I intend to be as happy as possible. I don't want to die yet, nor do I want to go to heaven."

Daisy's cousins continued to regard her as a kind of curiosity, but she kept daily praying for them and for her uncle, and she never omitted reading her Bible daily, however busy she might be. Some years passed, and Daisy was still an inmate of her uncle's house, maturing in character and becoming more and more fixed in her correct principles, while her cousins only seemed to grow more vain and selfish, living as if the world was made only for them to enjoy. Mr. Graham saw the difference between the characters of his children and that of Daisy, who always was contented and thankful for everything done for her, while his children claimed everything as their right, and grumbled when they did not get it. He often reflected on himself for bringing them up in such selfish ways.

One day Mr. Graham returned home looking pale and haggard. His children did not notice his agitated manner, but Daisy did, and her heart ached as she timidly glanced at him. Arthur was just then reading the evening paper; his face suddenly turned pale, and jumping up and pointing to a paragraph, he cried in a bitter voice:

"Have you failed, father?"

If a thunderbolt had fallen, the look of consternation could not have been more visible on the faces of the family.

"Yes," said Mr. Graham, "I am a ruined man, for I have lost everything in the world, even this house."

"And what will become of us?" said Arthur and Violet in one voice.

"I don't know," said Mr. Graham, groaning. "You will have to work for a living, for I have absolutely nothing."

"Work!" said Violet, contemptuously, "after we have been accustomed to such elegance. I would rather die!"

"You should not have brought us up in such riches, if you could not afford it, for I won't work!" said Arthur.

Daisy looked shocked at the unfeeling manner with which the children spoke to their unfortunate parent. Going up to Mr. Graham, she took his hand and kissing it, she said: "Uncle dear, the Lord will provide."

"Don't go to preaching such nonsense now, Daisy," said Arthur, roughly.

"Hush!" said Mr. Graham, angrily, "and don't let me hear you speak so disrespectfully again;" and he bowed his head in agony, left the room, and shut himself in his study.

"Oh, Arthur and Violet, how could you speak so unfeelingly?" said Daisy.

"How can you expect us to feel, when we find we are beggars?" said Violet.

Daisy entered her uncle's study without knocking, and, seeing a revolver lying on the table, exclaimed: "Oh, uncle, don't! You will be lost soul and body! Oh, uncle, cannot you bear this trial?"

"Daisy," he answered, "you have faith in God; keep this always. Go now and leave me, my child."

But she continued: "Uncle! please trust Him; pray, and He will help you."

Mr. Graham took her two hands in his, and said: "Daisy, my child, I have not prayed for years—since I was a few years older than yourself. How can I pray now, when I brought up my own children to think they could get on without prayer?—they even throw it up to me now. I have ruined my life and theirs: what shall I live for?"

"Oh, uncle, God will forgive you, and hear you, if you pray to Him now: and is it not your duty to live and teach your children the right way?"

Mr. Graham said: "Since you have been in my house I have felt as if my mother's spirit had come back in you; she prayed for me on her death-bed. Since then I have lived a careless life, and never prayed: but, as I daily watched you, I felt how wrongly I had brought up Violet and Arthur."

"'The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away,'" said Daisy. "Perhaps it is better, after all, that you have become poor."

"I will be a man, at any rate," said Mr. Graham, rising and taking Daisy in his arms. He then called Violet and Arthur, and said: "Children, I have brought you up with false ideas. This world is but an empty show; the future life is the one which we must strive for. Will you be noble, and help me to live a new life and build up a new home?"

"Yes, father," said Arthur, with tears in his eyes, "I will do all I can; I overheard all you said to Daisy, and I will try and live a new life."

Violet was of a vainer and more selfish nature, and it was with a great deal of bitterness that she gave up her elegant home to reside in the cottage where Daisy had spent her childhood days. Mr Graham built a family altar the first night in their new home, and Daisy was so happy that her tears flowed for joy.

Daisy soon found employment in painting and designing dinner-cards, and doing embroidery. Violet at first shrunk from the idea of working; but gradually her false pride wore away, as she watched Daisy cheerfully performing many of the household duties besides her work. She felt ashamed, and so began assisting her, and soon this became a pleasure.

More than a year rolled over the heads of our young friends. Violet was seated at a window, reading. "Daisy," she suddenly exclaimed, looking up, "I don't wonder you used to be so happy reading this blessed Book. You said truly to me one day, 'Read it with love, and you will find it a comfort.' I feel happier to-day, and more contented in this, our humble home, than I did when we lived in such grandeur. God has answered your prayers for me, dear Daisy; but I tremble now at the thought of what an aimless, useless, wicked life I should have led, had it not been for your coming amongst us."

REV. W. HASLAM IN ONTARIO.

THE mission held in the parish church of Cobourg has far exceeded our most sanguine expectations in its results. Souls of young and old have been blessed with a knowledge of the forgiveness of sin, and believers have learned the secret of being kept by a supernatural power through faith in a living Saviour. There is a joy amongst us now, and a unity of hearts that we have never understood before. Criticism has been altogether hushed in the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, which has been mightily working in our midst. Christ has been mighty to save, and has also manifested his power to deliver from bondage, by casting out of not a few the demon of dumbness, so that they are willing now to testify openly for Christ.

The commodious church and schoolhouse have been filled three times a day almost from the commencement of the mission, and the good that has been done it is impossible to relate. Mrs. Haslam's meetings for women have been a source of untold blessing both in and far beyond our church, for numbers came long distances in order to be present.

THE NEEDS OF THE FAR EAST.

THE following extracts, which we are permitted to make from a letter written to us by Mr. W. T. Beynon, who lately went to China as a worker, will deeply interest the friends of Foreign Missions; we trust they may awaken a response in many young hearts. Mr. Beynon was a member of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, at 186, Aldersgate-street, and his letter was written to Mr. Hall, the Secretary of that Society:—

At Suez we stayed three days. It is a wretched place, filled with wretched people. The houses seem to be slowly crumbling to dust. The streets, such as they are, have about six inches of dust lying everywhere. The people go about in it quite unconcernedly. It is a fair sample, I am told, of the majority of Egyptian towns.

At Colombo, we went ashore as soon as we arrived, and Terry and I went to the Salvation Army meeting. Mr. Budd had met "Captain" Norman, and had told us to see him. We spoke at the meeting through interpreters. There were about a hundred people present. A policeman has been converted through the Army there. He is a jailer in Slave Island. No doubt about his conversion, I assure you; he serves the Lord, with all his house. His children have been converted through the Army also; his wife knew the Lord before. We had a blessed time. Terry and I slept that night and the following at "Captain" Norman's. He lives very simply, just the necessaries of life, no luxuries, few comforts; but the Lord dwells with him, and it is a happy household. Mrs. Norman was down with fever, but was quite cheerful and never murmured in the least. They have both been out three years, in India for the most part of the time. Lieut. Bray, born in India, works with them at present in Colombo. On Wednesday night Terry and I spoke at a meeting in Slave Island, at the house of Mr. Lloyd, the jailer. The meeting was held outside under the verandah, and about 150 people must have been present, Malays, Singhalese, Europeans, or their descendants. Most of them understand English. The Army meetings are conducted on the same lines as at home; from what I saw, I must say that I believe they succeed: without a doubt they reach the people, and the people get the Gospel pure and simple.

We visited Dr. and Mrs. Oram, at Wellawatte, seven miles from Colombo: this was a treat indeed. They are both as happy in their native-roofed cottage in the jungle, as if they were in a mansion at the West-end. We spent about three hours with them, taking breakfast. The Doctor said they were economising; you would have agreed with him, I think, had you seen how they live—and yet they don't seem to want anything. Bananas, with cakes made of rice, and a cup of good tea made a splendid breakfast, after we had sung, "We are all our Father's children," and asked our Father to bless our food. I am sure Mrs. Oram was quite as happy as ever she was in the luxurious home she has left. What a lot of work there is to be done in Ceylon! A young man, or a dozen young men, prepared to rough it a bit for the Lord Jesus Christ, would find plenty to do, and could live very cheaply. The Lord would supply any who come out for Him.

Our next call was at Penang. Here Mr. McDonald met us. He is the only European missionary in the island, and does a considerable work among the Chinese, of whom there are thousands. We spent six hours very happily with Mr. McDonald. Here again we saw that there was a great need for labourers. At Singapore we stayed a day and a night, sleeping at Mr. Hocquard's. He met us on board as soon as we arrived, and took us with him at once. We visited a number of people at Singapore, and Mr. Hocquard got up a meeting for us in the evening. The little chapel in which it was held was quite full, and we had a very happy time.

I want to tell you what I heard at Singapore. There are 100,000 Chinese on the island, besides Malays and Europeans. Mr. Hocquard said he could not ask us to remain there, but there was plenty of work for us all. He trusts the Lord for all he needs. Mr. Haffenden, the agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society, told us he could employ at least a dozen men if they would only come out. He had written home repeatedly to the Society appealing for men. Java, close by, has twenty-two millions of people ready to receive the Word. Sumatra has twenty-four millions, without a single missionary; whilst the whole Malay Peninsula is without a man to tell of Jesus.

Now, who will come? I never thought the need was so very great. These people are really calling for the Gospel, and they all look to you in England. Here is something for Y.M.C.A. men to pray about: "the King's business requireth haste." Millions are perishing—actually perishing. Do not be afraid that too many will come. Do put this question of the heathen more to the front than ever; let it be the great question of the day. The young men must move. Nothing less than "the world for Jesus Christ" should satisfy us. Cry aloud, and by God's help, let Aldersgate-street be set in a blaze—such a blaze as shall stir up every heart. Tell them that what has to be done must be done speedily. Do not be afraid of going too fast. The Lord will guide you, and He will send the labourers if they be only willing to go.

A DEFENCE OF THE PENTATEUCH.

THE author of this book* is Professor of Hebrew Language and Literature in Hartford Theological College, in America. His attention was first drawn to the subject while pursuing Old Testament studies in the University of Leipsic some years ago. "In view of the startling conclusions reached by an eminently respectable portion of German scholarship, he felt bound to give reasons, at least to himself, for his faith in an Old Testament revelation." With this end in view, he wrote articles in the Bibliotheca Sacra and Journal of the Society for Biblical Literature, which, carefully revised and enlarged, form about one half of the present volume. The subject, therefore, has had the advantage of being well digested, and much of the matter at least has not been published in its present form until tested by criticism.

The book contains a most timely refutation of the wild fancies of German critics, which have of late been largely embraced by many, both in England and Scotland, as if they were the results of sober scholarship. Dr. Bissell shows, on the contrary, that much of the so-called scientific criticism is crude, fanciful, and baseless, full of contradictions and inconsistencies, wholly unworthy of the exaggerated encomiums bestowed upon it by Professor Robertson Smith, and others.

The volume is a most interesting one, and is likely to be very useful to ministers and teachers, who cannot escape, in the present day, hearing much spoken as to German Biblical criticism of a certain kind as if it were Gospel truth. This work, by a very competent critic, will show them how little such views deserve to be accepted, and how thoroughly trustworthy is the testimony which the Bible delivers concerning itself.

EAST-END DISTRESS.—The distress of many respectable but poor families whom I have visited during the past two weeks is painful to witness. If the men go to the relieving officer they are simply told to "go into the House," and that means the breaking up of what little home they have left, and being branded as paupers. Appeals for help are increasing upon me and my co-workers, and now for lack of means we are powerless to help. I should be most thankful, on behalf of the destitute, for gifts of money, food, or clothing sent to me.—Yours faithfully,

THOMAS LAWSON (Minister).

REV. E. P. HAMMOND AT KINGSTON.

THIS evangelist commenced on Sunday, 10th instant, at the Albany Hall, Kingston-on-Thames, a series of united mission services for children and adults. A meeting of Christian workers was held on the preceding Saturday at the Baptist Chapel, when Mr. Hammond earnestly appealed for the prayers and assistance of all true Christians, irrespective of denomination. On Sunday, at 3 p.m., the work commenced auspiciously by a crowded meeting of Sunday-school children and their teachers. At the close of the address Christian workers could be seen busy in all directions with the anxious. The evening meeting was also crowded, chiefly with adults, though a large number of children were also present. As in the afternoon, the message delivered was exceedingly powerful.

On the Monday the blessing which had followed the meetings of the preceding day became more plainly apparent. In one case, half a dozen children sitting near each other had yielded to a Saviour's love. A young lady had come weeping to the foot of the Cross, and felt her burden roll away. Numbers of young people and adults, hitherto careless and indifferent, had gone home to weep and pray. On this Monday evening nearly three hundred children and adults were again awaiting his message, despite the dismal wintry night. Mr. Hammond remarked, "Someone has been at work here." Yes, indeed. Noble ladies had been at work for Jesus in the cold, muddy streets, gathering the lambs. We observed one lady in a corner, with a score of rough-looking, shuffling lads ranged by her side.

Evening after evening the tide of blessing has rolled on. The attendance increased each succeeding day, until towards the close of last week 800 persons, mostly children, filled the spacious hall. But still there is room.

It is a difficult thing to describe the animated scenes of the after-meetings. On one occasion, within a yard of the writer, a young man was earnestly dealing with a boy in tears. In the next row, a lady was ministering to two girls, one of whom was weeping bitterly. On my right, a gray-haired veteran was busy with pencil and paper, "booking" his likely cases. Another look to my left disclosed a bright young girl, with a coloured card, representing sin and righteousness, busy with an anxious lad. Over there by that pillar is Mr. Spiers, with a group of children hard at work. He informed me that he had come across many cases of true conversion during the week. In one instance, brought to notice at one of the morning meetings for praise and prayer at the Presbyterian Church, four children of the same family, ranging from the age of sixteen downwards, had been brought to Jesus, and were happy in his love.

To number the conversions would not be either possible or wise. But the fact remains, that very many, both young and old, have said, in the words of Mr. Hammond's favourite verse,

Jesus, take this heart of mine,
Make it pure and wholly thine;
Thou hast bled and died for me,
I will henceforth live for Thee.

Kingston. WILLIAM DIXON.

On Friday evening Mr. Hammond addressed a crowded meeting in Mr. Bryant's Hall—"The Gables"—at Surbiton. Many persons of high social position were present. At the close of the address all remained to the second meeting. It was found that many, old and young, were bathed in tears. Workers reported that not a few gave evidence of having received Christ.

BRIGHTON.—Mr. W. Day, of the Evangelisation Society, has just closed a successful ten days' mission at the Thomas-street Mission-hall. The meetings have been well attended, especially by the working classes. Some have been aroused, and consecrated themselves more fully to the Lord. We thank God for the few who have decided to follow Jesus.

"A GRAVE CHARGE."

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of December 31, "H. G. M." in a letter "emphatically denies" what he truly terms "a grave charge" made against the English Army and Navy by "Less than the Least," in THE CHRISTIAN of December 24. I have had information more than once by word of mouth from an ex-military man who spent nearly twenty years in India and Burmah in regiments of the line, and I can as emphatically endorse the truth of the allegation regarding the supply of girls for regiments of the line as "H. G. M." in toto denies it, and I could add particulars to this endorsement with regard to which, when told to myself, and on expressing horror and indignation, the reply was made "that much worse could be told."

The dead silence maintained by military and naval men who do know all about the state of things going on in India and Burmah, is one reason for so much ignorance regarding them at home; bad men of course hide and deny them, and good military men are afraid to say anything about them, and so help on the silence.

For what reason does our Government maintain a supply of these unhappy women? We get the reply to this question in a sentence in a speech of Right Hon. Mr. Childers, made on the memorable night of April 20, 1884, as follows: "I should be sorry, for the sake of our army and navy, to see the C. D. Acts repealed." It is indeed "a grave charge," but not more grave than true; and so grave that unless true no one could be so rash as to make any assertion about the matter. The exact manner in which a thing is told may not be quite correct, but the substantial truth be quite so. If this letter should meet the eye of "H. G. M.," I beg to assure him that I have not meant to be in the least personal in any remark I have made. L. J. F.

DEAR SIR,—I see in your last issue that your correspondent, "Less than the Least," now confines his "Grave Charge" to India, and gives as his authority Mr. Webb-Peploe. A matter so grave should either be proved or authoritatively denied. It is confessedly difficult to prove a negative. I can only say that during a long service in that country, and latterly in positions in which such a system, had it existed, might well have come to my knowledge, I never heard of such a thing, and am at a loss to conceive in what manner such a "hideous supply" could have been ensured.

One thing, however, I must confess, for it came officially under my notice fifteen years ago (the regulations on the subject may no longer be the same for aught that I know), that in the then regulations for "Lock Hospitals," in force for the Bengal Army (to which I do not belong), there stood a clause, impressing upon commanding officers that the object of the regulations was not to diminish the number of prostitutes.—Yours truly,

JOHN G. HALLIDAY.

[Our correspondent will find as ample proof as he could desire if he consults the official documents cited in the letter to which he refers.]

MRS. JARVIS, wife of the American minister to Brazil, has the Christian courage to refuse to receive calls of etiquette from other foreign ambassadors on Sunday.

CAUTION.—We warn our readers against a woman who, under various names, calls on ladies in reply to advertisements, and, after telling them some untruthful story, in which she perhaps mentions some well-known name as a reference, pretends that she has no money to pay her fare home. Telegraph to the referee while she waits, and if the reply be unsatisfactory, act accordingly. The Apostle says the law is made for such.

QUEENSLAND.—Social Purity and Temperance are receiving much attention in Brisbane, the capital of this extensive and rising colony, and they are both greatly needed. There is a terrible amount of vice and drunkenness. The Social Purity Society recently held a meeting to protest against the C. D. Act, but whether it will have much effect remains as yet to be proved. Temperance is gaining ground, and many wearers of the blue ribbon may be met in the streets.

DISTRESS IN BULGARIA.

DISTRESSING accounts have again been received from Pastor J. A. Tonjoroff and his wife of the condition of the people in Philippopolis. We give a short extract from Mrs. Tonjoroff's letter:—

"Philippopolis, South Bulgaria,
"Dec. 28, 1885.

"Last week was one of the hardest weeks I have ever spent. I came home at night with such headache that it was impossible to write. We had so very much suffering and so many deaths every day, besides having letters and telegrams to be written and sent off, also petitions to the Government for the release of four dear fellows whose brothers and fathers were killed in the war: the four suffering from inflammation of the lungs. My husband has been going from one Government department to another, and they promise to release them. We want it done at once, but everything is done so very slowly here; they do not think of the starving wives and children these poor fellows have left at their homes uncared for. On the 22nd we had 27 new patients, two perfectly frozen. After working some time over one, he told us who he was, and where he came from, and then died. The other was dead before he could be taken into the ward. Typhus fever is very much spreading; small pox, thank God, not so much as we feared. We have in the old hospital building twenty cases.

"Dr. Bliss, of Constantinople, has sent here a man to distribute Testaments, and has given me permission to take as many as I want for my work. I have received and given away some hundreds in our hospital. I was very thankful for them. It is so delightful to hear one poor fellow after another saying, 'I could not sleep last night, but I have spent my time reading.' The poor Servians who were in the hospital sick sent me a petition, as they are all going home, to intercede for them. They were too weak to walk, and wanted to be sent by train to Pagarjick, from there in carriages. We gave them all cotton-quilted jackets, socks, skin sandals and thick flannel to wrap their legs in, shirts, drawers, and two francs each; that is, the sick ones. One poor fellow remains; he is very ill. I am perfectly sure God called me into this work, and the means to carry it on I do believe He will send. We have ten, fifteen, and twenty fresh cases every day."

In a previous letter Mrs. Tonjoroff says, "Many hundreds must perish from cold and starvation, if help is not sent soon." If any Christian friends incline to help in this time of need, remittances may be made to M. Braithwaite, 312, Camden-road, N. They are much in need of medicines. Would any friend send out a case of Homœopathic medicines, such as will be most useful in fevers, &c.?

"WELCOME HOME," CARDIFF.

THROUGH the kindness of a friend we were able to entertain many destitute seamen here at the recent Christmas-tide. Affectionate appeals were made to them by Mr. R. Cory and others. Manifest blessing has been the outcome. A young prodigal Swede, of excellent education, lost and dead, now testifies of being found and alive.

A sad case came to our notice after the meetings, revealing the sad destitution which some of these men pass through. A young American, who listened most attentively, went, in company with seven others, to get a night's rest at a limekiln. In the early dawn, one of them noticed the young man near the fire. He went to rouse him, when one of his legs came off, charred. He had slept the sleep of death. I asked his companions where they intended sleeping the next night. They replied, "In the same spot; we have no other shelter." Moved by these tales of woe, I appealed to God, and then to some of his children. The result has been that a warehouse at the back of our house has been let to me, and since then we have had the comfort of providing a bed and refreshment for over twenty-five homeless sailors each night. Brethren, "be ye also enlarged," and send help.

GLASGOW WAIFS AT SUPPER.

BETWEEN seven and ten o'clock on the evening of January 12 there were fewer waifs in the streets of the city of Glasgow than there will be on any other evening during the year. For eleven hundred newsboys and girls, shoeblacks, match, pipe, and vesuvian vendors, singers, and beggars supped together. Gathered from all quarters of the city, they more than filled the spacious Great Western Hall, Wellington-street, and beyond question formed the most remarkable of the assemblages that that building has yet witnessed. Hitherto Mr. and Mrs. Quarrier, in connection with the Orphan Home Mission, have given this annual tea and supper in the James Morrison-street Hall, but increasing numbers necessitated the change. The guests did not dress for the occasion, a good many of them did not wash, but coming direct from their evening labour, appeared fully arrayed in the rags and dirt which close communion with the streets never fails to give. The majority of them were early upon the scene, and by seven o'clock, the hour fixed for the commencement of the proceedings, the hall was crowded.

For the first time in the history of this annual repast the visitors sat at table; previously a hand-mug had been the only utensil. Now, however, there were the ordinary soiree tables, covered, moreover, by clean, white table-cloths, with which the not over-clean hands of the youngsters contrasted somewhat strongly. The provision once to the fore, havoc was pretty speedily created therein, and the assembly soon made clear its title to be considered deserving of and needing the refection. Buns disappeared as if by magic, mouths small to look at manifested consumptive faculties of a most exhaustive character, and for the time being the babel of tongues was completely overcome by the munching of cake and biscuit, the drinking of tea, and the continuous clatter of dishes. The 3600 cups of tea submitted to the guests by Mr. W. Freer, the purveyor, were drained to the bottom, and the 1100 or so bags of "good things" likewise disappeared with a rapidity marvellous to behold.

However, the eating and the drinking came to a close, and having expressed their gratification by a loud hurrah, the audience settled themselves down to listen to a few words from their friend Mr. Quarrier, to hear songs and recitations, and to gaze upon the wonderful productions of the magic lantern. Mr. Quarrier talked pleasantly to them, wished them a Happy New Year, and they with one voice returned the compliment. About 300 held up their hands in response to a call for those who were fatherless, and forty or fifty showed in a similar manner that they had no mothers. "Would each of you like to have a station of your own, so that there might be no quarrelling?" asks the speaker. "Yes," was the reply of a very large number of voices, and like answer was made to the suggestion that something should be done in the way of arranging such stations, with uniforms, badges, and so on for the boys. Eventually, indeed, a resolution amounting almost to a vote of censure upon the magistrates was passed, the young audience acclaiming with quite profound zeal the sentiment that the municipal authorities should take action in the matter. From this onward abundant fun was derived from the magic lantern entertainment and other amusements provided, and the meeting over, each member of the audience, in leaving the hall, became the possessor of two sausage rolls and an orange, a substantial conclusion to an evening of genuine enjoyment.—Glasgow Evening News.

WORKING LADS IN WOOLWICH.—On Thursday last a dinner was given to the past and present residents of the Home for Working Boys, Beresford-street. After an excellent vegetarian repast, short, pithy speeches were given by Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Messrs. Baring, Young, Phillips, Hanson, and Jordan. Mr. H. Bristow-Wallen, secretary, said the work was of a quiet character, but yet was doing a permanent good in helping deserving homeless lads at the most critical period of their lives. Subscribers and donors were much needed.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

(BY A CORRESPONDENT).

THE meetings for Prayer for Ireland, referred to in a recent number, were held in Dublin on the 12th and 13th instant, in the Leinster Hall, and attended by a very earnest band, gathered from almost every denomination of professing Christians, and from all quarters of the country. The numbers were not as large as some perhaps expected, but, unquestionably, the material was exactly that which was best suited to the purpose.

For it was confession, prayer, and trust in God, which it was sought to express. The meetings were open for anyone to lead in prayer, the subjects being such as the present tension suggested. Our beloved Queen was mentioned by almost every suppliant. The responsible Government, the Christian members of both Houses of Parliament, the sufferers from outrage, boycotting and financial distress, Christian men in the police force, the masses of the Irish population, and all workers among them, were also prominent subjects of petition.

Of course, the principal theme was that suggested by 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2—intercession for all in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty, and that, by just and good government, our rulers may be enabled to stem and turn aside the torrent of lawless violence looming now so menacingly above our heads.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford came to Dublin specially to be present, and at the first meeting moved all hearts by his words upon the verse—Isa. xxvii. 5: "Let him take hold of my strength." He said some men's strength is their vanity; flatter them, and you have secured them. With others, their prevailing characteristic is selfishness or avarice; gratify these passions, and you have laid hold of their strength. They respond to you, and are at your command. With others, benevolence is their strength, and you can draw the man if you can present a case of need. But God's strength is his love; take hold of that, appeal to it, lean on it, trust it, and God is ready for your help. Remember how, at Sodom, Omnipotence was on its march for destruction, and Abraham arrested it by his appeal to mercy. Recall how Jacob, in Gen. xxxii., gained power with God as a prince, in the owning of his weakness, and God had to say: "Let Me go!" And the wayfarer answered, "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me." He could speak thus because he had got hold of God's strength. Again, we find Moses, in Exod. xxxii. 11, appealing to God's grace, and interrupting the course of judgment, and God had to say: "Let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot." Fancy that from the Almighty! He could not move for judgment while Moses's prayer intervened.

At the evening meeting Mr. Bland, quoting the striking words of Hab. i. 3, showed their close parallelism with present times: "Spoiling and violence are before me, and there are that raise up strife and contention; therefore the law is slacked, and judgment doth never go forth." Then the prophet's resolve: "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what He will say unto me" (ii. 1), reminding us of the attitude of patient faith and waiting upon our God set forth in Ps. lxii.; and, finally, the grand confidence of hope in chap. iii. 17: "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither fruit be in the vine," &c., "yet will I rejoice in the Lord;" words well calculated to inspire trustful joy in the hearts of many now suffering the straits and strains of actual loss.

On Wednesday Mr. George F. Trench, after giving some instances of severe trials caused by lawlessness, spoke on Nehemiah's example in circumstances of national calamity; we hope to give his address in our next. And Mr. Rainsford wound up the services by speaking on the words: "God, even our own God, shall bless us," taking the blessings on the tribes in Gen. xlix., the beatitudes of our Lord in Matt. v., and the blessings of Eph. i. for illustration of the fulness of the word "bless."

Then followed an intimation of the hope that in January, 1887, we might meet again in the same place, not to pray, but to give thanks for answered prayers. Mr. Bland expressed the desire which, indeed, was a prominent one throughout the two days with all present, that, as a result of these gatherings, a large number of Christians everywhere would be led to devote a short time each day to prayer for Ireland, as well as, each in his own neighbourhood, to arrange for a weekly prayer-meeting for the same purpose. Mr. Fowler announced that a meeting with this object would be held at the Christian Union Buildings, every Monday at noon, and advised the same day and hour being adopted elsewhere.

With a prayer from Mr. Henry Dyer, in which he anticipated the very near approach in England of troubles similar to those of Ireland, and asked for grace to be given to all who serve the Lord in the path of suffering and patience, the meetings terminated.

BLACKDOWN HILL MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—Some weeks since I sent a request for prayer for evangelistic work at some places on the south coast of England. The time may be said to have been unfavourable for Gospel work from the great excitement caused by the Parliamentary Elections in every place visited. Yet many souls were drawn to hear the Gospel, and some found salvation through faith in the Lord Jesus. There has been for some months a good work going on in several of the villages of Somerset and Dorsetshire. Many have been turned from darkness to light, and the work still continues.

In all parts of our wide and scattered Mission there are signs of coming blessing. The places are filled with attentive listeners, and many are passing from death unto life. We have met with some deeply interesting cases of conversion. The past year has been one of great blessing. We ask fellowship in prayer that this year on which we have entered may be still more abundant in its results.—Yours faithfully,

GEO. BREALEY.

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

THE workers of this Mission have been specially and busily engaged for the past few weeks in seeking to care for the temporal necessities of the unemployed working people, whose sufferings are now becoming very great. Many of the breadwinners having been out of work for months at a time, and with no little store to fall back on, have had to sell furniture and even clothing to provide the absolute necessaries of life. The usual distribution of food and clothing for the poor in various districts has also been made. The orphans of Mount Hermon Orphanage, the members of the mothers' meetings with their husbands, besides five hundred working men and their wives, have been entertained at Kilburn Hall.

The attention given to the addresses throughout the meetings which followed showed a keen appreciation of the effort made to direct the mind and heart to heavenly and endurings things. Dinners or teas have been given to the poor at Streatham, Swindon, and other places, while food, clothing, and coals were distributed in connection with the other branches of the mission, both in London and the country. About four hundred of the unemployed were entertained on Friday last, at Malden Hall, Kentish Town.

While thankful to be able to assist the poor even to this small extent, our hearts ache as we see the enormous amount of absolute destitution which our several workers are meeting with on all hands, and we should be thankful to be in a position to increase the relief in food and clothing if Christian friends will replenish our empty exchequer. "NONE OTHER NAME."

AS Sinners saved by sovereign grace,
Redeemed from Adam's fallen race.
In Christ alone our trust we place,
"None other Name."

As Saints made perfect through his blood,
Called here by faith to walk with God,
Our boast is in the Incarnate Word,
"None other Name."

As Servants charged his work to do,
Each one would duty's path pursue,
His bright example full in view,
"None other Name."

As Soldiers battling for the right,
In armour clad as sons of light,
This be our watchword through the night,
"None other Name."

As Sufferers oft, with cares opprest,
Though earth and hell our souls molest,
Still in his love we find our rest,
"None other Name."

As Brethren, one in Christ alone,
No sect or party here we own,
Our hearts would his dear Name enthrone,
"None other Name."

As Watchers waiting for the King,
When He shall full salvation bring,
We gird our loins and joyful sing,
"None other Name."

SANDWICHES FOR SANDWICH-MEN.

SUCH was the order of a recent meeting in Moor-street Mission Hall, St. Giles'. The day had been wretched. Long before the time for admission the men began to gather, shivering in wet shoes and garments. A strange sight they presented of bald heads, bowed heads, battered heads, better-class heads, bullet-heads; some bearded and some bare, some young and some old; some despairing, and some waiting for better days; but all brought to the one level.

A bright Gospel meeting followed the tea and sandwiches. We have almost given up faith in entertainments—they are pastry presented to the dead. The hour was made gladsome with short speeches, solos, duets, and choruses, but all were of a directly soul-saving character; and the result proved that if as much energy and variety are put into such meetings as is usually put into an entertainment they will be as well appreciated.

Mr. William Harrison, who is at the head of this mission, is in danger of losing his hall, as it is required by the Board of Works, and, to quote from The Globe of January 7, "In compensation the sum of £500 is offered, without either building or site for a new mission house." The importance of this work may be guessed from the fact that last week some sixteen meetings were held, with an attendance of 2500, including a weekly dinner to over 300 poor children. Anyone wishing further particulars are referred to Mr. W. Harrison, 20, Merrick-square, Newington, S.E. WILLIAM LUFF.

THE WHITE CROSS MOVEMENT, says The Christian at Work (New York), steadily grows in this city. There is a White Cross Committee in the Y.M.C.A. for the promotion of purity among men, and they report over four hundred young men enrolled.

POOR CHILDREN IN LIVERPOOL.—Rev. J. Williams Butcher, of Tuebrook, purposes to give, during the months of January, February, and March, dinners to poor children, in the Lecture-hall adjoining Brunswick Chapel, Moss-street. Those given last week were largely attended. In numerous instances the children are so extremely poor as to render it necessary to gratuitously distribute the tickets; for this further help is urgently needed. Mr. Butcher is assisted in this work by a staff of ladies and gentlemen, who cheerfully give their services. He writes to us that many of the boys come to the meetings in a state bordering on nakedness; cast-off clothing, both inner and outer, will be thankfully received—addressed to Brunswick Chapel, Moss-street, Liverpool.

WE call the attention of our readers to a series of meetings, as announced in our list of special services, to be conducted by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse in Exeter Hall, for the deepening of spiritual life, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, February 2, 3, and 4.

☞ The Publishers will be much obliged by all business letters being addressed to the firm. This will prevent disappointment and delay in the execution of orders. All communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor. Personal letters should be marked private. Mr. Morgan and his son are leaving for a few weeks' tour in Algeria and Spain, partly for health, but also to visit some of the mission stations in those countries. Our readers, by whose prayers we have been so long sustained, will we are sure continue to pray that they may be blessed and made a blessing.

The outlook from the Protestant standpoint in Ireland certainly is gloomy enough; but whatever may be the real motives and covert objects of the leaders of the Nationalist movement, "the Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters; yea, than the mighty waves of the sea." No doubt it is true, as was urged at a recent gathering of Presbyterians in Belfast, that one of the most ominous features of the political situation is that of the position openly taken by the Church of Rome. After for a time opposing the movement, and then holding back from it, that Church has now joined the ranks of the "Nationalists," so called, giving her approval to the wrong-doing and violence which she is no longer able to prevent, and dare not reprove.

The Church of Rome never moves except to serve her own interests, and history shows too unmistakeably that those interests ever have been diametrically opposed to both civil and religious freedom. Whilst, however, we believe that in supporting the Nationalist leaders in Ireland she is influenced only by ulterior motives, we are none the less certain that the course is a suicidal one, and that she will reap the reward in the contempt of the people over whose wrong-doing she is to-day casting a shield. In the meantime, it would seem that a time of peril to Protestantism in the sister island is rapidly approaching, and it behoves all who have the true interests, not only of Ireland, but of this kingdom, at heart, to cry to the Lord night and day so to influence the hearts of those to whom the destinies of our land have been confided that they may deal with the pressing Irish question, not as politicians, but as statesmen who fear God, and who therefore are able to put aside all ignoble considerations.

It must not be assumed that all Roman Catholics in Ireland are "Nationalists," or that all Protestants are the opposite. On the contrary, like Mr. Parnell, many Protestants favour the popular agitation, and many Roman Catholics have been censured by the dignitaries of the Romish Church because of their determination to hold aloof from it. Whether these latter can retain their independence and remain Roman Catholics is yet to be seen; but the day is not far off when other weapons will have to be introduced than those which up to the present have failed, even in the hands of the new Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, if intelligent and well-educated Romanists have to be reduced to submission in political matters. The pressing danger in all this is that of a religious war. Day by day the feeling on both sides is being intensified, and as Ireland always has been the battle-ground of faction it is perhaps vain to hope that a huge question like that of Home Rule (or Rome Rule, should we say?) can be disposed of without a conflict which will extend beyond the realm of opinion.

We are so accustomed to the use of the Lord's Prayer that there is a danger of overlooking the full meaning of its petitions. How much, for instance, is comprehended in "Thy kingdom come"? With what intense longing we should utter it if we remembered that its fulfilment implies that all bitter cries of the outcast poor would be hushed, that all harm and wrong would cease, that all swords would be beaten into pruning-hooks, and that in every heart now tempest-tossed and stirred to its inmost depths, peace would reign undisturbed.

Many readers of Charles Kingsley's "Alton Locke" put down the volume with a feeling of satisfaction that the evils which are dealt with in its pages have all been swept away by wise and paternal legislation during the thirty-five years which have elapsed since the book was first published. The "Sweater's Den," so powerfully dealt with by Kingsley in that volume, still exists, however, and we question if it could possibly have been more revolting in 1850, when Kingsley also wrote "Cheap Clothes and Nasty," than it is to-day.

The recent statements of Mr. Lakeman, one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Factories, with regard to the sweating dens in the East-end of London, horrible as they were, are not nearly so repulsive as are some statements which have been made with regard to the condition of things in Glasgow, as recently described by a correspondent of The North British Mail:—

> I have sat in workshops in Glasgow while the thermometer registered 190, and I have wrought in others where it fell to within freezing point. . . . With perhaps one or two exceptions in London and Glasgow there is not a shop but has its full complement of women and girls. These get the lion's share of the trade in the busy season, and all in the slack, for the very un-Ruskin reason that they receive for their work about one-fourth the trade statement. . . . . The sweating system finds its best patrons in our leading citizens. I have wrought in a room on the top floor of a Glasgow tenement about twelve feet by eight, in which three machines and girls, with ten women, were kept hammer and tongs at work for fourteen hours a day, with only twenty minutes' intermission. They ate as they worked, and all this under the very eyes of a Glasgow town councillor. I worked in another apartment which was in size about ten feet by twelve. A full-sized bed occupied the half of the room, and round it on the floor sat three women and four men for more than sixteen hours a day. I have registered 180 deg. Fahr. in that apartment. I have worked in another shop in Glasgow where the odour was so abominable . . . that out of the twenty men and six females four suffered from asthma, one from skin disease, three from bronchitis, and the remainder were more or less imbecile. I enclose you the name of this horrible den.

It is not improbable that these poor creatures toiling for sixteen hours a day "with only twenty minutes' intermission" are of those to whom reference is made in census papers and elsewhere as not being regular attendants at a stated place of worship on the Lord's Day. They can have but one idea with regard to our much vaunted civilisation and its boasted advantages; and it is hardly possible that they can have more than one with regard to our Christianity, which to them must seem to be utterly shorn of that infinite tenderness, and regard for the poor which characterised its Divine Founder.

The wealth of men who grow rich upon the very lives of women and girls forced by the pains of starvation to toil under such terribly disgusting conditions (out of regard for our readers we have suppressed the most repulsive portion of the testimony) must inevitably bring a curse with it. Human law may be evaded and conscience may be stifled, but God's laws cannot be set at nought with impunity. "He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at the end shall be a fool." If, however, the employer of labour who thus robs his servants is primarily responsible to God for the wrong, the community which permits so shameful a condition of things to continue is by no means free from blood-guiltiness. Surely there are Christians in Glasgow who will for the Master's sake strive to do something on behalf of the wretched toilers who are being martyred in order that merciless middlemen may gather gold.

Several correspondents, in disclaiming any sympathy with a passage written by Mrs. Oliphant, quoted in THE CHRISTIAN of December 17, urge that, as one of them expresses it, "the fact of the shed blood of Christ has been unduly advanced before the other aspect of the Atonement," that other aspect being "the laying down of the life of the human part of the Godhead for lost sinners." We confess we do not understand what is meant by the human part of the Godhead; nor do we think "the fact of the shed blood of Christ has been or can be unduly advanced before any other aspect of the Atonement." For it is the Atonement. "The blood is the life," "the life of all flesh is in the blood." When we speak of the shed blood, as He spoke of it at the Supper before He suffered, we mean that He "gave his life" for us; "gave Himself for us;" was "made sin for us, though He knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him."

If, on the one hand, we have in support of our correspondent's view the testimony of Scripture, in the words of Christ Himself, "I lay down my life for the sheep," and again, "Therefore doth my Father love Me, because I lay down my life," we have also a weight of testimony in which the prominence is given to the shed blood. "Without shedding of blood is no remission." "This is my blood which is shed for you." Which of us would be prepared to give up the comfort and strength derived from the peace made by Christ "through the blood of his cross" (Col. i. 20), and from the knowledge that "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin," and that we hope one day to join in the new song, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation"?

This aspect of the Atonement was dear not only to Cowper but to most of our best hymn writers. Take, for instance, from a multitude of noble compositions, Watts, in "When I survey the wondrous cross"; Zinzendorf, translated by John Wesley, in "Jesus, thy blood and righteousness"; Bonar, in "I lay my sins on Jesus"; Mrs. Alexander, in "When wounded sore, the stricken soul"; and Toplady, in "Rock of Ages, cleft for me."

A committee has been formed, and has decided, to raise at least £2000 to enable Dr. Heywood Smith to start an Invalid Home. In response to a private circular issued amongst friends, nearly £1000 have been raised, and a subscription list will soon be open to the public, headed with the names of Mr. Francis Peek, the Bishop of Truro, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, and others.

Our readers may hold different opinions as to the duty of taking part in the election of legislators, but they will be in perfect accord as to the privilege of prayer for them. For practical purposes, the first session of the Parliament of the whole people begins on the date of our present issue. It meets in grave circumstances. Parties are in a transition state. Distress reigns in the industrial sphere, with little prospect of change. Irish disaffection is menacing, and fostered by religious animosities. Great social questions, relating to every part of the kingdom, press for settlement. Rarely in our history has there been such a demand for an enlightened patriotism on the part of members of the new House of Commons, and prayer should everywhere ascend that a spirit of wisdom and moderation may mark their proceedings.

The cares and responsibilities of our statesmen are vast and serious, wherever we turn. In an empire comprising more than three hundred millions of human beings, many of them being of antagonistic races, troubles are always impending. Our military forces are engaged in Upper Burmah and the Soudan; Eastern Roumelia is in unrest; Macedonia is disquieted; in Greece there are rumours of war; in Turkey financial difficulties threaten dissolution; Russia and Austria are reported to be making preparations for conflict, and other European Powers are watching with like readiness. It would be well if there were a day of national prayer; at least let Christian believers, at such a crisis, be like men waiting upon their Lord.

We are glad to learn from The Shield, of the 9th inst., that no less than 257 members of the new Parliament are favourable to the repeal of Acts whose operations in garrison towns have lain heavy on the heart of righteous men and women. The same journal very properly exposes the scandalous inconsistency of the Royal College of Physicians, who rebuke Dr. Heywood Smith, while they have never had anything to say about those of their order who for years did far worse things with no moral purpose to justify the action.

> In your last number you properly remarked that churches, instead of waiting for denominational leaders, should begin the work of confession themselves. Many years ago I was in Birmingham on a Good Friday. I went to Carr's-lane Chapel, and found the large area crowded. Rev. John Angell James presided, and expressed his thanks to his people for responding to his request of setting apart the morning of a day of leisure for humiliation and prayer before God. He first, with inexpressibly melting words and tones, confessed his own sins and shortcomings as a preacher and pastor. He was followed in like manner by one of the deacons; then by several church members. Mr. James himself made confession on behalf of the women of the church. Long years have passed since that day, but never shall I forget the sense of the nearness of God's presence that was over that hallowed assembly.

"The mourning of families apart" is the teaching of the prophet. In like manner, let not individual churches wait for others. Pastors and officers of churches in communion with the Spirit are sure to learn that which will suit these present times. No lesson of the past is more certain than this: gain to Christ's cause grows out of present loss; out of alarms comes the power of the faithful; after conflicts the truth of God is seen in its strength; and the necessities of prayer bring out a new and more energetic life.

In The Expositor for this month the distinguished geologist, Sir William Dawson, records the results of his own inquiries on the Plain of Siddim. The statements made in Genesis are, he says, in exact accordance with the structure and possibilities of the district after its scientific exploration, and the destruction of the Cities of the Plain would exhibit the very phenomena described. In the same magazine we are surprised to read in the paper of Dr. Driver that the Hebrew Cosmogony was either framed like that of other ancient nations, to account for the beginnings of earth and man, or borrowed from the theories of their neighbours, so that the inference is warranted that both are derived from the same cycle of tradition. The comparison of the beautiful and majestic account of Genesis with the extravagant and bombastic narrations of other nations is held by the greatest writers and archæologists to demand a very different inference.

"An Indian Widow" sends to us the excellent suggestion, that Christians who are the possessors of some of the many new books issuing from the religious press should, after perusal, pass them on to their poorer friends and neighbours who cannot purchase such works. The writer states that she was first awakened to a perception of the truth by reading the biographies of godly people lent to her by a missionary's wife; like results, she thinks, would follow in the case of others.

Public attention has been painfully called of late to the subject of hydrophobia, by reason of an unusual number of human victims of this dire disease, and also from the alleged curative, but very doubtful, processes of Monsieur Pasteur, the French physiologist. We are glad, therefore, to learn that a few friends, believing in the remarkable cures effected in France by Dr. Buisson's method of Russian baths, are resolved this treatment should receive fair trial in England. They offer to pay the needful charges of baths and doctors for those patients who are unable to defray them, provided the cases be certified as decidedly of hydrophobia. This offer will be continued for a full time of fairly trying the system. One gentleman in London has commenced baths for this object (Mr. John Atkinson, F.R.C.V.S., 1A, Wilton-place, Belgravia), and it is hoped to arrange for country centres. Reference is kindly permitted to Mr. Fred E. Pirkis, R.N., The High Elms, Nutfield, Surrey. This is a scheme of practical benevolence, for the success of which all Christians will pray.

The "National Memorial" to the late Earl of Shaftesbury has been taken up with considerable spirit, and a large sum has been subscribed. It is proposed to erect a marble statue in Westminster Abbey, a bronze statue in some public thoroughfare, and to found Convalescent Homes for poor children. The statues are perfectly unobjectionable, though we feel that if the wishes of our deceased friend could have been consulted he would have given preference to the Convalescent Homes. Subscribers, we understand, may specify which of the objects they desire to advance. The Secretary of the fund is Mr H. R. Williams, 6, Lime-street, E.C.

"Beloved, let us love one another," wrote the disciple whom Jesus loved. Peter spoke to the scattered tribes of his and their "beloved brother Paul," who, in his turn, exhorts, "Let brotherly love continue;" and if a man be disobedient "admonish him as a brother." Like Barnabas, he perceived the grace of God in the disciples; looked diligently for the bright side of the Thessalonians; and would have his letter read to "all the holy brethren." It filled him with thankfulness and praise to God when he heard of the Ephesians' "faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints," and he greeted them, in his farewell, with "peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." He addressed Philemon as his "dearly beloved and fellow-labourer." Fancy that warm-hearted, weather-beaten, persecuted prisoner of Jesus Christ beginning "Dear Mr. Philemon," and ending with his "very kind regards." Let us look into the mirror of the perfect law of liberty, and compare the features of the saint of the period with the disciple of early days. "So speak ye, and so do as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." "Love is the fulfilling of the law."

The Islington Annual Clerical Meeting, which was held last week, and comprised three hundred evangelical clergymen and a few laymen, addressed itself vigorously to the demands of the present crisis. Church reforms were urgently advocated, also the admission of the laity to the fullest possible share of responsibility and work. But emphasis was strongly laid on reform among Christians in the closet, and among preachers in the pulpit, and in relation to a more unambiguous witness to the person, work, and kingdom of Christ, and that the sole standard of opinion was God's revealed Word. A general direction of thought in these practical directions will be very hopeful.

A correspondent writes:—I hesitate about expressing to you an individual opinion in reference to the forthcoming Advent Conference, lest it should seem to reflect upon those in whose hands are the arrangements, and for whom I have the highest regard. It appears to me, however, that the time has come when the great fact of the Lord's return should be assumed as held by the overwhelming majority of those who are willing to think on the matter; and that professing Christians should be warned and exhorted in regard to it. Discussions would be out of place in the Mildmay Hall. Of conference in so large an area there can be none, and the interchange of thought has been wisely left for the smaller rooms. But the Hall itself is in every way appropriate for hortatory addresses, and if speakers be carefully chosen who are fitted for this special service, and who will not discuss debateable speculations, the want of the Church will be met, and a new era in relation to "that blessed hope" may be inaugurated. It is separation and holy living we want now, and sure I am that the Spirit is teaching us to startle professors by the midnight cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh: go ye out to meet Him."

Miss Anstey and her party arrived at Colar on November 6, all in good health, after a splendid and rapid voyage. They received a hearty welcome from the orphans. Colar, says the friend who sends us this information, is like a busy hive, all at work either learning or teaching.

Like many other of the Y.M.C.A.'s, the Exeter Hall Branch has had its New Year's reception. Looking in, as we passed the historic building later in the evening, we found the room in which the meeting had been held tenanted by a little group of young men. Several workers were busy conversing with others who were evidently anxious inquirers, directing them to the Saviour. We can only wish for the Exeter Hall friends an equally hopeful outcome of all the subsequent meetings of the year.

South Africa has got its heroic Mr. Stead in the person of Rev. J. D. Don, Presbyterian minister, King William's Town. A young Dutch farmer, named Pelzer, shot an inoffensive Kaffir, but all efforts to bring the culprit to book failed, through the supineness of the Government authorities: the Attorney-General for some reason declined to prosecute. Mr. Don's righteous soul was sorely vexed within him at this miscarriage of justice, and he wrote a strong letter, denouncing the murderer and the authorities, which was published in The Cape Mercury. Pelzer had the hardihood to prosecute Mr. Don for libel, the Solicitor-General actually conducting the prosecution.

The trial was held in November, and after a five days' hearing, the jury fully acquitted Mr. Don, who, however, has been saddled with costs amounting to some £500. A statement of facts and appeal for help to Mr. Don, in his brave effort to champion the rights of the native race, has gone forth with the imprimatur of the Free Church of Scotland officials; any who wish to show practical sympathy in the matter may communicate with Dr. George Smith, Free Church Offices, Edinburgh.

"It is so seldom rich sinners against social morality have to pay the penalty of their misdeeds, that we can but rejoice when we hear of anything approaching to an impartial administration of the law in dealing with them. As The Pall Mall Gazette too truly says, "Wealth can buy secrecy as well as victims." Not all the money and houses and acres of Samuel Taylor Mendel, a wealthy landed proprietor of Buckinghamshire, has availed, however, to save him from punishment for having decoyed and betrayed a country girl of fourteen years old. During his well-earned term of fifteen months' hard labour, he will have time to reflect, and, we hope, to repent.

An esteemed correspondent writes the following appeal for prayer for revival, which we fervently endorse, and urgently commend to all our readers:—

DEAR SIR,—Who can doubt that it would be pleasing to our Lord that those who have been redeemed by his precious blood should cry fervently to God for a great a universal revival of his work upon earth. Many subjects are important; this is one of supreme, of infinite, importance, most deeply is it needed, everywhere throughout the world.

Do then let it be taken up in your paper, and in deepest earnestness. The Lord waits only to be inquired of, waits to bless his people in answer to their believing prayer. May the holy flame be kindled in many hearts!

Yours in our Lord, J. G.

The appointment of Dr. Moorhouse, of Melbourne, to the bishopric of Manchester has been received with a chorus of approbation, in which we heartily join. During his stay at the Antipodes Bishop Moorhouse has thrown himself with remarkable energy and zeal into all good movements, especially into the cause of Purity.

In November, 1877, we received the following note from one of our readers:—

DEAR SIR,—I regret to see that THE CHRISTIAN is still diverted from its former purpose, and that notwithstanding all the remonstrances you have received, you persist in making it a "teetotal" paper, and not a "Christian" paper only. I am, therefore, reluctantly compelled to cease circulating it, and have given orders to my bookseller to send me only one copy in future, which I shall read in the hope that you may yet abandon the subject and enable me to take THE CHRISTIAN up again for circulation.

It is highly improbable that any of our constituency would write such a letter now. The offensive subject now is not Total Abstinence but Social Purity. If, however, seeing that the change of sentiment with regard to Temperance has been so great, may we not confidently expect that in less that another eight years the opposition to testimony as to Purity will be equally extinct?

A magazine is now published entitled "Our Indian Sisters," being the organ of the Baptist Zenana Mission. Quarterly, twopence (Elliot Stock). This is a new effort; the third issue appeared with the new year. The friends of this Mission are earnestly anxious that information should be widely spread concerning the condition of the women of India, and are confident that larger help would then be rendered; they therefore offer this publication. It is useful, interesting, and well got up; it may be obtained either of the secretaries, Mrs. Angus, Regent's-park College, and Mrs. F. Smith, Aberdeen-park, Highbury; or of the publisher.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE IN AMERICA.

IN his travels through the States, on Gospel Temperance work, Mr. William Noble has reached Cleveland, Ohio, where Mr. Francis Murphy has been labouring in this good cause for some months past. Our Special Commissioner, during his recent sojourn on the other side, had the privilege of seeing Mr. Murphy and his son Edward at work in this beautiful American city, on the shores of Lake Erie. These friends had then only been in the place for a very short period, but they had already made their mark. Thousands attended the meetings every night, and many were enrolling themselves on the side of abstinence, in response to the thrilling appeals of the evangelists, father and son.

The success of these earnest workers appears to have continued without a break, as they are still at work in the same city. They are backed up by the warm commendations of the leading newspapers, and the hearty support of many devoted Christian men and women. We doubt not that the efforts of Messrs. Murphy will contribute largely to the advance both of prohibitive legislation and of moral Temperance sentiment in the large and important State of Ohio. Mr. Noble's visit will give the cause a fresh impetus.

At Dayton, in the same State, Mr. Noble has also been labouring with marked success and acceptance.

MR. JOHN WELLS THATCHER, we learn with pleasure, has been appointed secretary to the Warehousemen and Clerks' School, Russell-hill, Caterham, in place of Mr. Henry White, resigned, after thirty years' service. Mr. Thatcher's genial temperament, earnest spirit, and literary gifts have made him a very competent and acceptable public servant.

A MISSIONARY'S FAREWELL.

ON Monday week, a very interesting meeting was held at General Beynon's, 25, Ashburn-place, to take leave of Miss Pailthorpe, who has been trained by the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society (2, Adelphi-terrace), at the London School of Medicine, and passed her final examination most successfully. Hon. A. Kinnaird, who presided, said that Lady Dufferin's scheme to provide lady-doctors and hospitals for the women of India had created a great stir. He was glad to find that such movements were not averse to religion, and asked assistance from such societies as this. We at home must not forget to practise some of the self-denial shown by those who leave home and country to obey their Lord's command.

Dr. Cornish, late Principal Medical Officer in Madras, said he understood that Miss Pailthorpe was going to Madras for a year to assist Mrs. Scharlieb in the hospital for caste women, which has lately been established there, before going on to Benares, where, it is hoped, she will establish a hospital for women in connection with the Society. This was an excellent plan, and calculated to increase her value, and make her more fit for the great work to which she had devoted herself.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, addressing Miss Pailthorpe, spoke words of encouragement to her; it was his hope and prayer that she might have grace to do her great work so as to glorify God, bring peace to her own soul, and gain immortal souls for her crown. He condemned the too common practice of speaking about "making sacrifices for Christ;" when the soul becomes absorbed by the Saviour it is no longer a sacrifice to give up what the world esteems: there is no room in the heart for it. Mr. Peploe then offered up earnest prayer, and was followed by Dr. Draper, of New York, and Rev. A. H. Lesh.

CHRISTIAN LADS' CONFERENCE.

FOLLOWING the precedent of the last three years, Special Meetings for Elder Lads were held last Saturday at the East-street Mission, East Greenwich. The Lord's presence was again abundantly manifested. Afternoon tickets which were reserved, as far as possible, for the use of truly converted lads, were applied for on behalf of some sixty of Dr. Barnardo's boys, thirty-six from Mr. Fegan's Homes and Meeting, twenty-five from the Railway Mission, and numerous lads from a score of other missions and Bible-classes, including the George-yard Ragged-school, Whitechapel, the King Edward-street Ragged-school, Whitechapel, the Carter Homes for Boys, Clapham, the Approach-road, Wesleyan Chapel, Victoria-park, the Riverside Mission, Rotherhithe, Peek, Frean & Co.'s Boys' Institute, Bermondsey, the Greenwich Hospital Royal Naval Schools, the West Greenwich Ragged-school Institute, and classes at Wimbledon, Woolwich, Bermondsey, Blackheath, and Greenwich.

The afternoon's subject, "Prayer," was heartily discussed. At tea-time, the arrival of eighty unconverted boys increased the total to about three hundred. The evening was devoted to short testimonies, and a goodly number told out in a very few words what the Lord had done for their souls. Dr. Barnardo's boys thankfully referred to Rev. E. P. Hammond's recent services; others were living witnesses of the success the Lord grants to labourers whose sphere remains unchanged from year to year. A young soldier, actor, and potboy gave their experience amongst many others. The meeting was altogether a very happy one, characterised by warmth and humility. As an immediate visible effect one or two requested prayer for themselves; the ultimate results will know no bounds, for the Lord was working, and "the Lord He is God."

Greenwich, January 18. H. STONE.

CONFERENCES ON FOREIGN MISSIONS.

DEAR SIR,—May I ask for the sympathy and prayers of your readers in behalf of a special effort about to be put forth by the Church Missionary Society to rouse a deeper and wider interest in foreign missions?

It has been arranged to hold simultaneous special meetings in nearly a hundred and fifty cities and towns in all parts of England in the second week of February. These meetings are not intended to be ordinary missionary meetings, when the usual reports and accounts are presented, and detailed information given. Nor are they intended for the direct purpose of appealing for funds. It is earnestly desired that they shall everywhere be stamped with a special character.

Their purpose is to set forth, plainly and solemnly, the claims of the unevangelised heathen and Mohammedan world upon the Church of Christ; to emphasise the risen Saviour's one great last command; to describe the world's need of the Gospel; to illustrate the blessings which God has already given to the hitherto poor and inadequate efforts put forth by his people; and to press home the obligation lying upon all Christians to take a share in the work, some by personal service, some by large and liberal gifts, some by systematic work in making the cause known to others, and all by prayer and influence.

Although the meetings are arranged in connection with the Church Missionary Society our desire and purpose is to advocate the great missionary cause in its length and breadth; and we shall thank God if other missions reap the benefit as well as our own. The one object is the exaltation of Christ and the extension of his kingdom.

To each centre it is proposed to send a clergyman and a layman as a special deputation. A large number of our ablest speakers and most devoted friends have generously placed themselves at our disposal for the week or for a part of it. They include bishops and other Church dignitaries, and also men like Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, E. H. Hopkins, E. A. Stuart, Sholto Douglas, G. Everard, H. C. G. Moule, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, Mr. H. F. Bowker, General Field, General Haig, Captain Chapman, &c.; more than a hundred and fifty in all.

London is not included in the scheme. It is proposed to do the same for the Metropolis hereafter; but prayer-meetings will be held in London on February 8 in behalf of the movement. Will Christians generally help us in this effort by their earnest intercessions at the throne of grace? EUGENE STOCK.

Church Missionary Society,
Salisbury-square, London, E.C.

On Thursday a Conference on the proposed meetings was held at the Church Missionary House, Salisbury-lane, which was attended by 150 clergymen and laymen from all parts of England, who are to go as deputations to these meetings. Special addresses were delivered by Mr. S. A. Blackwood and Rev. F. F. Goe; and among those who took part were Archdeacon Richardson, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Rev. E. N. Thwaites, Rev. R. C Billing, &c.

Mr. Stevenson A. Blackwood said, in the course of his address: The work which we are about, in dependence upon God, to undertake in February is a superhuman work, and one in which we shall be cast entirely upon Divine resources. I think we should be very clear that we are in sympathy with the Divine Purpose in this matter. The work of extending the kingdom of Christ, and preaching the Gospel to every creature, is one as to the obligations upon his Church of which there can be no manner of doubt. It seems to me that the times in which we live, and the circumstances by which we are surrounded, bear very distinct indications of the will of God in this matter. The missionary spirit which was so graciously revived in this country at the beginning of this century, has of late years been greatly intensified. Men's hearts and women's hearts have been stirred on all sides to carry on aggressive evangelistic work at home in a way that has never been known before. All classes are, more or less, reached now at home by the Gospel. And this missionary, this evangelistic spirit which has been graciously bestowed upon our fellow-countrymen at home has also been manifested in regard to the heathen abroad. There has been a cry, "Come over and help us!" sounding very loudly in our ears, by reason of the openings which have been afforded in various countries, and a very considerable number of individuals have had their hearts moved to yield themselves to the Lord for missionary work in foreign lands, to an extent quite unparalleled, I believe, until lately.

Then if that be true, we can indeed have a full assurance of the Divine Presence. Whenever God indicates our duty, and clearly marks out the path of service, we shall have an unfailing assurance that He will be with us. This is no fancy; it does not depend upon, or arise from, our own feelings; it is no "cunningly devised fable;" it is a glorious, immutable fact.

May we not, then, go forth in dependence on Divine Power? What a comfort it is for those who realise their weakness and infirmities to remember that God only needs their weakness, and that they may glory in their infirmities in order that the power of Christ may tabernacle over them. But must we not seek it persistently, earnestly, prayerfully? Let us continue in prayer, until God baptises us all with the spirit of power and love and of a sound mind, until we are so impenetrated with the truths which we are to set forth before those who may be gathered to hear at the meetings, that they may indeed hear to their everlasting profit and the glory of God, and that an almighty work may be done!

Then we may expect the fulfilment of the Divine Promise. When God said to Barak, "Draw toward Mount Tabor," He added, "and I will draw toward thee." And so He says still. It is our business to lift up Christ. It is not the welfare of this Society merely in its missionary character, it is not only the salvation of souls, but it is the glory of Christ—it is the glory of Christ; and if we are permitted to lift up Christ, then He will do his gracious work by the Holy Ghost, and will draw us towards Himself. Of this blessed work, which He now permits to be commenced and will graciously bring to its close, it shall be true—"They went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

Requests for Prayer.

FOR blessing on a month's Gospel meetings in Wells, Somerset.——That much blessing may attend Mr. Hammond's mission in Clapham Conference Hall.——For blessing on a week's special services in Dover.——For blessing on speakers and hearers at special services in Stonehouse, Gloucester.

THAMESCHURCH MISSION.—The missionaries of this Society are constantly coming in contact with starving dock labourers and others in need of help. Last month 3500 free breakfasts were given. Hundreds of poor men are compelled to endure the hardships of extreme poverty, and to face the severity of the weather, because no work can be obtained. As the Society's resources are taxed to the utmost, I appeal to those who would certainly help if they were acquainted with the urgent necessity. (Rev.) H BLOOMER, Secretary.

MISSION TO GIPSIES.—The Report of the Mission to Gipsies at West End, Chobham, states that but for its efforts six families, numbering thirty-six souls, would to-day be living in tents, with all the suffering in the winter season to which such are exposed, and to the pernicious habits and corrupt influence rampant among these people. The religious services in the Cottage on Sundays have been well attended; the open-air meetings in the encampments during May were well received. Another family, consisting of six children under fourteen years of age, have been helped into cottage life; the parents and children were helped with clothes to enable them to attend Sunday and day schools.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

DOVER.—Mr. H. Eliot Walton, of the Railway Mission, has concluded an eight days' mission, which God has greatly blessed.

SOUTH LONDON.—A mission is to be held in South London next month in many of the parishes of the rural deaneries of Lambeth, Newington, and Walworth.

BARCOMBE, SUSSEX.—A good work is going on here in connection with the labours of Mr. Monk, of the Evangelisation Society. This week, by special request, he is to conduct services in some of the large residences of the neighbourhood.

SOUTH NORWOOD.—A tea and public meeting lately took place at the Mission Hall, Blind-corner, for the purpose of welcoming Mr. J. J. Browne (of the London City Mission), who for the last fourteen weeks has been away from home through a serious illness.

KEYNSHAM.—Mr. F. C. Spurr has concluded an eight days' mission in this town. Besides Gospel meetings and services for children, Bible-readings were held every afternoon for Christians. These were seasons of instruction and refreshment. There was a growing interest manifested in the meetings to the close.

MESSRS. FULLERTON and SMITH commenced a mission at Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, on Saturday, January 9, with a song service. Gospel meetings, largely attended, have been held at the chapel, and on the Sunday in Colston Hall. Many inquirers have remained after each service, some of whom are now rejoicing in having "found the Christ."

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND McGRANAHAN have closed a series of meetings in Lawrence, Kansas, where it is estimated that 300 persons were hopefully converted. The largest audience-room in the city, that of Plymouth Church, failed to accommodate the crowds that gathered on Sunday evenings, while the Opera house was filled to overflowing, with men only, on Sunday afternoons.

PLUMSTEAD.—Free breakfasts have been given at Cage-lane Mission Hall on Sunday mornings for several weeks past. Those invited are men out of work and really in want of a meal. Whilst the bodily wants of the guests are being attended to, a choir renders appropriate hymns from "Songs and Solos," and the "Christian Choir." At the close of the meal a Gospel address is delivered. Miss Russell, 1, Thames View-terrace, Plumstead, Kent, is responsible for the expense.

MR. AND MRS. C. KING have concluded a very encouraging mission at Portland Hall, Rotherhithe. Notwithstanding the unusual severity of the weather, the week-night services were well attended, and on Sunday the large hall, recently erected by Mr. S. Trevor Francis, was crowded with men and women eager to hear Mr. King's farewell address. The burden of Mr. King's addresses is "God with us," ever faithful, ever wise, ever kind: a God who not only saves but keeps. Mrs. King most effectually seconds her husband's efforts by her gentle appeals, and her sweet singing of the Gospel story. M. H.

SOUTH LONDON EVANGELISTIC CHOIR.—Mr. S. Burrows, having resigned his post as secretary of the above choir, all correspondence should be addressed to Mr. W. J. A. Rowe, Cliftonville, Rossiter-road, Balham, S W. Contributions to the choir funds will be thankfully received by Mr. W. B. Self, 12, Brockley-road, S.E.

THE CHINA OPIUM TRADE.—At a conference on this subject last week at Queen Anne's Mansions, resolutions were passed calling on the Indian Government to restrict and ultimately suppress the export of the deadly drug from India to China. Sir Joseph Pease said the deficiency that would be caused in Indian revenue might be met by a reduction of military expenditure; failing that, the people of England should be asked to make good the amount.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.—Now that railway men, policemen, and other classes of the community have papers specially designed to meet their needs and to advance their interests, it is right and proper that soldiers and sailors should have one to themselves. We therefore welcome the birth of The Soldiers' and Sailors' Chronicle, of which we have received the January number (1d. Partridge & Co.). It is intended not only to be an acceptable and useful monthly for the perusal of its particular clients, but to represent and advocate the work of all missions, homes, and institutes devoted to their welfare. We wish it much and growing success.

The Week of Prayer.

Prayer and Missions.

Mr. A. J. ARNOLD (Evangelical Alliance), AT EXETER HALL.

THE Week of Prayer, he said, might well be called universal, for in all parts of the world evangelical Christians are gathered at the Throne of Grace, and unitedly presenting the same petitions. In another sense, too, it is a universal Week of Prayer, for the topics suggested for prayer embody the needs of the whole Church of Christ. There is no part of Christendom where this week is more fully appreciated than among the labourers in the mission field, and we may well consider the relation between the Universal Week of Prayer and the progress of missions. There are three aspects of the subject which lead to gratitude for the past, and increase our faith in united prayer in the future.

CHRISTIAN UNION IN HEATHENDOM.

United prayer is most valuable for its own sake. Evangelical Christians of different names, who band themselves together to make their common wants known to the God of all mercy, find their minor differences hushed at the Throne of Grace, and they rejoice in their "one Lord and one faith." The effect of this communion of saints is visible not only in blessing upon those who thus unite, but also upon the heathen, who are frequently on-lookers where divisions among the followers of the same Lord are only too palpable. Mr. Arnold referred to several instances of great blessing resulting from the united observance of the Week of Prayer in foreign lands, and called attention to the coincidence of the wonderful progress of Christian missions during the past twenty-five years, with the great advance in the observance of the Week of Prayer.

JAPAN, INDIA, CHINA.

One of the most striking illustrations of this is seen in the intimate relation of that observance in Japan to every advance of mission work in that country. The following gracious answers to united prayer were mentioned: The appointment of missionaries to Japan by three societies the very year the request for prayer went forth; the earnest prayer for the removal of the edict against Christianity in that country was followed not long after by that blessed result; the first outpouring of God's Spirit upon Japan took place in 1872 during the observance of the Week of Prayer, and led to the formation of the first native church of Christ in Japan; and the revival of 1883 originated through the blessing of God upon the Week of Prayer.

Reference was made to the increasing number of places in India and China, including many inland stations, where the Week is now observed. Among the Rarotonga group of islands and in Tahiti also this concert of prayer is anticipated by thousands of native Christians, who would not think the year properly commenced if they did not join in this season of communion with God.

PERSIA AND TURKEY.

In over forty of the larger congregations among the Nestorians in Persia special daily meetings were held during this hallowed season last year. One of the pastors wrote: "We never passed a week of more real interest in religion. At daylight a meeting of over one hundred earnest worshippers; at noon a large assembly of women; and near sundown, a much larger general meeting. God be praised! In almost every house in our village family worship is now daily observed."

The observance of the Week of Prayer in Asiatic Turkey had been followed with most blessed results. In one town the daily meetings were thronged, and a hundred men standing outside at the windows. Great meetings also, and meetings for the children in the schools—all filled with a spontaneous overflowing power. An American missionary writing from this town during the meetings, says: "I am utterly unable to describe the work that is going on here; the most wonderful displays of Divine power were seen in the great meeting last night, when some 800 assembled. It lasted nearly four hours, we were unable to stop it. There were prayers and confessions from sixty persons, thirty of whom had never risen before."

JERUSALEM.

An interesting fact was mentioned in connection with the observance of the Week of Prayer at Jerusalem. The daily meetings were most successful. The English, German, Arabic, Hebrew, and Spanish languages show the uniting together of the different communities. The Saturday meeting was unique, and the missionary who reports it says: "For some months we have had a Saturday afternoon service for Jews, and instead of omitting it, we combined the two, and so, besides many Christians, we had about one hundred Jews present."

There was not time to dwell upon another aspect of the subject, the importance of united prayer on behalf of the persecuted; but brief reference was made to the recently published cases of religious intolerance in Turkey, which are now claiming the sympathy of Christians generally. The speaker closed by expressing the opinion that the Evangelical Alliance was greatly privileged in having such a blessed mission as that of manifesting the unity of the Lord's people, and bringing the influence of that Christian union to bear for the relief of those who are persecuted for righteousness sake. Perhaps the most important work of the Evangelical Alliance, however, is that of organising the Universal Week of Prayer from year to year. For all the blessing which has resulted to foreign missions from the observance of this hallowed season let praise and glory be given to God alone!

The Spread of Home Missions.

By Mr. HAIG MILLER, AT CENTENARY HALL.

WHEN I came to London fifty years ago it used to be a common objection to people who advocated the claims of foreign missions that they neglected people at home. It was said that Christians had a peculiar kind of spectacles, that enabled them to observe misery far abroad but to be blind to it when it was under their own eyes. They, so to speak, had sympathy with Timbuctoo but none for Whitechapel. Well, that day has long since gone by. We have such innumerable agencies at work in the home fields that with some it is a question whether they might not be more wisely consolidated, as those who have money to give are perplexed from the many objects that call upon them for the little pittance at their disposal, and there can be no doubt that Christian patriotism should in spiritual things begin at home.

It is the honour of a nation when it practices righteousness and true godliness. Wilberforce, in his day, when the clouds of revolution were lowering over England said that he might be charged with the same superstition that led the poor of Italy and Sicily to bring out their images of the saints when an eruption was threatening, but notwithstanding the sneer at piety he would boldly contend that he had more hope for the safety of his country from the prayers of the godly people that were in it than he had from its large military and naval armaments; and the truth remains the same to-day. If England loses its spiritual and godly power we may be assured, from what we read in past history, that the day of its decadence cannot be far off. If the candlestick be removed to other countries it will not be long before our material prosperity will go also. That traveller whom Macaulay spoke of as coming from abroad, and standing on the broken arch of London Bridge to see the ruins of St. Paul's, may not see that prophecy accomplished, but in our empty manufactories and in our deserted docks, like the deserted canals of Venice, he may have to read the truth that when this nation became indifferent to true godliness it lost the secret of true moral and material power. It is a proper opportunity, therefore, to pray that the tongue of fire may be in our pulpits, that we may be kept from the advances of Romanism, or from the latent Sadduceeism that has crept into some minds; and we must pray also for a blessing upon those special means which are now so common, and implore spiritual power from God. May we not also properly on this occasion remember those meetings for conference and holiness that have sprung up in so many parts of the country for deepening true spiritual life. In proportion as we are conformed to the image of our Master, so will our power with the world be. Mr. Fletcher, of Madeley, truly said that a Christian should, like a mirror, reflect the image of Christ, so that when the people of the world came up to him they should see first of all on him the likeness of the Saviour.

Looking at the agencies at work in the present day, it is impossible not to think of Sunday-schools, respecting which Adam Smith said that no agency was likely to be so blessed since the days of the Apostles; but we may really almost apply that language to mission halls. Their lively singing, their short addresses, pointed and to the purpose, have suited the masses, and their work is followed both by material and by spiritual blessing. We have now so many societies of one kind and another that the remark of Wilberforce is true, that only one other society is wanted, and that is a society to prevent the formation of other societies. It does seem as if some agency were needed to consolidate and direct their efforts aright.

Then should we not pray for the work of the colporteur? We welcome the spectacle that we often see of the Bible car, and when some of our great exhibitions are held there is a stall for the sale of the Scriptures. Once the Bible used to be chained so that the people might not take it away, but the British and Foreign Bible Society in the year 1884 circulated 990,000 copies of the penny New Testament. Then we have to pray for the labours of the colporteur who sells general literature. How much of vile, how much of foolish literature is still circulated! The "penny dreadfuls" do not now seem to be so dreadful as they were, and not to contain a dozen murders in each of them, yet they are full of frivolity. I had the painful curiosity to examine some of the infidel literature which is disseminated, and though we rejoice to believe that its circulation is being checked, yet it is melancholy to see the spirit that pervades it. Sacred things are scoffed at and held up to ridicule by pen and pencil. One writer—a lady—actually says that "she hopes soon the time will come when the glad tidings will prevail that the idea of a God is dead." I was handed once two atheistic tracts by two young gentlemen of slender years. It is a matter of unspeakable thankfulness that the colporteur goes about with healthy literature to counteract this, and that there is a ready sale found for it. We are greatly indebted to the Religious Tract Society, whose issues of wholesome literature have been of immense service.

It is great matter for thankfulness that so much is being done for the young in other ways than in Sunday-schools. Our ragged-schools have passed beyond the period of experiment, and witnesses of their value may be found in the colonies and elsewhere filling important situations. Then we have schools, reformatories, training homes, and training ships. In addition, we have the regular societies for Home Missions, not forgetting those that labour amongst special classes of the community, such as soldiers and sailors. I notice that amongst the rough class of bargemen a great change has taken place, and that improper language is now seldom heard in the midst of them. Sailors are seen reading the Bible, and the teachings of the missionary are received with respect. I see that the poor inebriate woman has those who look after her; and societies for the restoration of fallen women are still in full activity, and claim the sympathy and gratitude of thos whose families are nurtured in purity.

Then we are called upon to remember with gratitude those exceptional agencies which are at work amongst different strata of society. We have seen not only our Young Men's Christian Associations, like the one to which we are indebted for this meeting, plying their nets for the purpose of catching young men from the snares of vice, but we have the institution of prayer meetings for special classes: medical students, bankers, even members of the Stock Exchange—that temple of Mercury as we might have supposed—meeting together for prayer. We have our hop-pickers visited, our Mildmay Mission to the policemen, the missions to foreigners in London—the Jew, the Malay, and the Hindoo all visited. Our public-houses are visited, and our omnibus men and cabmen are not forgotten.

Lastly, I would refer you to the work of the Salvation Army. Differences of opinion as to the mode in which it is worked will prevail, but, as in ancient times they could say nothing against the Apostles when they saw the lame man who was healed standing by them, so how can we lift up our voice against this movement, when we see that army of reformed drunkards, wife-beaters, thieves, and harlots that follow in its train, evidently living lives of righteousness, and turned from darkness into light? Let us rather pray that all that is unnecessarily irregular in their movement may be removed, and that all that is spiritual and good may be intensified; and that General Booth may be supported under the heavy calamity that I see has fallen upon him in the illness of Mrs. Booth. The speaker closed by reading a striking extract from The Salvation War, just issued, and by recommending every person present to read it.

said that within the last few years he had taken part in four expeditions, and had seen a distinct advance in true religion in our army. At Souakin they had two Scripture-readers sent out by the Army Scripture-Readers' Society who did good work. They had meetings every evening which were largely attended by godly men. He might say from observation that conversions did not take place during war: in other words the men did not seem to be brought to Christ at the moment of their greatest danger, there was then a listlessness and a recklessness amongst them that was very remarkable. There were seven hundred navvies at Souakin for the purpose of making the railway, and they had a Scripture-reader amongst them. The time for helping soldiers was when we were at peace.

MR. GAWIN KIRKHAM.

When people tell us to stop at home and preach to our own heathen they preach to us a very humbling sermon. It cannot be the will of our Father in heaven that the masses of our country should be where they are now after the Gospel has been in this world 1900 years. The fault lies somewhere. The Godless and the Christless masses are a disgrace not to Christianity but to Christians. The reason is that we have delegated the work to others instead of doing it ourselves. The Gospel will never be preached to every creature till every man and woman who is a Christian becomes a missionary. We are doing next to nothing in comparison with what ought to be done, but we are content to pay others to do the work that ought to be done by ourselves. No man by any money gift can ever free himself from his responsibility as a Christian. What we want is the spirit of the Master, who, having commissioned his disciples, then went forth Himself. Why? Because He had compassion on the multitudes. Look at the opportunities that we let slip day after day which God places in our way. Don't you think that the kind word to the cabman, to whom one gives a little over and above his fare, will have more weight than the official visit of the paid missionary? We want the spirit of consecration that shall lead us to ask, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

As regards what the Open-air Mission is doing, it is not only in the open air, but we visit races, fairs, regattas, shows, reviews and exhibitions, and give away about a million tracts every year. People will receive tracts then who will not at other times. We have given a copy of Haughton's "Saviour for All" to the Prince of Wales at Epsom races, and one of our men paid half-a-guinea for a place on the grand stand that he might give away tracts in French. If the people are to be reached it must be in times when they are thinking, or when they are capable of thinking, and that is the work to which every man who is a Christian should address himself.

Brief addresses were also given in the course of the two hours by Rev. J. G. Gregson and Col. Puget.

DOWN LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH.

The following are brief notes of two of the addresses here during the Week of Prayer, kindly supplied by a correspondent, and for which we had not space last week:—

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins spoke on Thursday from the words, "Certainly I will be with thee" (Ex. iii. 12). God revealed Himself to Moses in a remarkable manner, appearing in a burning bush, which was not consumed. It was then that God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, "Moses, Moses." In this wonderful visitation we have an indication of God's relation to the Church and to individual Christians. To his people God ever manifests Himself, as in a bush which burns, but does not consume. He does not in their case use fire as a destroying power, but as a purifying, a cleansing power. It is the will of God that we should be holy, but holiness does not, and cannot, exist without God. We are not fit to go out to work for God until we realise that He is, indeed, with us, and that, being in his presence, we are on holy ground.

Christian, you are on holy ground, and God is working within you, "both to will and to do." Do not be overcome by difficulties in your work. Remember that God has said, "Certainly I will be with thee." Do not say, with Moses, "Who am I?" but think of Him who is able, who has promised, and who cannot fail to fulfil his promises. When kept in subjection to God, through yielding to his power, the instruments within us, which once threatened to hinder, are made to contribute to our usefulness in his service. Success in spiritual work does not depend on personal gifts nor on natural talents, but on having God with us, who has said, for our encouragement, "Certainly I will be with thee."

On Friday Rev. Hugh Price Hughes based his remarks on the text, "And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And He said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God" (Matt. xix. 16, 17). The subject for consideration to-day is, "The Christian Life," one which should have a leading place in our thoughts at such a time. The young man who came to Christ was upright, enthusiastic, and religious. "Why callest thou me good?" said Christ to him. Goodness is the very essence of a Christian life. A good man is a God-like man. Goodness is the test of God-likeness. God tells us that we must be good, for He is good. We must be imitators of God, and it is only as we imitate Him that we are good. The practical definition of a Christian life is to follow Christ. The one question is, Am I, in the nineteenth century, living here as Christ would have lived if here? It is our business to do what Christ would have done if in our place. Christ's life must settle the character of our Christian life. We must in our life reproduce in miniature the life of Christ. The Holy Spirit has been given for this purpose.

John in his Gospel most thoroughly defines the Christian life. An invalid life in Christians is a wretched life, and gives encouragement to the adversary. A holy life is a healthy life; to him who lives the true Christian life the yoke is easy and the burden light. God will do his work within us, if we do not, by grieving the Spirit, hinder Him. We shall then be able to say, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

PRAYER FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

In addition to the meetings mentioned in our last issue on the Wednesday of the Week of Prayer, at which Mrs. Ormiston Chant gave addresses, a largely attended service was held at All Souls', Langham-place, when Rev. Sholto Douglas drew attention to the various agencies and benefits of the Y.W.C.A. Rev. Grose Hodge addressed a goodly number of young women at St. Matthew's, Bayswater. He urged on all present to avail themselves of the advantages of the Bayswater Evening Home, 2A, Pembridge-gardens. Rev. J. L. Lillingston preached at St. John's, Paddington, and other services were held in different districts of London. It is hoped much good will result to the Y.W.C.A., and our readers are invited to get farther information from the enlarged offices, 16A and 17, Old Cavendish-street, W.

MELKSHAM, WILTS.

United meetings for prayer were held in the Baptist, Congregational, and Wesleyan Chapels alternately, each meeting being well attended. The ministers of the three chapels exchanged pulpits on the Sunday evening, and a united communion service was held at the Wesleyan Chapel, at which there was a large attendance.

G. S.

DEVIZES.

The week was generally observed here, the various churches heartily uniting together, and holding two meetings daily in the Town Hall. A United Communion Service was held in the New Baptist Chapel on Sunday afternoon, January 10, the different ministers taking part, and Rev. Dr. Culross, of Bristol, giving an address. These have been truly times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. F. C.

CHESTERFIELD.

The week was observed here as usual, under the auspices of the Town Mission. The programme of the Evangelical Alliance was carried out, the clergy and ministers of the town presiding. The meetings were well attended, and would have been much larger had not the weather been exceptionally severe, thus preventing some old and tried friends of the movement from coming out in the evening. Christians have been greatly encouraged and refreshed by the earnest prayers offered and stimulating addresses delivered by the various speakers. Would your readers pray for the evangelistic and temperance work carried on in Chesterfield?

HERBERT SHAW.

SAN REMO, ITALY.

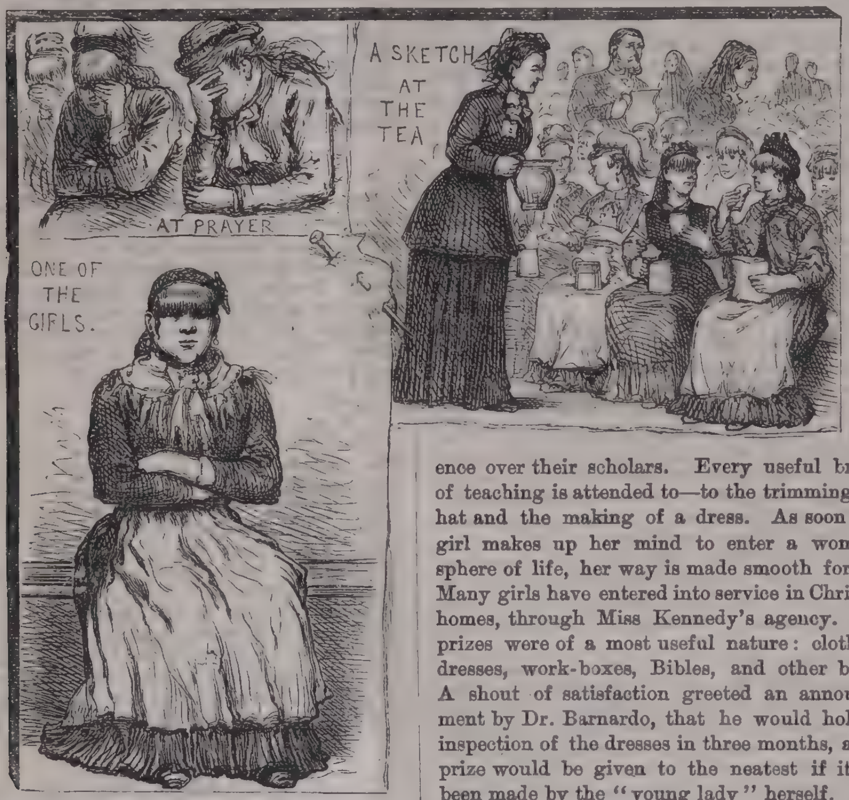
A union meeting was held daily in this place. All the topics suggested by the Evangelical Alliance for exhortation and prayer were taken up. The chief speakers were Rev. G. L. Fenton, ex-Chaplain English Church; Rev. Alexander Robertson, Scotch Church; and Messrs. Gordon Oswald, Cheyne Brady, and A. C. Sterry. Although the numbers attending these meetings were small, yet they have been eminently successful. All present seemed to have been "baptized into one Spirit," and God's blessing was felt to accompany the exercises engaged in.

VENTNOR, I.W.

Meetings for prayer were held each morning in the Literary Institution, and each evening in Mrs. Huish's mission-room, Bonchurch. The opening address at the Institute was given by Rev. R. Allen Davies, Congregational minister, Ventnor, on Phil. i. 3—5. The subsequent meetings were ably addressed by Rev. A. F. Fogwell, Rev. J. Shepherd, Professor Griffiths, Rev. J. Redhead, and Mr. Stevens. Evangelistic services were conducted in the evenings in the mission-room, Bonchurch. The services of the week were concluded on the Sunday evening by a United Communion Service, which was felt to be a very precious season.

EAST END FACTORY GIRLS.

ABOUT twelve years ago, when Dr. Barnardo began his ministrations to special classes in the East End, it was the factory girls, we are sorry to say, whom he found to be the least amenable to discipline and order. Their reckless and independent characters were so well known that some of their employers warned him that he might expect nothing but riot if he gathered them together. But that was not a sufficient reason for neglecting them; though the Doctor found, to his cost, that his congregation had not been misrepresented. There were some uproarious scenes. Time after time speakers, largely accustomed to rough audiences, were brought to address them, but their voices were unheard amid the babel of tongues. On one occasion a bishop came in full dress, perhaps hoping that they would be awed into five minutes' silence: they simply yelled him down.



But the greater the irreverence for authority the greater the need for persevering, determined effort. Wednesday evening last week was again the occasion of their annual gathering at the "Edinburgh Castle" Mission Hall. We were assured at the close that it had been the quietest and the most successful meeting which had yet been held; yet we have seldom been at a noisier conclave. Policemen were not required, except to guard the entrance, but the numerous stewards were men of ripe experience in the work. The girls, who ranged from eleven to seventeen years of age, had been invited by visitors to the factories where they work, the younger of them being "half-timers." About two thousand accepted the invitation.

It is hard to say whether shame or pity was more excited by the spectacle presented: shame that so-called Christian England could produce a gathering difficult for heathendom to match, or pity for the girls so unsexed that there hardly seemed to be one point of contact between them and the ladies who had come to assist. The factory by day, the street or the "gaff" by night, seem to have destroyed their kinship to womanhood.

Dr. Barnardo, however, proved himself to be "the master of the ceremonies," as, with bugler by his side, he sent forth the orders for a plentiful tea to be supplied. Grace and thanks were sung right lustily. Indeed, it was chiefly in the matter of singing that the audience would assert its independence. Now and then there rang out a song of a thorough music hall type, and not at all in the programme for the evening. A most interesting feature was the distribution of prizes to the girls who had earned them at the Copperfield-road Night School. It is largely, we may say, with the intention of making known this school, that these meetings are held. During two nights a week, throughout the year, classes are conducted by Dr. Barnardo's Deaconesses, under the charge of Miss Kennedy.

It would be difficult to say what these good ladies do not attempt in order to gain an influence over their scholars. Every useful branch of teaching is attended to—to the trimming of a hat and the making of a dress. As soon as a girl makes up her mind to enter a womanly sphere of life, her way is made smooth for her. Many girls have entered into service in Christian homes, through Miss Kennedy's agency. The prizes were of a most useful nature: cloth for dresses, work-boxes, Bibles, and other books. A shout of satisfaction greeted an announcement by Dr. Barnardo, that he would hold an inspection of the dresses in three months, and a prize would be given to the neatest if it had been made by the "young lady" herself.

Then followed a short address by Dr. Barnardo, in which he detailed the advantages of the night-classes, and to which he invited all to come. Another short address was given by Mr. H. Varley, but the lady who followed him was not accorded so much as one chance to make herself heard. The social element in the audience had become thoroughly aroused, and a loud and continued buzzing made all platform speech impossible. But Dr. Barnardo never gives in; so, standing up in the centre of the hall, he gained attention as he told some vivid stories of the boys and girls he had rescued, and of some death-bed scenes he had witnessed.

Thus, with song and story, the hour for dismissal came. Each girl on passing out was presented with a couple of oranges, The Band of Hope Illustrated Wall Almanac, and a copy of The Herald of Mercy.

This meeting revealed to some at least of those who had come to witness it, a glimpse of a work Christianity has yet to do; of a warfare she has yet to accomplish; of sacrifices that true women must yet make for their sisters, ere the strongholds of Satan, in the East-end, are won for Jesus Christ.

BY large majorities Kilmarnock, Peebles, and Elgin have declared for local option.

FREEMASON lodges on Teetotal principles have been founded at Leeds, Manchester, and Hull.

A FRUITFUL eight days' Temperance mission has been held at the Wesleyan Lecture Hall, Brixton-hill.

The League Journal believes that during the recent holidays there was less drinking in Scotland than in past years.

THE Church of England Temperance Society's Grocers' Licence Bill is to be introduced into Parliament on an early date.

A VOLUME by Canon Wilberforce is in the press, entitled, "The Trinity of Evil—Infidelity, Impurity, and Intemperance."

MR. W. D. STEPHENS, at a recent meeting at the Central Hall, said that last Christmas-tide there had been less drunkenness in Newcastle than ever before.

NOTWITHSTANDING severe weather and the election, Rev. J. M. Hewson, the Baptist Temperance agent, held successful meetings in December, in Yorkshire and the North.

THE East Surrey Coroner reports the death of at least twelve infants suffocated while in bed with their mothers during the Christmas holidays. Drink was said to be the cause.

RECENTLY, at Waterford Workhouse, some of the paupers broke into the spirit store and stole a quantity of whisky. A number were drunk, and some were so bad that stomach pumps had to be used.

THE Baptist General Association of Pennsylvania, representing over 80,000 members, has unanimously pronounced for total abstinence and prohibition. So also has the sister association of Illinois.

DR. DAWSON BURNS, in The Baptist, reviews the Temperance work of 1885, and says what remains to be done "might daunt the strongest heart, if not upheld by consciousness of the Divine sanction and blessing."

ACCORDING to the Revenue Returns just published, there is a falling off in Customs and Excise of over half a million, on the three months ending December 31, 1885. On the nine months to same date the decrease was over a million.

A SERIES of Sabbath evening Temperance meetings, to continue till the end of April, is being held in the Presbyterian churches, New York. Dr. John Hall, Dr. Talmage, Dr. Dyke, and Dr. Vincent are on the programme of speakers.

The Morning Advertiser—liquor-trade organ—hints to Lord Randolph Churchill that an increased revenue from drink would provide "money for the moral and material improvement of India." It would also increase the subjects to be improved.

MR. ALLSOP'S rescue work in Manchester is continued with great vigour. On Sunday, Jan. 3, over 4,000 persons crowded the People's Concert Hall to hear the Gospel. At the after-meeting fifteen professed conversion. Hundreds of drunkards have been saved.

IN The Blue Ribbon Chronicle, Mr. G. Blaiklock gives interesting specimens of experiences at Hoxton Hall. Here is one:—"Spent 6s. weekly on drink I praise the Lord for enabling me to come to the Hall and sign the pledge. I have got a new heart and a new home, £2 in the bank. Wife also happy in Christ."

THE CHESTER BRANCH of the British Women's Temperance Association has just had a very successful four days' mission (January 10 to14). Miss Brewster, of London, was the speaker, and gave great satisfaction to the Temperance friends. Her addresses were very effective, and fifty persons signed the pledge.

AT a meeting of the St. Pancras Total Abstinence Association, held in the Vestry Hall, Pancras-road, on Monday evening, January 11, Mr. Robert Rae, of the National Temperance League, said that although he regretted that some of the teetotal members of the last Parliament had been displaced, yet it was a fact that there were more total abstainers in the present than there had been in any previous Parliament. Rev. T. Eynon Davies said that the devil had 170,000 public-houses in the land, and 200,000 persons were engaged in the traffic. He understood that Mr. Gladstone was almost a total abstainer. He hoped that before long the great master of the axe would wield that axe to cut down the great upas tree of the drink traffic. Rev. Newman Hall claimed that something should be done for Home Rule in England—he meant the rule of Temperance, instead of the tyranny of the publican in the English home.

Letters to the Editor.

TWO VIEWS OF THE IRISH PROBLEM.

Dear Sir,—I hope the importance of the Irish question at this time will justify you in permitting me to take exception to your remark in your issue of Jan. 7, "We are glad that at least one letter has been written to show that the religious difficulty is the one real and insuperable difficulty in regard to Ireland," and to state my firm conviction that Dr. Littledale's letter, as quoted by you, puts forth an entirely mistaken view. As a Christian, it is most painful to me to find so many other Christians arguing that, because people are Roman Catholics, they must not have the rights and liberties which we enjoy, and that they are not fit to hold them. Surely Christians ought to be the first to uphold the principles of liberty and justice, and to "do to others as we would they should do unto us." If we violate these principles, how can we deplore the oppression of Christians in countries where sceptics or irreligious people have the upper hand?

Though an Englishman, I have been living in this country the last two years and a half, during which time I have been in all parts of the country, and mixed chiefly with those classes which represent the Conservative and landed interest. I have carefully studied the Irish problem, according to my abilities, and do not hesitate to say that the true aspect of that problem is just the reverse of what Dr. Littledale asserts, when he says that the Protestant and Catholic creeds are the opposing causes and interests in the country. It unfortunately happens that the two opposing interests have in times past been distinguished by difference of creed and race, as a rule, which fact has embittered the struggle, though it was not its cause; and, if all had held the same religion, the opposing interests would have been the same. Those interests are just what we see in the history of almost all civilised peoples—viz., aristocracy, or privilege, and democracy, or liberty and equality.

But in this country the supreme classes have been aided in their determined opposition to the national progress by an exterior and supreme power, viz., the English Government, and have, instead of yielding to the national growth and popular liberties, as in England, succeeded largely in repressing those liberties; and stunting and deforming the national life, producing all the unhealthy manifestations of checked growth, such as unlawful agitation and outrage. Any civilised nation, deprived of her liberties, as Ireland has been, and of that independence and responsibility which are essential to healthy life and progress, and governed by an alien power utterly ignorant of the people's sympathies and wants, would manifest the same unhealthy symptoms that we have seen so often in Ireland. The wonder is, not that the Irish are as they are, but that they are not worse; and to talk of improving them by any other means than by first giving them the natural and rightful conditions of other civilised people is useless.

The theory put forth by Dr. Littledale, that the Irish Catholics think it right to outrage and ill-use landlords because they are Protestants, may be in accordance with Roman Catholicism of the middle ages, but is utterly absurd now, and a serious and undeserved libel against Roman Catholic Ireland. The fact is, they resist what they believe, and to a large extent rightly believe, to be tyrannical oppression, by Catholic landlords or officials as much as by Protestants; towards the Protestants who are in sympathy with their cause they have the warmest feelings. It is absurd to suppose that the enlightenment and the spread of power and responsibility among the people, which have come into the world since the age of superstition and religious tyranny, have not pervaded Ireland as every other European country, and that there is any party or class in Ireland who wish to re-establish religious supremacy; or that the Irish people, after such a long and severe struggle for their liberties, will surrender them into other hands than their own. On the contrary, the Irish are intelligent and quick to learn, and as fully appreciate the principles of right government, useful laws, and national progress as any other people. When these matters fall into their own hands, it will give an immense stimulus to enterprise, industry, respect for law, and all the necessary elements of a nation's progress. I see no reason at all to fear religious recrimination or oppression, either by a national legislature or the people at large. On the contrary, the tendency will be to eradicate the old class and creed distinctions.

The fact is, the Protestant supremacy classes are aware how they have done all they could to hinder democratic progress, and, unable to divest their minds of the prejudices of hundreds of years ago against Catholic hatred, naturally fear Catholic or democratic resentment. However, anyone who knows the warm and generous side of the impulsive Irish nature will not fear retaliation when those influences are removed which brought into prominence the more unfavourable side of that nature. It would be impossible, on account of space, though much more might be said, to seek further to prove how little the Roman Catholic religion of Ireland has to do with the present crisis, or will hinder in the future the welfare of all classes. Very different laws govern society in this enlightened age.

I think it is to be regretted that so many of the followers of Christ seek their duty in shunning the affairs and interests of the bulk of their fellow creatures, consequently lacking that knowledge of, and sympathy for, mankind, which is so desirable in those who, following the Lord, are used of him as ministers and saviours to humanity. Surely all God's creation, and man made in his own image, outside the Church of Christ, are not outside of God's continual love and care, and those who are his, by adoption through the faith of the Gospel, need not fear to let Him lead them where He will, and into whatsoever circumstances and interests, knowing that it is He who keeps, and who will, through the lives and words of his servants, attract men to Him who meets all their needs. R. G. G.

Sir,—Having lived for thirty-five years in a midland county in Ireland, I would like to say that Dr. Littledale's letter, quoted in The Christian for January 7, is a correct description of Romanism, especially his comparison of it to Islam; such is the assumed attitude of both priests and people. They will insist that for an unordained man to speak of the claims of God (not controversial) is out of his province, even for a Catholic; for a person that does not submit to the Church to speak about such things is quite a breach of etiquette, and an insult to the Catholic faith, and whoso would do so, in presence of Catholics, such as in a railway carriage, "ought to be kicked out," "that all connected with Christianity has been settled by the proper authority, and it is too late in the day now for any other to take up the subject." The primary and chief virtue is to obey; to doubt the Church is want of faith—deadly sin, and, if persisted in, certain damnation. The priests are excellent trained generals, and they themselves will not speak on a subject bearing on the salvation of God, but only to those who first submit themselves; should any other introduce it, they will dismiss it with the bland smile, and the "God bless you."

My object in going to Ireland was evangelisation. I have heard of conversions from among the Roman Catholics, and have known a few—these few the exceptions which confirm the rule, though among Protestants the Word has not been in vain. All the Roman Catholic converts I have known have either been taken away by death, or had to emigrate; the persecution was too strong for them. I have known some doubtful conversions, where sinister motives prevail; these were tolerated, in some cases approved. Expediency, not principle, is the motive that prevades the whole system. It is not affected by the excellent State education, of which it has largely taken the advantage. It has given them the power knowledge gives, which they wield for the sway of Catholicism. It can amuse, employ, and make subservient all the faculties of man, or it will consent that these be employed in accumulating money, but the mind will be kept in such a state as to leave the Church a legacy at death

Dr. Littledale says that he is not concerned in suggesting a remedy. I confess I cannot. I have for many years suggested that Christian effort might be expended to advantage on virgin soil, rather than Ireland. I would cool no man's zeal, "every creature" includes Ireland, but fire does not rekindle on a débris of ashes. Ireland was, without doubt, a brilliant light in darkness from the seventh to the tenth century—"the island of saints." Popery is the "strong delusion," but the history of Ireland for the last three centuries indicates something anterior. May not her testimony be finished? W. W.

[We have published these two letters, not for the purpose of inviting other communications, for which we have very little space, but as indicating the opposing views of men of apparently very similar evangelical convictions, whose minds have been influenced by the different circumstances in which they have been placed, and who thus reflect the difficulty of the Irish problem. —Ed.]

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Dear Sir,—Negotiations for peace are about to take place between Servian and Bulgarian delegates, and grave events will probably result should the issue not be successful. Not only would the war be renewed on a large scale between the countries, but it is probable that Russia and Austria will be drawn to participate in it, then Turkey and Greece; and will it not be difficult for Germany, France, and Britain to remain neutral?

The recent war I believe to be morally unjustifiable, but I have come to regard it as the judgment of God on this country for prevalent sins, against which, alas! I do not know one voice publicly lifted up; and this is the saddest part of the prospect. I write this to ask your godly readers to pray for this and neighbouring countries, that the Lord will in mercy regard, and by his Spirit raise up witnesses for the truth, and turn men's hearts to Himself through faith in the Lord Jesus; and that He will in his mercy incline the hearts of rulers to truth and peace.—Yours very truly,

Francis H. Mackenzie.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—There was a good attendance of the Society's London friends on Friday in the Council-room, Exeter-hall, who met for prayer on behalf of Ireland. General Lawder presided; and Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, Rev. T. H. Clark, Rev. H. W. Townsend, General Haig, and Rev. D. Wickham offered prayer, or gave brief addresses.

THE REASON some children stand for half hours in front of bakers' windows, wistfully gazing at the bread and cakes, is because they do not get enough at home. The reason some Christians go hankering after semi-sinful amusements, and other midway indulgencies, is because they have not got enough of the Holy Ghost to satisfy them. They are living out in the kitchen, on the scraps. God says, "Come in." There is a Christmas dinner spread on his table all through the year, and your chair is empty. "Be filled with the Spirit?"—Christian Standard.

ITALIAN PROTESTANT SCHOOL AT SAN REMO.—In The Christian of March 12, 1885, we gave a brief account of the founding of this school by Mrs. Clode Braddon and Miss Kay Shuttleworth. The success and usefulness then anticipated for it have been realised. This season these ladies have placed the school under the auspices of the Waldensian Church. The school continues in a prosperous condition. To support it, however, a considerable annual sum is required. Mrs. Alex. Robertson, Villa Lamberti, San Remo, will gladly answer inquiries.

NETLEY HOSPITAL.—Sir,—In the hospital here there are 1050 beds, and although these are seldom all in occupation, except in time of war, there are always over 400 patients, mostly from India and abroad. The spiritual needs of these men are very great, in spite of the labours of the chaplains and the Scripture-readers, whose special province is visiting the sick and dying. Simple, unsectarian Gospel tracts are much needed, and may be sent to Mr. Roberts or Mr. Smith, Scripture-readers, R. V. H., Netley, Southampton.

The Book World.

Great Thoughts from Master Minds, Vol. iv. (Woodford, Fawcett & Co.), is full of choice extracts from the utterances and writings of great thinkers, speakers and writers.

Our Collects, Epistles and Gospels. Twelve meditations for the months of the year. By the late Dean of Chester. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Though this book presupposes some knowledge of Church of England formularies, Christians of all denominations can enjoy and profit by these meditations. The texts are well chosen and striking. The spirit of every discourse is truly catholic and evangelical. The lessons taught are at once spiritual and practical. Like Paul the writer possesses the holy art of connecting naturally the highest truths with the lowliest every day duties. To this Pauline characteristic he adds the sympathetic spirit of Barnabas. As the last earthly production of a consecrated pen, this volume will specially interest readers of Conybeare and Howson's "Life and Travels of St. Paul."

The History of Israel and Judah, from the reign of Ahab to the Decline of the Two Kingdoms. By Alfred Edersheim, D.D. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This is the sixth volume of Dr. Edersheim's valuable and delightful Bible history. Jewish history, written by any believing Jew, cannot fail to be interesting, but Dr. Edersheim is peculiarly fitted for the task. His divisions are so clear, his language so well-chosen, his blending of Scripture narrative with comment, illustration, and application so admirable, that we recommend his book to all classes. Young students of Scripture, private readers, and even preachers if much occupied, will gain much from it. Without ostentation of learning, the writer shows familiarity with original MSS. and the best commentators, English, Foreign, and Hebrew. One or more volumes of this series would be a useful gift.

The first number of The New Princeton Review, which we have received from the English publishers (Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, 2s.), contains several articles of a high order, contributed by writers who are in the front rank of American scholars and thinkers. Some of these are necessarily tinged by local colour, but others are of world-wide interest. We shall be glad to see the Review circulated widely in England, because of its intrinsic merit, and also because, if the promise of the prospectus and of this first number be sustained, it will be free from a glaring defect in several of its contemporaries on this side of the Atlantic—the practice of putting forward opinions, sensible or the reverse, true or false, in one number, for the sake of attacking them in the next. We purpose to refer more fully in a future issue to one noteworthy paper on "The Christian Aspect of Property."

Present Day Tracts. Vol. vii. Religious Tract Society. We should not like it to be thought that former volumes of this excellent series of short treatises on Christian evidences are disparaged when we affirm that the last issue is superlatively good. It contains, among other tracts, Dr. Meyer's most beautiful study on "The Christ of the Gospels"; Dr. Bruce's critique on the Tübingen School of Criticism; Dr. Macalister's invaluable unfolding of man's bodily organisation, which justifies Professor Owen's conclusion that man was the archetype towards which all previous modifications tended; an admirable summary of the historical accuracy of the New Testament writers by Dr. Maclear; and a treatise by Sir William Dawson on "Points of Contact between Revelation and Natural Science." Such a dissertation by the President-elect of the British Association for this year is worth more than the half-crown which is the price of the entire volume.

Moses and Geology; or, The Harmony of the Bible with Science. By Samuel Kinns, Ph.D. Eighth thousand. Cassell & Co. We have compared this last edition of Dr. Kinns' volume with the second thousand. The geology is very much improved by a careful revision; the chemistry has now received the approval of a Government analyst of high repute; and the astronomical facts have been brought up to the date of this year. It was inevitable that a work by a writer whose professional duties were not scientific should, on a few of innumerable details, be open to criticism in the hands of specialists in different departments of natural science. Dr. Kinns has taken these criticisms in good part, and has profited by them. The present volume, therefore, contains a vast amount of most valuable matter on the processes of creation. Occasionally it is too confident in its theories, but its presentation of facts is deserving of the very highest praise.

Faith and Unfaith. Dr. Sinclair Paterson. 3s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co. This interesting work consists of a series of lectures which touch on some of the burning questions of the day. "Agnosticism; or, Nescience v. Science"; "Higher Criticism; or, Intuition v. Revelation"; "Materialism; or, Atom v. Person." These are some of the points which are dealt with by the able lecturer. His style is crisp and clear, and though he is equally familiar with the terminology of Science and Theology, yet he carefully abstains from clogging his sentences with words and phrases which are unintelligible to the "ordinary reader." This cannot fail to commend the work to that slightly-considered person, and may also induce him to give a careful consideration to subjects he has hitherto shunned as beyond his humble capacity. A careful study of this able volume would be found, by most persons, to be a great help towards the power of "giving a reason for the faith that is in them."

Three penny pamphlets from the office of The National Temperance League lie before us. Personal Effort, addresses by the Bishop of London and Dr. Richardson, ought to be put in front of every seatholder in every Christian place of worship. Alcohol and Disease contains weighty utterances by the Bishop of London and Archdeacon Farrar. Reasons for Total Abstinence, by Dr. Farrar, is forceful, pointed, earnest, and true, and will help many in the right path.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

EUROPEAN.

HAMBURG.—The People's Coffee-house which was opened last October has succeeded so well, more than paying its expenses, that a second is about to be opened.

LUCERNE.—The Bâsle Bible Society has a flourishing dépot in Lucerne, near the celebrated Lion Monument. Pastor M. Uhlmann, the colporteur, is doing much good in Lucerne and its neighbourhood.—Journal Réligieux.

BRETON EVANGELICAL MISSION.—Mr. J. Wates, 4, Prince's-road, Lewisham, S.E., Hon. Secretary of this Mission, writes to say that there is a great field in Brittany for the distribution of Gospel tracts, at fairs, funerals, &c.

NIMES.—Messrs. Stockmayer, Sainton and Houter have been conducting, under the auspices of the Mission Intérieure, a week's meetings at Nîmes. Both as to numbers, attention and results, these meetings have been "a veritable success."—Evangéliste.

FLORENCE.—Some of the deaconesses from Kaisersworth, on the Rhine, began a school on evangelical principles in Florence about twenty-five years ago. They now have about thirty boarders and from 120 to 140 day-pupils. All the evangelical pastors of Florence, and many other friends of the institution, shared in the joy of the sisters and the children at a recent celebration.

RUBI, BARCELONA.—In December, 1885, a small evangelical church was formed in this place. Rubi is a village of about 4000 inhabitants, whose principal occupation is the cultivation of the vine. The mission was begun in 1881, by Francisco Albricias, who started a school for boys in the day and a night-school for working-men; this was followed by preaching on Sunday and evangelistic visits in the neighbourhood. In spite of much opposition and persecution, the Gospel work has gone on successfully.—Journal Réligieux.

AMERICAN.

MR. HENRY E. BENOIT, of Canada, has started for Mayumba, Africa. This is a French colony, and he goes to preach and teach in the French language. He will be one more added to the Bishop Taylor band.

CHINESE LIBERALITY.—The New York Examiner says:—"The largest single contribution made last year to the missionary work of the Protestant Episcopal Church was from a Chinaman, Mr. Charles Ping Lee, of Shanghai, who gave 5000 dollars to St. Luke's Hospital in that city." Is it possible that we are to look to the "heathen Chinee" for example in Christian giving?

REV. DR. RICHARD S. STORRS intends to retire permanently from his Brooklyn pulpit when he has reached his sixty-fifth birthday, which will be August 21 next. He wants leisure for travel, and several literary tasks he has long had in view.

FROM ARKANSAS a missionary of the American Sunday-school Union reports to a New York banker, who supports him:—"Favoured by very fine weather, I have organised fourteen new schools, with seventy-five teachers and five hundred and ten children; delivered seventeen addresses, visited ninety-eight families, distributed one hundred and twenty-seven Bibles and ninety-eight Testaments." A large work for a month.

REV. JOSEPH COOK has been spending a little time at New Haven, in contact with the students of Yale Divinity School. He submitted to a questioning by the students, and one question was, "What are the chief elements of success in the ministry of to-day?" he replied, "First, a conviction that men are lost; second, a conviction that they can be saved. These, coupled with an earnest heart and a wise head, bring success."

REV. W. HAY AITKEN gave Boston a hurried visit after his longer mission service in New York. He preached in Tremont Temple, and Trinity Church for Dr. Phillips Brooks, and on Monday, at noon, in Tremont Temple again. All these services were largely attended. Sunday afternoon an after-meeting was held. This brief visit was enough to reveal the full measure of fame Mr. Aitken commands, as a preacher of unusual power, in moving the masses to a thoughtful and penitent mood of mind. Every fibre of the man's being seems to be instinct with spiritual life.

THE FOURTH ANNIVERSARY of Cremorne McAuley Mission was held at New York, January 3 The Mission did not die with its founder, Jerry McAuley, but continues its useful work, proving a shelter to many a weary wanderer, and the place where prodigals come back to the Father. No record is kept of conversions, but some nights three or four have professed to find Christ, while a night seldom passes in which one soul at least does not express a hope in the Lord Jesus. Probably some are not saved who seem to be; certainly some go back to the old ways, but many hold on and hold out, and by their consistent Christian character evinced in daily life, adorn the doctrine they profess.

NEW YORK.—The subject of medical mission work is coming to the front in this city. A very practical conference was lately held. It is just fifty years since Dr. Parker went to Canton, China and opened an Ophthalmic hospital there. Now there are eighteen hospitals and twenty-four dispensaries in China, established by British or American missionaries. Men, well known in medica ranks, as well as missionaries, made addresses and joined in the very pertinent discussions of the conference.——The corner-stone of the new building of the Young Women's Christian Asso ciation on East Fifteenth-street was laid o December 1. The plot for the site measure 75 by 103 feet. The building will be five storie high, and will cost $125,000.——By the will of the late William H. Vanderbilt, the New York Y.M.C.A receives 100,000 dollars.

MISCELLANEOUS.

M. COILLARD.—The Journal des Mission Evangéliques announces "the good and gran news" that the expedition directed by M. Coillar happily crossed the Zambesi river last August; i has thus reached its destination, the Barot country, on the left bank of the river. All th party were well.

AUSTRALIA.—Arrangements are being mad to invite Messrs. Moody and Sankey to visit th Australasian colonies. The Queensland Youn Men's Christian Association has been requested t take the initiative in that colony. There can be n doubt as to the warmth of their reception if the can make it practicable to pay Australia a visit.

MELBOURNE Y.W.C.A.—Throughout the pa year, the Lord has shown his approval of the wor by granting his blessing upon all the efforts pu forth by the members of the Association. Th Sunday afternoon Bible-class, and also the month "social meetings" are appreciated by th members; the attendance at these meetings havin greatly increased during the last few month Many strangers have been welcomed at th "Rooms," and have found Christian sympathy an loving counsel when alone in a strange land, fa from home and friends. Employment has bee obtained for those who needed it, and many sa hearts have been cheered and comforted.—Southe Cross.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JAN. 24.–LEVITICUS XI.

2.—These are the beasts which ye shall eat.—The subject of this chapter is the separation of animal food into the two classes "clean" and "unclean," the latter being prohibited to Israel. The reason of this prohibition, as we learn from Lev. xx. 25, was to mark the separation of Israel from the other nations of the earth: "I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people. Ye shall therefore put difference between clean beasts and unclean." And this is confirmed by Acts x., where the cessation of this separation betwixt Jew and Gentile was clearly announced by a command to Peter to ignore the distinction here laid down.

The two essential marks of distinction of clean quadrupeds were completely dividing the hoof and chewing the cud, the spiritual symbolism of which was pointed out in the third century by Novatian thus: "In the animals, it is the characters, and doings, and wills of men that are depicted. They are clean if they chew the cud, that is, if they ever have in their mouth as food the Divine precepts. They divide the hoof if with the firm step of innocency (or better, 'of faith') they tread the ways of righteousness. For of those creatures which divide the foot, the walk is always vigorous." It is not, however, so much the vigorous walk as the tenacity of grasp which the divided hoof gives its possessor, especially in high and rocky places, which is the point of the type, thereby symbolising faith. The best explanation is that in Habakkuk iii. 19: "He will make my feet like hind's feet, and He will make me to walk upon mine high places." The best explanation of the type of "chewing the cud" is Ps. i. 2: "In his law doth he meditate day and night."

9.—Whatsoever hath fins and scales.—The same two characteristics appear here. Fins are to fish what wings are to birds—the means of mounting aloft. Scales (the word is used of armour 1 Sam. xvii. 5) represent typically "the shield of faith."

44.—Ye shall be holy, for I am holy.—It is remarkable that this deeply spiritual precept should occur in a context apparently occupied with mere externalism. It confirms the symbolical interpretation.

MONDAY, JAN. 25.—LEVITICUS XII.

"Wherever we see our fallen nature—at whatsoever stage of its history we contemplate it, whether at its conception, at its birth, or at any point along its whole career, from the tomb to the grave, it wears the double stamp of infirmity and defilement. This is sometimes forgotten amid the glitter and glare, the pomp and fashion, the wealth and splendour of human life. The mind of man is fruitful in devices to cover his humiliation. In the chapter before us, we are taught that the conception and birth of a 'man child' involved 'seven days' of ceremonial defilement to the mother, together with thirty-three days of separation from the sanctuary; and these periods were doubled in the case of 'a maid child.' Does this not declare to us in language not to be misunderstood, that man is 'an unclean thing,' and that he needs the blood of atonement to cleanse him?"—C. H. M.

2.—She shall be unclean seven days.—"The woman is made unclean by the birth of a child. Why is this? Because the child is born a sinner. She that bare him is therefore held as unclean. So decided is the Lord's view of the sin of a new-born babe."—A. A. Bonar.

5.—If she bare a maid child, then she shall be unclean two weeks."—Many reasons have been suggested for the mother's being kept unclean double the time for a female child. Some have thought that the circumcision of the male child on the eighth day was a sort of release to the mother. Others refer to 1 Tim. ii. 14, and suppose that the woman's being "in the transgression" was thus marked. Perhaps the most likely reason was that the "man child" recalled the "man child" long promised (Gen. iii 15; Rev. xii. 5) who was to bruise the serpent's head. Hence the superior honour conferred on the male as compared with the female. See also 1 Cor. xi. 3.

TUESDAY, JAN. 26.—LEVITICUS XIII.

As leprosy was a type of sin, the marks and tokens whereby it might be discerned—which form the subject of this chapter—might be expected to convey some lessons of spiritual truth, and such we find to be the case.

3.—When . . . . the plague in sight be deeper than the skin of his flesh, it is a plague of leprosy.—"Leprosy begins far within—in the bones and marrow—and it is sometimes three or four years ere it come out to sight. This typical view of sin we see realised in the case of the tender infant who lies so innocent-like on the mother's breast. If 'the hair was turned white,' and the plague evidently 'deeper than the skin,' then two things were evident, viz., that corruption was begun in the blood, and that it was not superficial. By this the Lord taught Israel that mere acts of sin would not be so alarming were it not that they indicated evil in purpose and feeling—a sinful nature—deep-seated depravity within."—A. A. Bonar.

13.—If the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean.—A striking type of the sin-convinced sinner brought to own that in him—that is, in his flesh—dwelleth no good thing (Rom. vii. 18), and yet "pronounced clean" in virtue of "the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth from all sin." In Ps. li., "I acknowledge my transgression, and my sin is ever before me" (ver. 3), is quickly followed by "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow" (ver. 7).

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 27.—LEVITICUS XIV.

3.—The priest shall go forth out of the camp.—"The leper was excluded not only from the sanctuary, but from the camp. The ceremony of restoration which he had to undergo was therefore twofold. The first part performed outside the camp entitled him to come within and to mix with his brethren (3–9). The second part, performed in the court of the Tabernacle and separated from the first by an interval of seven days, restored him to all the privileges of the Covenant with Jehovah (10–32)"—Sp. Com.

5.—And the priest shall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen vessel over running water.—The two birds together typify Christ in death and resurrection. "In an earthen vessel" represents Him as "put to death in the flesh," and "over running water" is best explained by "who through the Eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God" (Heb. ix. 14).

7.—And shall let the living bird loose into the open field.—"We could hardly have a more perfect type of the resurrection of Christ than that presented in the living bird let loose into the open field. It was not let go until after the death of its companion; for the two birds typify one Christ in two stages of his blessed work, namely, death and resurrection. It was the living bird, mounting upward into the open heavens, bearing upon his wing the significant token of accomplished atonement—it was that which told out the great fact that the work was done. Christ's resurrection declares the glorious triumph of redemption. 'He was raised again for our justification.' It is this that sets the burdened heart free, and liberates the struggling conscience. All who put their trust in Jesus are as free from all charge of guilt as He is; there is no more wrath or condemnation for them than for Him; they are in Him, one with Him, accepted in Him; co-quickened, co-raised, co-seated with Him."—C. H. M.

THURSDAY, JAN. 28.—LEVITICUS XV.

"This chapter treats of a variety of ceremonial uncleannesses of a much less serious nature than leprosy. This latter would seem to be presented as the expression of the deep-seated energy of man's evil; whereas the chapter details a number of things which are merely unavoidable infirmities, but which, as being in any measure the outflow of nature, were defiling, and needed the provisions of Divine grace."—C. H. M.

5.—Unclean until the even.—"The washing of the clothes plainly represents the cleansing in the blood of Jesus. The pollution is washed away by Christ's death applied to them by his Spirit. But why then remain unclean "until the even"? I suppose it was to represent the truth that fallen man, though justified wholly and completely from the sins lying to his charge, and though receiving the Holy Spirit to sanctify his polluted nature, is nevertheless not entirely free from the effects of his fall till his night has come. At death he lays down his polluted raiment, and is reckoned quite clean. But in truth it is not till next morning that his complete deliverance is apparent to all."—A. A. Bonar.

31.—Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness.—This refers to the various washings prescribed in the chapter, but perhaps chiefly to the sin and burnt offerings mentioned in the last verse as well as in verse 15. It was by the atoning efficacy of the blood that separation was effected between Israel and the various forms of ceremonial defilement which attached to them, of which this chapter treats.

FRIDAY, JAN. 29.—LEVITICUS XVI.

This is one of the most important and interesting chapters in the whole Bible. It contains the record of the solemn ceremonial of the great day of atonement, when alone the high priest was allowed within the Vail, and when in virtue of the blood then sprinkled upon the mercy-seat, Israel was "clean from all their sins before the Lord."

1.—After the death of the two sons of Aaron.—"A notice of the occasion on which the instructions were given well calculated to add point and emphasis to the solemn admonition to the high priest (ver. 2), 'that he come not at all times into the holy place . . . . that he die not.' The death of his sons for drawing nigh to Jehovah in an unauthorised manner, was to serve as a warning to Aaron himself, never to transgress in this respect."—Sp. Com.

8.—The other lot for the scapegoat (Heb. Azazel).—One of the chief difficulties in this chapter is the right rendering of the word Azazel. R.V. retains the Hebrew word, and renders it "for Azazel," putting, however, in the margin, "for dismissal." The "Speaker's Commentary" in a note says, "The best modern scholars consider its most probable derivation to be from a root in use in Arabic signifying to remove or to separate. They are equally agreed as to the word expressing the destination to which the goat was sent, not (as in our Version) the goat itself." This, however, must be understood not only of destination locally, but of the object for which the goat was used. Those who understand Azazel to mean a person—the spirit of evil in some form—are beset with insurmountable difficulties in explaining how one goat could be for Jehovah, and the other for an evil spirit! The most satisfactory explanation is that of Bähr, Winer, and Tholuck, who take the word as a verbal substantive signifying "for complete removal." The first goat would thus be the sacrificial offering "for Jehovah," representing the work of Christ in its Godward aspect. The second (like the second bird (xiv. 6) a continuation of the first), as having sin confessed over it, would typify the sacrifice previously made, by the death of the first, used "for complete removal." In other words, Christ's sacrifice appropriated by faith and used for the complete removal of sins confessed over it into "a land of separation" (ver. 22). So that the words of the hymn, "I lay my sins on Jesus," express what the "scape goat" or "goat for complete removal" set forth in type. The common notion, based (some think) on a Jewish tradition, that this goat fell down a precipice and was killed, has no Scripture sanction. Whatever became of it does not enter into the type, which has to do only with it as one with the previously offered goat, and therefore to be considered a part of the sacrifice already offered to Jehovah, and now to be used "for complete separation."

23.—Shall put off the linen garments.—The entrance into the Holy of holies was not made in the high priestly robes, but in pure white linen garments, typifying Christ entering into God's presence in his own personal spotless righteousness. Afterwards (verse 24) the high priestly robes were put on. So Christ having entered in by his own blood, "ever liveth to make intercession—to act as High Priest—for those that come unto God by Him."

30.—That ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord.—An important passage, as showing that cleansing from sin is the putting away of sin by virtue of the blood of atonement. In this sense "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin."

SATURDAY, JAN. 30.—LEVITICUS XVII.

"Every domesticated animal that was slain for food was a sort of peace offering. This law, though it expressed a great principle, was only provisional in its practical bearing. It could only be kept as long as the children of Israel dwelt in their camp in the wilderness. The restriction was removed before they settled in the Holy Land, where their numbers and diffusion would have rendered its strict observance impossible: see Deut. xii. 15—24."

11.—For the life of the flesh is in the blood, &c.—This is a most important verse, as throwing light upon the great principle of atonement, the sprinkling of the blood of the sacrifice either upon the altar or before the vail, or (as on the day of atonement) on the mercy-seat. The verse is rendered in the "Speaker's Commentary" thus: "For the soul of the flesh is in the blood; and I have ordained it for you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for the blood it is which makes atonement by means of the soul." That is, the blood represents the soul or life of the victim slain, and so makes atonement in (or "by means of") that soul or life so laid down, as given in exchange for that of the offerer. Thus Christ "gave his soul (or life) a ransom for many," and "poured out his soul unto death."

Christian Treasury, Dec., 1885.

"These are 'Pearls' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books; and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work. We wish it the wide circulation it well deserves."

The Record, Dec. 18, 1885.

"These expositions of, or rather lessons from, the Parables, have been written since A. L. O. E. went to India as a missionary. They were intended to aid in bringing Hindus and Mohammedans to the faith of Christ, and are written from an Oriental point of view. Nevertheless, English readers will enjoy and may profit by them. All will rejoice to receive a fresh work from the hands of so old a favourite as A. L. O. E."

Church Sunday School Magazine, Jan., 1886.

"A delightful contribution to Biblical literature, and especially valuable on account of its local colouring, the writer, as will be known to most of our readers, having been now for some years engaged in mission work in Hindustan. The illustrative portions, in themselves striking, are made entirely subservient to the forcible appeals of the writer; and we can but echo the remark in the Publishers' Preface, that no one can read what is written without being struck with the manner in which the Parables adapt themselves for use in Evangelistic Lessons.' The volume is enriched with a series (twenty-four in number) of specially-designed Illustrations—good both in their design and drawing."

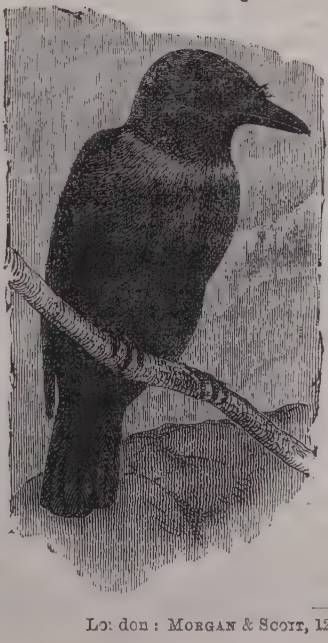
BIRDS OF THE BIBLE,

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds.



By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I.

AN ELEGANT GIFT BOOK.

Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

With Coloured Frontispiece, and

TWENTY-NINE OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."

Sword and Trowel.

"A beautiful little volume, printed in red and black, with numerous engravings. Will be found both interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy. One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday School Rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."—Christian Treasury.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily-written and prettily-illustrated work."

British Messenger.

"This book . . . is illustrated in very good style, the coloured frontispiece of the swallow being specially good. The list includes seagulls, peacocks, cuckoos, sparrows, ravens, and others."

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

INSTITUTED 1772.
President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P., S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C., and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carryingto the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

IT having come to the knowledge of a valued contributor, Lady B., that the opening of the New Year finds us under so deep a trial for some £200 to meet claims now due, she kindly offers the sum of £15, providing nine others will give a like amount.

We have happily secured two other promises, leaving seven still required.

There are few but will gladly concede that the trial of financial burden should not be added to those whose fullest and undivided interest is required, and should be given to the depressing needs and claims of the poor and sinful around them.

FURTHER PROMISES to enable us to realize the above kind offer, or any smaller sums, would be gratefully received if sent to the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, or to yours most respectfully, WILLIAM CHORLEY.

Mission and other Appeals.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—The finances of this invaluable institution showing a deficit of £2000 for the past year, a special and urgent appeal has been issued for public contributions by the committee. The office of the Union is 55, Old Bailey, E.C.

NORTH-WEST LONDON.—Mr. R. Bilke, 18, Greenhill-park-villas, Harlesden, N.W., writes that there is much suffering among the poor in the five localities where his mission halls are situate. He is anxious to help either by teas or gifts of coals, meat, and clothing, if the needed help is extended.

CHEER FOR THE LITTLE ONES.—Christmas and New Year's cards will be gratefully received and carefully arranged in scrap-books to cheer the suffering children in our hospitals and amuse the little ones in orphanages, &c., if sent by post to Miss HUNTLEY, 4, Sydney-street, South Kensington, S.W.

DISTRESS IN BLAENAVON.—The recent reductions in the wages of the poor ironworkers, and the great depression of trade throughout the district, has plunged many families into heart-rending poverty and want. Will your readers send me immediate help for these sufferers, in some cases seven and eight children in a family? Donations in left-off garments or money will be thankfully received.—O. TIDMAN, Broad-street, Blaenavon.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S FRIEND MISSION.—During the past month we have given nearly 2000 poor children a meat dinner, and we are daily besieged by children crying for bread. We are anxious to continue the meals every Tuesday and Friday. Any articles of food, left off clothing, and donations would be thankfully received. We should be also glad if any of your readers could send us some portable coppers.—GEO. FULLER, Superintendent, 1, Follet's-street, Poplar, E.

CHILDREN'S SCRAP-BOOK MISSION.—Dear Sir,—In the month of January last you inserted a notice regarding "Old Christmas and New Year's Cards." Over 33,000 cards were sent me. Through the kindness of a band of active lady workers, now numbering over a hundred, these cards have been worked up into card albums, scrap-books, framed cards, and puzzles for the poor and sick children of London to the number of 4250. Will you again ask your readers to send me their old Christmas cards?—CHARLES J. DARKIN, 26, Tunstall-road, Brixton-road, S.W.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, January 16, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

REBECCA JARRETT.

By JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

Superior Edition, Tinted Covers, 6d.

☞ Special Cheap Edition, 1d.

A Few Opinions of the Press.

"With all the power of a devoted heart and a practised pen Mrs. Josephine Butler pleads for a just judgment on behalf of Rebecca Jarrett; every one should procure a copy of her sketch of the life of this poor woman."—Sentinel.

"Mrs. Josephine Butler has told, in a penny pamphlet, the story of the life of Rebecca Jarrett. Those who have formed their opinion of Jarrett from the evidence in the recent famous trial would only be doing justice to this woman by reading the other side, as put forward by Mrs. Butler."

Sheffield and Rotherham Independent.

"Much light is thrown upon the past life and character of Rebecca Jarrett, and it must call forth the sympathy of all who read it for the one now undergoing punishment. The writer, in a most earnest and devoted manner, lays bare many incidents of Jarrett's history. On the one side we have her early and sinful associations. On the other hand her new life and religious earnestness. The finger of scorn will not be so ready to point at this weak woman after a perusal of Mrs Butler's well-timed vindication of the latest phase of her life's character and work."—Erith Times.

"The interest centres in the explanation given by the Author of the conduct of Jarrett while under cross-examination. . . . Jarrett appears to have been a woman of deep affection, who cheerfully performed revolting offices in rescue work. . . . Mrs Butler has loyally stood by her humble helpmate, and for that she deserves the thanks of every honest man and woman."

Hastings and St. Leonards News.

"We beg our readers to purchase at once the little book which Mrs. Butler has just issued, entitled Rebecca Jarrett. . . . It places Rebecca Jarrett in quite a new light, and brings out the real character of the recent trial more clearly and fully than it has been brought out by anybody else."—Methodist Times.

"In this pamphlet Mrs. Butler defends Rebecca Jarrett in vigorous terms from the cruel aspersions cast upon her during the late trial. . . . Truly Mrs. Butler's defence is a heart-stirring one, and places the poor woman in a much more favourable light than she is generally regarded. . . . Those who peruse this story will find it of great and pitiful interest."

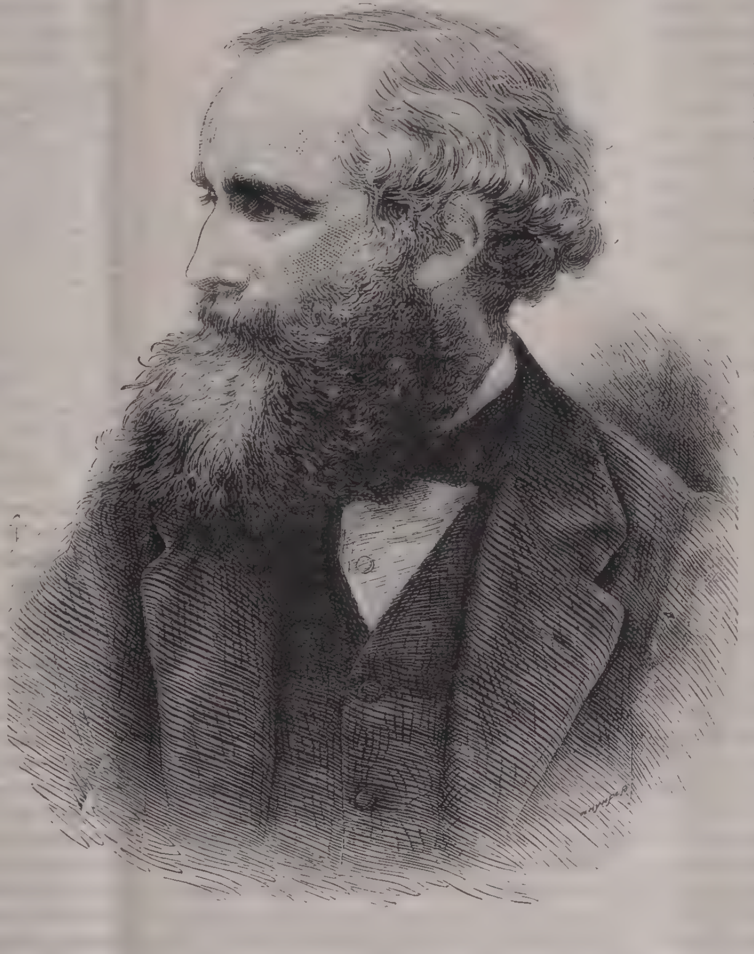
THE LATE

JAMES CLERK MAXWELL, F.R.S.

THE "two great lights" given to man are intellect and faith. Most unhappy has been the conflict between them. The perfection of humanity can alone be looked for in their harmonious combination. When intellect is no longer proud and self-sufficient, but, confessing its inability either to ignore or deny the great problems of man's spiritual relations to the Unseen and Infinite, bows reverently to the teachings of Revelation, then the ministry of Faith begins, and the path is opened to a complete development of character and destiny. Such a combination was found in the late Mr. James Clerk Maxwell, who filled the chair of Experimental Physics, with the charge of the Cavendish laboratory, at Cambridge; and who, according to Sir William Thomson, brought to the Eastern Counties University "nothing short of a revival of physical science." We have pleasure in presenting our readers today with a portrait of this distinguished scientist.

James Clerk Maxwell was born June 13, 1831. His father, John Clerk Maxwell, bore in his veins the blood of two old Scottish families, the Midlothian Clerks and the Dumfriesshire Maxwells. His grandfather, younger brother of Sir George Clerk Maxwell, was the author of a book famous in its day, "Naval Tactics." His eldest son, John, became Lord Eldin, a judge of the Court of Session. When Sir George Clerk, afterwards M.P., a warm ally of Sir Robert Peel, succeeded to Penicuik on the death of his uncle, Sir John, the younger son succeeded to the property of Middlebie. He married in 1827, Frances, daughter of Robert Cay, of Charlton, Northumberland, and James Clerk Maxwell was their only son. He was born in their town house at Edinburgh.

An endeavour to understand the causes of phenomena marked his very earliest years. The question to his mother, "Show me how it does?" was always in his mouth. When three years old he asked his father to tell him "the go o' that," when a house bell rang. How the water got to the sea; how stones came and plants grew; how sounds were emitted from the fiddle of a street musician, were inquiries, when he was a boy of six, that puzzled his nurse. Nor would imperfect answers satisfy him. "But," he would persist, "what's the particular go of it?" Wise are parents and nurses who do not grow impatient with a child's curiosity and questions.



His mother guided his education in those early years. When the thoughtful boy brought home from the fields and lanes his "finds," she gave a new meaning to them. She strengthened the tastes and the wondering reverence of the little naturalist, and knew not then that there would be a day, and that not far distant, when he would astonish the learned societies of Europe by the fruits of his researches in Optics, Astronomy, Electro-magnetism, and, above all, in Molecular Physics. It is on this last subject that even Professor Tyndall said that he did not feel equal to the difficult task of giving an account to the public of "the researches on which Clerk Maxwell's fame is based."

His mother also encouraged the boy's early piety, and sought to strengthen his religious faith by grounding him in the knowledge of the Word of God. At eight years of age he knew by heart considerable portions of Scripture, and in the days of his scientific research was, we are told, "one of the humblest and most diligent students of the Bible." No mortal pen has ever told what Scotland has done for humanity by that reverence in the young for the Scriptures she has fostered, and by the intermingling with the first buddings of thought of those living words whereby the wise increase in learning.

The education of Maxwell was conducted first at the Edinburgh Academy, his devoted father for this purpose residing there after the decease of the boy's mother. Thence he entered the University, when he burst, it is recorded, into a splendour of scientific reputation. In 1850 he went to Cambridge, entering at Peterhouse, but afterwards removing to Trinity. He there came out the second wrangler, and his tutor, William Hopkins, declared that it seemed impossible for him to think incorrectly on physical subjects, and that he was unquestionably the most extraordinary man he had met in the whole range of his experience.

When he was twenty-two years of age he went to Otley, near Ipswich, to spend part of the summer, in the house of the Rector of the parish, Rev. C. B. Taylor. His health had suffered from the strain of study. In that country rectory the young mathematician and investigator found more than physical recuperation. The pointings of his nature had always been Godward; reverence and deep humility had ever marked his character; he had been a regular attendant and communicant at his College Chapel; but while in Otley his religious views were directed to a more complete reliance upon the Atonement and sustaining grace of his Divine Redeemer, and the influence of the pious rector was blessed to a new and more influential perception of the love of God. And here, for the encouragement of others, the writer of this sketch may remark that he has never, during a long life, met with such candour and such eagerness to be led on in spiritual impulses, as he has found among young men from Cambridge. A sentence or two may be quoted from Maxwell's letters: "As we receive Christ now, so sure shall we be made conformable to his image." "The more we enter into Christ's work, He will have more room to work his work in us." "Love is another loadstone of our life; not a negative, but an acting goodness."

Returning to Cambridge his friends there were, among others, Canon Westcott, and Dr. Butler, Master of Harrow. The latter says of him: "When I came up to Trinity twenty-eight years ago, James Clerk Maxwell was just beginning his second year. He was the one acknowledged man of genius among the undergaduates. Though barely of age, he was in his own line of inquiry not a beginner, but a master. His name was already a familiar name to men of science. His was a position which might have turned the head of a smaller man; but he had one of those rich and lavish natures which no prosperity can impoverish, and which make faith in goodness easy for others. Of the scientific greatness of our friend we were most of us unable to judge; but anyone could see and admire the boy-like glee, the joyous invention, the wide reading, the eager thirst for truth, the subtle thought, the perfect temper, the unfailing reverence, the singular absence of any taint of the breath of worldliness in any of its thousand forms. And his powerful mind, after ranging at will through the illimitable spaces of Creation, and almost handling what he called 'the foundation-stones of the material universe' found its true rest and happiness in the love and the mercy of Him whom the humblest Christian calls Father."

In his twenty-sixth year he was appointed Professor of Natural Philosophy at Marischal College, Aberdeen. Four years later he was invited to fill the same professorship in King's College, London, and this position he held for six years. After a retirement to his country-seat in Dumfries-shire, where he pursued his scientific work, he accepted the newly-founded chair of Experimental Physics at Cambridge, with the charge of the Cavendish laboratory.

During these years he pursued his researches in colour, electricity, and molecular physics. At the meeting of the British Association at Bradford, his "Discourse" on the last subject produced, not only there but throughout the kingdom, a most extraordinary and profound impression. His essay on Saturn's Rings was pronounced by Sir George Airey to be the most remarkable application of mathematics to physics he had ever known. In such investigations his last years were spent, so that in 1884, Lord Rayleigh, as the President of the British Association, said he thought of taking the scientific work of Maxwell as the theme of his opening address. But not merely did his researches into obscure relations in nature impress his admirers; the deeply religious spirit with which all was done heightened the power of his influence. He died in the peace of the Gospel in the year 1879.

The fine portrait on the preceding page is taken, by kind permission of the Religious Tract Society, from the brief but excellent biography, written by Dr. Macaulay (Editor of The Leisure Hour), and published as one of their New Biographical Series; we have compiled the main facts of our sketch from the same source. We take this opportunity of commending, for wide and general circulation, these short penny biographies for the people, of which two volumes have now been issued. The latest of them, just to hand, is that of the late Earl of Shaftesbury, with life-like portrait.

MR. STEAD ON THE CHRIST LIFE.

A very remarkable letter, written by Mr. Stead to Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, while in Holloway Gaol, appears in last week's Methodist Times. While we think the writer seriously errs in not recognising the one important sense in which no Christian can be a Christ—viz., in the atoning aspect of our Lord's great mission—every reader must yet be deeply impressed by the way in which he sets forth the truth embodied in the words of the beloved disciple: "As He is, so are we in this world." His burning words are a terrible impeachment of our nineteenth century Christianity; and the sting of them lies, it must be confessed, in their comparative truth. Surely God has some great thing yet in store for a man of such strong and simple faith, single eye, and quenchless compassion for those who are out of the way. After stating that he means to proceed in the work to which he has put his hand, because compulsion is laid upon him, and that he is about to publish the true history of his "Secret Commission," Mr. Stead proceeds:—

THE supreme word is that we all want more of God. Not God in the Bible, nor God in Heaven, nor even God in the Earth, but God in us. That is the great want, the sum of all our wants. If we had more of God then we should be all right. The social evil, and all other evils are only the lack of God made manifest in the flesh. All these things are the fruits of atheism. Not the Infidel's atheism, but the Christian's atheism, which is far worse; first, because there is more of it, and secondly, because it is filmed over, and covered up, and forgotten by a blasphemous hypocrisy. We are all atheists, as I frequently say, half our time, and often three-quarters. We only let God in now and again, and bundle Him out without ceremony on any trivial excuse. And the result is what we see. Not merely social evils, in which our atheism bears its evil crop ripe for the devil's sickle, but that social malaise and ennui and apathy and worry, and all the legion of devils, whose presence within testifies that God is without. When a man ceases to rejoice he ceases to believe. All fretful impatience is sheer atheism. So is fear. We are timid because we do not feel God's hand in the darkness, and sometimes our atheism takes the odd shape of thinking God cannot do the work He has on hand because He entrusts part of it to such weak and unworthy instruments as ourselves. We have got very little faith in God if we think that our weakness is an appreciable minus to his strength. And all bitterness, and rancour, and hate, are due to the same root—want of faith, and the lack of God. Indignation is often divine, and intense flaming wrath is a passion which often purifies the soul. But the sense of sourness, the unresting fret, the angry and inflamed chafing of soul which I have lamented to see in many who have written to me and of me since the trial, has grieved me much. For that is not faith. Do these friends of mine think then that God did not know how to manage his own business? It is true He often seems to neglect it. But it is only seeming. Evil is present everywhere, a universal "frost in the world's prime," but good, though unseen, exists, and will be all the better for the frost. Those who walk by sight believe in the devil, for evil is only too palpable. But those who walk by faith know that "Evil its errand hath as well as good," and they do not become atheists because God needs elbow-room to bring about his ends.

As the lack of God is the cause of all vice, so his presence is the spring of all virtue. How few realise it! If they did, would we not feel how vain is the praise of man? Many overkind and indulgent friends have praised me for courage, and I know not what heroic virtues. In reality I had none. I only believed, and if you believe, it is easy to seem courageous, but it is only seeming. I am a poor, weak creature, but let the weakest poltroon know that he has Hercules at his back, and he will step out lustily like a very Mars. And why should men, who profess to believe that God Almighty is with them, be afraid? Hence the truth that all glorying is excluded, seeing that salvation, whether from fear or from any other evil, is of faith not of works. Only believe really enough, and everything is easy. The measure of our apparent virtue is only the measure of our belief.

"Believe in God!" some say—"in what God?" In God as revealed in Christ. For God was in Christ, and if He is in us, we shall be as Christ, so far as God is in us. Henceforth I shall never say unto anyone, Be a Christian. It is not Christians who will save the world. No, nor even Churches. What we want is not to be Christians, but to be Christs. Christian has come to mean with many an infinitesimal semblance of a shadow of Christ, and a whole ocean of self. Christian has come to mean Christ and water. We have got to be real Christs or the world will never be saved; only Christs can save the world. And what was the Christ? Absolute identity with God, real unity with Man. Are we united with man? A whole gulf cuts us off from all but a few of our fellow-creatures. Yet we are one with them; one with the thief, the harlot; that is, we ought to be. And until we are, we are not Christs.

And that brings me close to my particular crusade. What is that we are called to do in relation to fallen women, and girls who are likely to fall; to fallen men, and they who will in turn fall? Simply this, to be a Christ to them. This only is laid on every believer. For if he believes in God as revealed in Christ then he must "be about his Father's business," and that business is personal service for the weak, the suffering, the tempted, the fallen, and the lost. This work cannot be done by subscriptions. Christ did not bribe a superfluous angel by liberal subscriptions in order to be crucified by deputy; neither can individual Christians do it by deputy. All are not called to all kinds of this work, but all are called to some branch or other, even if it only be the witnessing for Christ by a sympathising look or word to the sorrowing and the outcast. When I was in Coldbath Fields, a poor thief who occupied the next cell to mine, who was in for passing counterfeit coin, was more of a Christ to me than the chaplain. "How long are you in for?" he whispered, as we tramped along the echoing corridor to morning chapel. "Three months," I replied. "Never mind," said he, kindly; "three months will soon be over." Poor chap, he had still a year to serve, and a "fellow feeling makes one wondrous kind." That is just what Christ had—a fellow feeling. And that unexpected sympathetic word was as a gleam of heaven's own light in the chill and gloomy gaol. How different was the chaplain's greeting, "Don't you think you're lucky getting off so cheap?" said he. And that was all. The burden of sin and suffering lies heavy on the world. We must bear it for our brother, for our sister, or they will perish utterly. Everyone is surrounded by others to whom he or she is called to be a Christ—the God-sent messenger and incarnation of God; and if they disobey, the message is not delivered, God is not revealed.

In presence of the social evil we stand before a dungeon indeed, from which egress, although physically possible, and it is not always that, is often morally impossible. These women with their lost motherhood and maidenhood are indeed sick and in prison, but who visits them? . . . . . Christ made Himself of no reputation, and suffered, of course, in consequence. Unscrupulous neighbours did not spare Him, but somehow, He did his Father's business. The other day at Gloucester the Assistant Chief Constable told the magistrates how many houses of ill fame there were in the city, and the number of their inmates. So far went the law. Can the Church go even as far? Yet, should not it be, not merely a thing possible, but a thing that is a matter of course, if churches really made men and women Christs, that every inmate of every evil house should be personally known, personally loved, and personally laboured for by some one of the many who call themselves by the name of the Redeemer? It is a disagreeable task, no doubt. But if there is not enough God in all our churches to furnish forth sufficient Christlike men and women to do this thing, what do we mean by calling ourselves Christian?

And I would like to say to you from my very heart, how sore a trial it has been to me to read of the way in which, in the name of purity, and by the aid of the very Act which we got passed to help women, poor lost ones have been driven from the only place that sheltered them into the fields, the streets, and even into the stye. Sad, sad, indeed, is this cruel torture of the least guilty, while the men go scot free. I would not close a single house, not if I could do so by holding up a little finger, until I was sure the poor girls had homes to go to, and some means of getting their daily bread. What I said at St. James's Hall, when I quoted Coleridge's saying, that often comes back to me. Would to God that in this land of ours Christianity would be as good as vice; it is not at present. And why? Because we are not like Christ.

Far more important than reclaiming the lost is preventing the fall of those who are ready to perish. And what a world there is as yet unexplored! How much of the cross that lies heavy on womanhood would be lightened if each man and woman realised that this day and all days, he and she must be a Christ to their servant-girl; and let her see in them, if it were only by a smile, or kind word, or sympathy, that in them also dwelt something of that spirit which was in Christ. And to our children, and to our friends, and to those whom we meet in business! Can we not in this matter endeavour to be helpful, not preachful, and ask ourselves nightly ere we sleep, Have I been a Christ to-day to all those whom I have met? A rosary, with the names of all we know, to be told at night, with the searching question, how far we have been Christ to each, interpreting God, and bringing them into communion with man, might be helpful. No one wants the New Crusade to monopolise all the energies of all the good people. But the subject should never be forgotten by any, and every opportunity must be seized to strengthen the growing moral sentiment of the community on this question. Children should no longer be thrust, all unknowing as Eve before the fall, into a nest full of tempting serpents. In every district there should be a White Cross Organisation and Young Women's Association, with reading-room, registry office, and all the appurtenances thereof. And near every church or chapel there should be at least one small room, in which a shelterless girl may find refuge, if perchance she finds herself in the streets at night.

What the world wants is two things combined —love and knowledge. Every organisation, whether of a vigilance association, or a church, or, it may be, a single individual on whom falls the Christ-care of the lost, needs to study the question as carefully as a scientific problem, not in his parlour or his vestry, but face to face with facts, by actual converse with actual men and women. Facts are the blessed schoolmasters of God. Human wants are inarticulate prayers. The citizen Christ of to-day must study the one in order to answer the other. Here there is a terrible disease, according to Mr. Moody, a greater curse to England than intemperance. And who studies it, who notes its symptoms, who collects observations and the results of experiments in order to deal with it? Good people work for the most part aimlessly, without concert, without intercommunication. Many of them have the most unscientific objection to ascertain facts, and still worse to communicate them.

And the third thing that is much borne in upon me is the importance of attending to the leading of the Holy Spirit. I have been surrounded with the lives and journals of the Friends. These men believed in God; they were the Christs of their time, and they were conscious of the constant guidance of God. That is what we need renewing badly just now. The very idea that God can and will guide you and me as much as He guided any of the ancient notables whose lives got written about in the Bible is to many absurd. But it seems to me that God has as much work needing doing here as in the Wilderness of Sin, and that there is as much need for God-inspired teachers in this nursery of nations as there was down in Judæa. We need to keep our souls more "open on the Godward side," if we would hear the Oracle Divine. But if we do: if we are "Ready, aye, Ready," we shall be guided as much as Abraham was when he came from Ur of the Chaldees, or Cromwell when he framed his New Model, or Mrs. Fry when she went to Newgate.

A GAP IN THE RANKS.

PAU has sustained a great loss in the death of Miss Jemima Yorke, which occurred on Sunday, January 17. She was one of its oldest English residents, a woman of noble character, of devotion to the Gospel cause, and intense love to her Saviour. The poor of every creed lose a generous, sympathising friend. The day before her death she was out on an errand of love and mercy, visiting the sick and poor.

The Christian works that most interested her—it would be difficult to name any that did not interest her—were the carrying the Gospel to the shepherds on the mountains in summer through an excellent colporteur she had herself trained to the mission, and amongst the Spaniards. Never in her deep and Christ-like humility would she have spoken of her labours of love, and I do so now in the hope that Christian friends may not forget them, but help to carry them on in the same spirit of love to the Master, and devotion to his cause.

THE SPREAD OF THE TRUTH.—Some French journals refer with satisfaction to the disappearance, one after the other, of several organs of Free Thought, while those devoted to the spread and advocacy of Evangelical truth have greatly multiplied.

"CHARITY HOPETH ALL THINGS."

OH for the gift of perfect love,
 That pierces through the shell!
That hates the sin with deepest hate,
 Yet loves the sinner well.

The love that through the veil discerns
 The underlying grace,
And is not checked or driven back
 By sin-scars on the face.

The love that seeks mid so much dross,
 The hidden gold to find;
That strives, while driving out the sin,
 The sinner's wounds to bind.

A tender, hopeful, cheering love,
 That can despair of none,
However black the record be
 Of sin and evil done.

Believe it—love can warm the heart,
 However hard and cold,
And love may grasp and strengthen hands,
 That nothing else could hold.

Be very tender in thy love
 For souls that go astray,
There is no surer guide than love,
 To the forsaken way.

Thou canst not hear the yearning cry,
 Nor see the hidden strife,
That speak of struggles 'gainst the wrong,
 From some deep well of life.

But One there is who reads their hearts,
 Who sees each bitter fall,
Who cannot bear the sight of sin,
 Yet loves them through it all.

And since the Holy One so loves,
 In spite of sinful deeds,
Shall we, so sinful in ourselves,
 Not follow where He leads?

Nay, rather let us give our life,
 Our hands, our hearts, our all;
And seek by prayer, and faith, and love,
 To "raise up those who fall."

O God of love, grant us the gift
 Thy love to understand,
And write it on untender hearts,
 With thy most mighty hand.

A REMARKABLE PRAYER MEETING.

UPON Monday and Tuesday, Dec. 21 and 22, the ministers of Chicago Presbytery to the number of about forty, "were all with one accord in one place," for no other purpose than that of seeking by prayer, conference, and silent meditation, the enduement of the Spirit. A committee appointed for the purpose had arranged a programme of topics and leaders, but the programme was not printed, and the meeting went forward without any appearance of machinery, one leader quietly giving place to another without announcement in the carrying out of the order of service.

There was very little speaking except by the leaders. The prayers offered were from broken hearts, and were heart-breaking. Under three of the ten leaders fifteen minutes were by each allotted to silent meditation; under two others twenty minutes each; and under one other ten minutes. During these periods the stillness was unbroken. Each soul was alone with God. No parts of the service were more impressive and subduing than these.

The secrets of that prayer-room during those two days cannot be disclosed. Everyone present was able to testify, as several did, that it was the most wonderful meeting he had ever attended. Chicago Presbytery has never before known anything like it.—New York Evangelist.

REV. W. H. AITKEN commenced Gospel meetings in Nashville, Tenn., on Dec. 27, assisted by other evangelists. They were greeted by large audiences at Christ Church, and at the Masonic Theatre.

THE PRESENCE OF THE LORD

By Mrs. JOHN PEARCE CLARK.

WHEN we meet with a friend who thoroughly understands us, who helps us in our difficulties and supports us in our weakness, do we not often think and say, "Oh, I wish I could be always with you—I should get on so much better; when you go away I am afraid I shall fall back into the dreary way in which you found me"? So when the soul meets with Jesus, and realises something of the new blessedness of life lived in communion with Him, is it not a frequent cry, "Oh that this might last! but that it can last is too good to be true"? "Will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth?" Let God answer, not man, and let the thirsty soul drink in the message in its sweetness. "His name shall be called Emmanuel, God with us" (Matt. i. 23). "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us" (John i. 14). If any should reply, "But these refer only to Christ's life on earth," hear again his own words, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. xxviii. 20). "The Father shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever, even the Spirit of truth" (John xiv. 16, 17). The Bible gives us many precious results of this abiding presence of the Lord with his people.

(1) Salvation. "The idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence" (Is. xix. 1).

"They shall fall and perish at thy presence" (Psa. ix. 3). Here is the way of deliverance from the power of sin. How many idols we have tried to dethrone! Ambition, Pride, Fame, Self, and many more; and when we thought they were broken in pieces we found them rearing their heads once more, and reigning in power within, until perhaps we have almost given up the struggle. thinking it would be useless to try again. Do you remember the story of Dagon? (1 Sam. v. 3, 4). When the ark of the Lord was brought into his temple he fell before it, and, being replaced, fell again, this time broken in pieces. This is just a picture of what takes place in the heart when the dear Master is allowed to come in: He must reign—the idol cannot stand before Him. His presence will do in a moment what the struggles of years could not accomplish, and in adoring gratitude the soul will exclaim, "His presence is salvation" (Ps. xlii. 5 m.).

(2) Separation. "In that Thou goest with us, so shall we be separated" (Ex. xxxiii. 16).

This is an opposite side of separation to that which is usually set before us; it is not a breaking asunder on the believer's part from those who are unlike Christ, but a natural falling away from him of all who cannot rejoice in the Lord's presence. If we walk with God, his foes will not walk with us. If Christ is our constant companion we shall not long be troubled with invitations to places where He is not welcomed.

(3) Rest. "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest" (Ex. xxxiii. 14). There are people in whose presence we always feel restful. The moment they enter the door a load rolls off our shoulders, the cloud is lifted from our spirit. Faint picture of the rest-giving Saviour!

He is All-wise; then my ignorance need not trouble me, for He is with me to guide every step. Oh, the rest of knowing nothing except that "He knows." He is Almighty; then my weakness is no hindrance; it only makes the rest more sweet. "Underneath are the everlasting arms."

He is Love; then my heart is satisfied, for He will see my needs with love's quick eye. He will do what is best for me; and even should all earthly love be taken from my life, his love will rest me still. Oh, restless heart, let Christ come in!

(4) Boldness. "When they saw the boldness of Peter and John . . . they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus" (Acts iv. 13).

How often we long for more courage to speak and work for our Master! Here is the secret of it—living with Him who says, "Fear not, for I am with thee." Those who are naturally timid often make the best workers, because they feel their need, and lean on the strong for strength, instead of on their own natural courage.

(5) Deliverance. "I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee" (Jer. i. 19).

In that wonderful story in the book of Daniel of the three noble men who would not deny their Lord, we read that in the burning fiery furnace they walked at liberty, and one like the Son of God was with them. So it is with his people still—they may be called to pass through fiery trials, but nothing can really harm them when their Lord is by their side, and He will deliver in his own time and way.

If we are walking with God our life must be a happy one, whatever our outward circumstances may be. Lack of joy means lack of communion. How often Christians bring dishonour on their Lord by unhappy looks, giving colour to Satan's lie that a Christian life is a dull one. Let us lift our heads, turn our faces to the sunshine, and so reflect the Sun of righteousness that others shall see that "the fruit of the Spirit is joy."

(7) Power. "All power is given unto Me . . . lo, I am with you alway" (Matt. xxviii. 18—20).

There is complaining on all sides of lack of spiritual power, and many of us, feeling our need, have pleaded for power, more power, and yet seem weak as ever.

Are we seeking to fill the pitcher only, instead of dwelling at the source of the living spring? seeking that we may be filled with power, rather than that we may abide in Him who is Lord of all power and might? He loves us too well to let us have what we ask in our way, running off with the gift, instead of rejoicing in the Giver. Let us be content to be nothing, and to feel nothing in ourselves, going on restfully and gladly, because all power is in Him, ready to flow through us at the faintest cry for the Lord to work.

Do you say, "How can I know this blessedness?" Christ says, "Lo, I am with you alway," so that his presence is a fact, whether you realise it or not. Lay hold by faith of that assurance, praying that the eyes of your understanding may be enlightened; then, though the joy of communion may not come at once, live as knowing Christ to be with you, not as one with whom you speak in the morning in the quiet of your room, and then leave as you go about your daily duties: but one who goes downstairs with you, to help and counsel and comfort in dining-room, kitchen, nursery, or wherever you may be. You will find life day by day growing more sweet, and will have the joy of knowing that Christ is seeing the purpose of his death fulfilled in you, for "He died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with Him."

PRAYER FOR REVIVAL.

DEAR SIR,—The letter from "J. G.," on p. 14 of last week's issue of your paper, contains a suggestion that I should like to see put in some more prominent form in your pages.

Will every reader of THE CHRISTIAN pledge himself, or herself, to spend at least a quarter of an hour daily in pleading with God for a mighty outpouring of his Spirit? Those who have much leisure will not grudge the time, but because of their leisure they need all the more to pledge themselves daily to some real definite action in relation to the Kingdom of God. And those who have little leisure need the more to pledge themselves to this time of quiet waiting upon God for a work greater than the interests that lie within the circle of their daily round.

Let the prayer be for all churches, all nations, the world; one united utterance of the Church's longing, THY KINGDOM COME.—Ever heartily yours,

Cotham, Bristol. MARK GUY PEARSE.

PRAYER in FAITH v. FAITH in PRAYER.

By Mrs. L. A. BALDWIN.

THERE is a vast difference between prayer in faith and faith in prayer—a difference as vast in their character as in their commonness. Faith in prayer is very common; almost everybody has more or less of it. Prayer in faith is anything but common; so uncommon, in fact, that our Lord questions if He shall find any of it on the earth when He comes back to this world again. Prayer in faith is a commanded duty; faith in prayer is neither commanded nor justifiable. Prayer in faith is always reverent and spiritual; faith in prayer is often superstitious and presuming, although again it is the unconscious reliance of reverent and spiritually minded — but sadly mistaken—Christian disciples. What has been the nature of your praying—that of prayer in faith, or faith in prayer?

Praying in faith is making known our requests unto God, in full confidence that, if we ask anything according to his will, He heareth us; and that, according to our faith, an answer to our prayers will be granted us. Having faith in prayer is believing that because certain prayers are offered certain results will follow, and that the praying will secure the thing prayed for. Praying in faith comes of an abiding faith in the Person prayed to; the confidence is in Him; it is based on a knowledge of what He is, and on a rooted conviction that He is every way worthy to be trusted. Faith in prayer is a blind or a presuming reliance on an agency of good—an unauthorised dependence on mere human means. Praying in faith is the act of a simple-hearted child of God. Faith in prayer may be but one remove from the heathen's reliance on his charms and incantations.—Christian Standard.

EARLY CLOSING ASSOCIATION.—Instituted in 1842, the progress of this society has been surprising. All that has been done during the past year is recorded in the Report before us. This includes all information relative to improvements in the hours of closing, the Saturday half-holiday, national holidays, &c. The united testimony of employers seems to be that nothing is lost pecuniarily by closing early. Ladies will here obtain all they may wish to know on the subject. Many meetings are about to be held to protest against late shopping. The Report can be obtained (price 6d.) of the Secretary, 100, Fleet-street, E.C.

THE CHILDREN'S CRY.

A FEW weeks ago, at the Autumn Assizes at Nottingham, there was a prosecution under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, and a vile creature, unworthy of the name of mother, was sentenced by Judge Denman to five months' hard labour for criminal connivance in the shame of her little daughter. The case was afterwards taken to the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, and on the 10th ultimo was heard before the Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, and four other judges, the inhuman woman being represented by able counsel. It was cleverly argued that there was no proof of complicity on the part of the mother, "inasmuch as the girl was merely there because it was her home," and that the Act does not deal with the case of a girl residing with her parents. Lord Coleridge, however, insisted upon the spirit of the law, and in a few simple and noble words asserted that the new Act was not only for the protection of young girls taken away from their parents, but also "to protect them from themselves."

It would not be fair to expect to find in the average magistrate that clearness of perception, and keen sense of justice and right, which characterise the Lord Chief Justice. Still it is not unreasonable to look for some little intelligence and common sense in those to whom it is given to carry out the law, even in the lower atmosphere of our police courts. Only too frequently, however, there is simply a parody of justice, and the decisions would provoke laughter, if they did not call up righteous indignation. One Metropolitan magistrate appears to have set himself out studiously to bring the administration of law into contempt. A recent case which unfortunately had to be brought before Mr. Saunders, at the Thames Police Court, illustrates only too painfully the necessity there was for extending and widening the protective power of the laws affecting children, when even our magistrates appear to be unable to recognise the value of a child's purity.

Many of the facts of the case to which we refer would not be well suited for publication in our columns; and, therefore, although they would be of value in this statement, we set them aside. Those to which we can refer are only too horrible. A little child of four years of age, described as intelligent-looking, was brought up, charged with living in an evil house, and not being under proper guardianship; ample proof of this was forthcoming. Under these circumstances, one would instinctively anticipate that the magistrate at once made an order for the little girl to be handed over to the care of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, whose officer made the application.

Mr. Saunders, however, has singular ideas with regard to "the sanctity of home," and, therefore, instead of commending the police for their action, he remarks: "Do you think it is right to take so young a child from its home? I know," he observed, "that a child may be taken away from such a place up to fourteen years of age; but, on the other hand, the law, reasonably, I think, recognises the fact that a child does not know right from wrong until it is seven years of age. Taking the child away is rather a tyrannical thing. In my opinion the child is too young to be taken away. I cannot make any order in the case."

So the poor little girl goes back to the vile house, and to the sights and sounds which must necessarily contaminate her, in all probability to appear again shortly, under even more terrible circumstances.

Another case, to which it is our painful duty to refer, was tried at the Old Bailey before Sir William Charley, the Common Serjeant. The prisoner, an educated ruffian, was charged with having criminally assaulted a little girl of ten years old. The plea of Guilty was, by advice of the Judge, withdrawn, and Not Guilty substituted; Sir W. Charley, as we are informed by one who was present, suggesting to the counsel that if, as he asserted, the prisoner was drunk when the act was committed, he could not be held responsible, as he would be unconscious of wrong. Much was urged about the high professional attainments, &c., of the prisoner, but after the jury had heard the details of the case, and patiently listened to the one-sided summing-up, in which stress was laid upon the statement that the offender had been drinking, they promptly brought in a verdict of Guilty. The Judge, after considerable delay, sentenced the scoundrel to the trivial punishment of a month's imprisonment, without hard labour.

If anything were needed to convince people that the moral and physical ruin of our young children is looked upon, by some of those who ought to be their protectors, simply as a matter of no moment, surely these two cases supply the evidence. From those who are elevated above their fellows to such positions of responsibility, we have a right to expect decisions free from the ridiculous, and marked at least by the elements of sound judgment. With respect to the Common Serjeant, there was an indication of partiality that ought to be mentioned. The case immediately preceding the one to which we have referred, was that of indecent assault by a carrier's porter. The Judge pointed out to the jury the distinction between such an offence and the more heinous one of criminal assault. Yet he condemned the porter who committed the lesser crime to four months' hard labour, and the physician who was guilty of the greater wrong, with the aggravating circumstance of drunkenness, to one month's imprisonment without hard labour. Could the force of "judicial" injustice further go? Who can wonder that the poor are losing respect for the administration of the law?

Will the day never come when poor Tom Hood's pathetic cry will seem out of date?—the time when flesh and blood will no longer be cheap, and when, if the children are not safe from ruin, their destroyers will, at any rate, meet with the deserts which the law has provided, but which to-day some of our magistrates and judges seem unwilling to mete out. At present there appear to be grave grounds for sharing the fear of an "English Mother," who writes in a tone of bitter anguish to The Daily News, that our nation is fast becoming "a very nursery for hell." All Criminal Law Amendment Acts that can be passed will be valueless to stem the tide of brutal lust if our judges remain indifferent and callous to the cry of the helpless and cruelly wronged children of our land.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN FINSBURY. — On Thursday evening, January 14, two hundred and forty-five husbands and wives sat down to a tea in Albion Hall, London-wall, in connection with the series of mothers' meetings which Dr. Griffith and Mrs. Griffith periodically hold at that Hall. Rev. J. Pratt, of St. Stephen, Coleman-street, and Rev. Styleman Herring, of St. Paul's, Clerkenwell, gave short addresses. The mothers attending have grown in number from fifteen in 1872 to over three hundred. There is now added a Medical Mission, held in the Goswell-road, Clerkenwell, called the "St. Paul's Medical Mission." An average of about one hundred weekly attend. There is a Bible-woman kept, and voluntary help is much needed. The help of ladies and laymen is asked to address the meetings and to otherwise assist.

"Our God is the Rock."—DEUT. 32—34.

"WHO is a rock, save our God?" (Ps. xviii. 31). He Himself says: "Is there a rock beside Me? yea, there is no rock: I know not any (Isa. xliv. 8, margin). Looking round on the various things in which those who know not this Rock put their trust, his people say: "Their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges" (Deut. xxxii. 31). "Hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies" (Isa. xxviii. 17); but "our God is a God of truth, and without iniquity" (Deut. xxxii. 4), "the Rock of ages" (Isa. xxvi. 4), "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8).

Faith trembling prays: "Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I" (Ps. lxi. 2).

Faith overcoming declares, "He shall set me up upon a Rock" (Ps. xxvii. 5).

Faith triumphant gratefully sings; "He brought me out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings" (Ps. xl. 2).

(1) This Rock is the sure foundation (Matt. vii. 24, 25). "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. iii. 11).

"On Christ, the solid Rock, I stand;
All other ground is sinking sand."

(2) It is the place of refuge (Psa. xxxi. 2, 3). "In the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him" (Psa. xxxii. 6); "I flee unto Thee to hide me" (Psa. cxliii. 9).

(3) Of shade. "A man shall be . . . as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land" (Isaiah xxxii. 2). There are tenderness and friendship for us in Him who is our strength.

(4) Of refreshing. "There shall come water out of it" (Ex. xvii. 6); "Drink abundantly, O beloved" (Cant. v. 1); "Honey out of the rock" (Psa. lxxxi. 16). Sweetness out of the strength of Christ.

(5) Of communion. "O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, let me hear thy voice" (Cant. ii. 14).

(6) Of Joy. "Let the inhabitants of the rock sing" (Isaiah xlii. 11); "He set my feet upon a rock . . . and He hath put a new song into my mouth, even praise unto our God" (Psa. xl. 2, 3).

God is all this to the believer; but to the disobedient He is a rock of offence (1 Peter ii. 8).

HENRY LAKIN IN GLASGOW.

AN all-night of prayer on New Year's Eve made a fitting preparation for Henry Lakin's Mission, at Garscube Hall, Glasgow. At that meeting the Lord Himself drew near in a very remarkable manner, and we were encouraged to look for great things; now we desire to thank Him that our expectation is realised. From January 1 to 17, Mr. Lakin preached nightly; notwithstanding the extreme inclemency of the weather good audiences assembled each week night, and on Sundays the hall was packed.

Some who were brought to the Lord during our brother's visit a year ago were amongst the most earnest workers on this occasion. Again, through the faithful and powerful preaching of the Gospel, numbers are rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour. Some of these men and women have been sunk in the lowest depths of sin, and t is truly delightful to see the already manifest signs of the new life in such. D. J. F.

THE DOOMED ACTS.—A meeting of members of the House of Commons who have been most active in promoting the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts was held last week, when it was resolved that a resolution should be moved in the House of Commons next month, calling for their repeal. It was stated that a large number of members of the new House of Commons are pledged to repeal.

A LIFE ON WINGS.

SUCH was the somewhat mysterious title given by Rev. E. W. Moore, of Berkeley Chapel, to an address he delivered before the assembled workers at Miss Macpherson's meeting last week. The upper room at 60, Commercial-street was more crowded than usual; the company included a small battalion of stalwart Scandinavians, whom Miss Hedenström had piloted thither from her Home in Leman-street. The address was very telling and practical, despite the metaphorical title, and had the unwonted effect of leading up to a testimony and consecration meeting, such as have become familiar in connection with Conferences for the deepening of the spiritual life.

Mr. Moore's text was Ps. lxviii. 13, "Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold." No doubt, he said, this passage refers to the believer; we have in it a remarkable comparison instituted and a contrast exhibited. The believer is compared to a dove. What higher honour than to have applied to him the emblem which has been elsewhere selected to set forth the peacegiving and blessed characteristics of the Holy Spirit Himself? The emblem suggests the believer's acceptance. The dove was a bird accepted for sacrifice under the Levitical economy; all believers are accepted in the Beloved. The dove is a pure bird, and thus illustrates what the Christian ought to be—holy in all manner of conversation. The dove is harmless and peaceful; the Christian is not only to be wise as a serpent but harmless as a dove.

Alongside of this striking comparison, there is a solemn contrast. "Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold." Though the believer is likened to a dove for purity and harmlessness, he may yet fail to understand, to claim, or to enjoy his privileges. What are we to understand by the phrase "lien among the pots?" Miss Whately in one of her books upon Egypt says she never understood it until she went to Cairo. Nothing is more common there than to see the doves or pigeons (which are to be found in large flocks around all Eastern cities) nestling upon the flat roofs of the houses, on which are frequently piled up broken pieces of pottery and rubbish of all kinds. There they grovel, and for hours are lost to view. Does not this expression forcibly suggest the sad condition of degradation into which a true believer may fall. The proper sphere of the dove's action is between earth and sky. It may alight to rest, but it ought not to lie among the pots. The believer is designed to be in heavenly places in Christ Jesus—not as a geometrical expression, but as a spiritual experience: that is his element, his dwelling-place. If he allows worldliness to come in—sets his affections on things below—he is lying among the pots. Like David, his soul cleaveth to the dust. That is not a thing to be sung about as we sometimes hear it, but to be confessed at the feet of Christ.

The phrase also includes the idea of bondage; it was said of the Israelites when brought out of Egypt: "His hands were delivered from the pots." So the believer is to be set free from the galling yoke of his sins—not a select few, but all of them. Christ came to redeem us from all iniquity. The idea of defilement is further conveyed by the phrase, "lien among the pots." The dove could not nestle there without having its wings covered with dirt. So the Christian who grovels in the dust of this earth, and its pleasures, cannot escape from the contraction of defilement. A fourth thought implied is depression. The bird is joyous only when it is on the wing; and so with the believer. Not that he may escape sorrow and trial. The Arabian proverb is true that says; "Sunshine always, makes the desert." There is work that can only be done in the cloudy and dark day, but that is a very different thing from the depression that comes from being out of communion with God.

But there is the other side of the picture. "Ye shall be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold." Miss Whately says that when the doves are suddenly startled they fly upwards against the light; as the slanting rays of the sun fall upon their wings, these have the resemblance, now to silver, and now to yellow gold. Translating this into our spiritual experience we may express it under four S's—soaring, shining, serving, singing. The thought of soaring is well conveyed by the passage in Isaiah xl., "They that wait upon the Lord shall exchange strength; they shall mount up on wings as eagles." The law of gravitation is overcome by another and more powerful force. So we read of the believer:—"The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath set me free from the law of sin and death." This is true, not only in a judicial, but in an experimental sense, when we know what it is to have God above us, beneath us, around us, and within us. The higher the eagle soars the more he gets the world beneath his feet, and the easier it becomes. Our wings are faith and love; are we putting them into daily exercise and so receiving daily accessions of strength that will enable us to soar higher and higher in the divine life? An arrow's upward flight is fast at first, but as it rises the force is spent and at last it falls. An eagle may falter for a moment till its wings have full scope in the azure blue; then it mounts higher and higher till it is fairly lost in the boundless expanse. The difference lies in this: the arrow is propelled by an external force, the eagle rises by the power of an internal life. We can read the lesson of the figure, as it applies to our spiritual experience.

Then there is the thought of shining. The wings of the dove catch the rays of the sun and they shine with its reflected light. Someone has said in irreverent jest that "Christianity is all moonshine;" a truer word was never spoken. Our Christian life is a borrowed light—a reflection of Him who is the Sun of Righteousness. But our soaring and shining are subservient to our serving. It is only when on the wing that the dove (the carrier pigeon) can render service to man and carry his messages. How many messages God wants us to carry in this great London to oppressed and ruined souls. He wants us to be letter carriers—yea, to be ourselves living epistles known and read of all men. Lastly there is the singing. The dove does not sing, perhaps, though it has a pleasant note of its own. Mr. Spurgeon says: "When the sun rises all the little birds begin to sing." So when we rise into the light of God we cannot help singing. The bird, as someone has remarked, is the only creature that never plays, because its whole life is one long play. The Lord help us to live this life on wings, so that we may soar and shine and serve and sing.

The last half hour was spent in the recital of striking testimonies from a seaman, two sisters, and the speaker of the evening, all of whom told how God had led them to a fuller reception and deeper realisation of his power to purify and to keep. Mr. Moore led in earnest prayer and a good many in the company expressed, by rising, their desire to enter into the same experience.

Towards the close of the tea hour Miss Macpherson had some cheering news from the other side to impart, in a letter from Mrs. Merry. A Jewish student at Highbury College who conducts gospel and conversational meetings for his kinsmen after the flesh, at the Home of Industry, every Saturday, told of success and encouragement in the work. Two young Jews are about to confess Christ as the Messiah, in baptism.

THE ENGLISH GIRLS' GARTEN.

AT a recent meeting in Earl Fortescue's drawing-room at 40, Belgrave-square, the following were present: Lady Louisa Egerton, Lady Frederick Cavendish, the Dowager Lady Stanley of Alderley, Lady de Rothschild, E. Chadwick, Esq., C.B.; Mrs. Poulden, Mrs. Soltau, Mrs. Edmund Helps, Mrs. Fitzmaurice, Mrs. Heller, the Misses Ball, Mrs. Westgarth, and others.

Miss Headdon began by shortly explaining the "English Girls' Garten" system, to the extension of which she has been specially devoting herself for some years. It was originally devised, and has been now for several years very successfully carried on, in the United States. Its object is to teach all common household work, such as making beds, laying and lighting fires, cleaning grates, scrubbing the floor, sweeping the room, setting the breakfast and dinner table, washing and ironing clothes, answering the bell, showing in visitors, and, in fact, teaching all the duties of "little maids of all work," partly by means of small toy samples of each thing, partly by songs and lessons which teach the children why it is right to do it in one way rather than in another, and partly by giving short, bright object lessons, which every teacher knows is one of the best methods of drawing out a child's intelligence and producing a durable impression on its memory.

Miss Headdon had brought six little girls, inmates for less than two months of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, lest it should be thought that a longer sojourn there had imparted to them unconsciously home training. These six children proceeded to lay the napkin-size tablecloth on the little miniature toy-table, and arrange the corresponding toy breakfast things on it, singing the appropriate song the while. They then proceeded in the same way to remove and put them by. A little toy wash-tub, toy poles for clothes lines, a toy scrubbing-brush, &c., were also exhibited, to the great satisfaction of all assembled.

After a short deliberation as to the best course to be pursued for getting the use of this thoroughly practical and useful system extended among the little girls living in towns, many of them in single rooms with their whole family, instead of in separate cottages as in the country and in small country towns, it was moved by Lord Fortescue, seconded by Lady Louisa Egerton, and carried unanimously:—

"That the first step to be taken with a view to the ultimate wide extension of this 'English Girls' Garten' system for the practical training of little girls, some as future domestic servants, and very many more as future wives and mothers, would be to try to persuade the managers of the large Metropolitan District Pauper Schools, with many female children residing within for years, to introduce this system in the first instance into such of those establishments as have 'Kinder-gartens' already in operation therein, as its effect would powerfully tend to remove the widespread and not wholly unfounded impression that girls brought up in those enormous establishments (wholly dissimilar from any private households in which girls could ever be engaged as servants) are, after all the large expenditure incurred by the ratepayers for their maintenance and schooling during many years, almost always found on entering domestic service to be very helpless, and nearly useless as regards household work in general."

The English Girls' Garten Association comprises some well-known names on its Executive Council of ladies. The Secretary, Miss Headdon, The Villa Bullo, Newnham-on-Severn, will be glad to receive the names of those willing to be associates; and to supply copies of the quarterly paper, Little Women.

THE DANGERS OF THE NORTH SEA.

DEAR SIR,—"Is there any place on the face of the earth where a snow-storm is so objectionable as in London?" said a gentleman in my hearing the other day.

Perhaps not, "on the face of the earth." But it is infinitely worse at sea, and worst of all in the North Sea. There it is not merely regarded as "objectionable," but is dreaded more than any other visitation, and is, as a rule, more disastrous in its results. When a snowstorm bursts upon a fleet of from fifty to two hundred trawling smacks, it strikes dismay in its advance, and leaves desolation in its wake, for collisions are inevitable, and involve sad loss of life.

Every day since the great storm of the 6th instant has brought its fresh tale of sorrow. First, three poor fellows arrived at Billingsgate by steam carrier, who had been rescued from a foundering smack, the other three hands being drowned. On the same day the Sparkling Nellie reached Yarmouth with the solitary survivor from the Busy Bee, with which she had collided amid the blinding snow.

Following these in rapid succession have come equally distressing reports from other fleets—each giving fresh point and fervour to the prayer which ever, morning by morning, ascends to the throne of grace from the offices of this Mission ashore, and from its vessels at sea: "Lord, hasten the day when, by the generous gifts of thy people, every trawling fleet shall have its Mission ship, every smacksman know the blessed Saviour as his own."

During last year two valuable lives were lost from the Mission smack Edward Auriol, and one (the steward) from the Edward Birkbeck. Surely no one would say, "Hold your hand; do not persist in a work which entails such sacrifice." There is a ready answer to such a protest. Those three bright young Christians were prepared to go to their Master's presence; but every winter there are broken hearts and desolate homes in East coast towns, because husbands, fathers, brothers, sons will never return from the trawling grounds; and alas! in many instances the sorrow is unrelieved by the Christian's hope of meeting again to be for ever with the Lord.

It is this sad knowledge which makes us give an emphatic refusal to the timid counsel to stop at home during the winter season. When the Lord Jesus sent his disciples forth to preach the advent of his kingdom, He bade them first "heal the sick." This command we are seeking to obey on the North Sea; and your readers will readily understand that amid the wild winter gales, when spars, tackle, and gear are constantly giving way, there is far greater necessity for the presence of a Mission vessel, with its well-stored dispensary, than in the calm nights and sunny days between May and September.

Forty cases of accident and illness were recently treated in one morning on board a Mission smack; and never does an injured man leave the dispensary without hearing of the Lord Jesus, the Great Physician.

If Christians on shore realised more fully the privation and peril amid which the 12,000 North Sea smacksmen are toiling to supply our tables with fish, I cannot think we should have much longer to wait for the full answer to the prayer mentioned above.

Scarcely a week passes without my receiving letters full of expressions of gratitude to God, and to his people, from men who have received help and healing on board the Mission ships; but there are other letters which are laid aside sadly, and with the ejaculation, "Lord, how long?" for they are written by men in fleets as yet unsupplied with this means of grace, and one's heart aches on reading again for the hundredth time the question, "Why mayn't we have a Mission smack in our fleet?"

People speak of "the high price of fish." The price of fish is paid in human suffering and human life out upon the North Sea, and it is our absolute duty as English people with consciences and hearts, but above all as Christians, to supply the smacksmen with some at least of the privileges and comforts with which we ourselves are so amply provided ashore.—Yours faithfully,

E. J. MATHER, Director.

MOROCCO.

FROM time to time there have appeared in THE CHRISTIAN interesting and hopeful accounts of the efforts being made, both by the Kabyle Mission and the British and Foreign Bible Society, to reach the Moors in and around the district of Tangier. I would like to testify briefly to what I have seen and heard as a visitor to this strange land.

Being recommended to visit Morocco for my health, I took an early opportunity of going to "Hope House," Tangier, the headquarters of the Kabyle Mission, where I found a devoted band of men and women all eager to acquire the difficult language of the country, so that they might tell to the Moors in their own tongue of the wonderful love and works of God. The acquisition of the language is, of course, one of the chief difficulties in all foreign mission work. When this is overcome the fields here seem open and inviting. The natives are friendly and seem willing to listen to the Gospel message. As the Mission is still in its infancy much cannot be said of actual results of the work, nor can much be expected considering the obstacles to be surmounted.

I was struck with the holy, happy influence surrounding the Mission Home, where I stayed for the night; it was touching in the extreme to hear the children one after another plead with God that they might have "the talent of language" given to them, so that they too might ere long be able to tell the natives of Jesus and his love. Shall we not also unite with them, that dark Morocco may soon stretch out her hands unto God; that the cruelty and oppression which one beholds there, shall be done away, and the blessings of the Gospel follow in their stead?

The medical branch of the Mission, under the superintendence of Dr. Churcher, must prove a great blessing to many, and will effectually open the way, as I believe it has done already, to individual dealing with those who come for medicine and physical relief. It is cheering to see so many who have come out here to witness for Christ. On former visits to Tangier no such signs were visible. May God, who alone giveth the increase, pour out a rich blessing on the labours of his servants.

The representatives of the British and Foreign Bible Society, Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh, are doing a most valuable work. Being masters of the language, they are enabled to visit, distribute the Scriptures in the Arabic, and converse with the people. There is free access, I believe, to the outlying villages on the mountains, and not unfrequently natives will come into the town to purchase copies of the Word of God. A depôt is established in the centre of the town, for the sale of Arabic and Hebrew Bibles, &c., under the management of a Syrian colporteur, the sales being very encouraging. There seems, I think, to be one special need at Tangier, and that is a school for the instruction of Moorish children. Such a school would effectually pave the way for future work, as is proved in other mission fields.

Yours faithfully,

Gibraltar. GEORGE HOLMES.

EXETER HALL.—On Monday, January 11, a merry tea party, comprising the scholars attending the Stanhope-street Sunday-school, in Clare-market, assembled for their treat in Exeter Lower Hall, provided by the kindness of friends interested in the work. This school is in connection with the Stanhope-street mission, which is carried on by members of the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A. Much blessing is resulting there from the preaching of Christ and Him crucified.

THE WORLD'S FUTURE.

THE title of Canon Garratt's new work* does not indicate its contents. Written as it is by a learned and venerable clergyman, who is well known by his previous works as a student of prophecy, the book calls for notice, and deserves study. We do not, of course, commit ourselves in this review to the opinions advocated. The views, however, set forth, while marked by some originality, are mostly written from the standpoint of supreme regard for the authority of the revelations of the Spirit. It may interest our readers to have a brief résumé.

The author holds that a time is coming when one of the results of Christ's redemption will be the entire deliverance of the earth from its curse, and its restoration to the condition which God originally designed for it. Christ will come a second time to the earth as it is. His coming will move the Jewish people to true repentance. When the Church of the Firstborn has been caught up to meet Him in the air, the Jews will be living in Palestine, and will send messengers respecting Him to nations that will still remain. Canon Garratt maintains that when St. Paul teaches that "the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same," that it is Satan, designated elsewhere by the Apostle "the god of this world," who is intended. To him before his fall the vice-regency of the earth had been committed; and, though by sin he forfeited it, he claims it still. He was vice-regent before the six days' work; after that he appears as the tempter. Genesis i. 1 gives the record of God's first creation of the earth; the second verse, the result of the fall of Satan.

By the support of modern scientific authorities, evidence is adduced that there will be a reversion of the creatures to the original types, or creative ideas in the mind of God. Isaiah xi. 6—9 is therefore to be understood in the plain and obvious meaning of the words. Pain, ferocity, and suffering among the animals will cease, when the curse on the ground, the necessary fruit of man's fall, is removed. Animals will be transformed from being carnivorous to graminivorous, but this will be by the return of their functional organs to the original type from which according to other analogies they have degenerated. Man also, when the Church of the Firstborn has been enthroned, will be restored. The earth, though liable to decay, according to modern science, will continue from generation to generation by the will of the Creator, which according to Christian scientists may be held adequate to correct present physical tendency. An ever-increasing population will find their homes here and in worlds in process of making. The word of the Lord respecting neither marrying nor giving in marriage is held to refer to the "children of the Resurrection," and the nature of this service and blessedness is set forth by the author.

If space permitted we should offer objections to some of the reasoning in the latter chapters of the work. It seems to us that the preaching of the Apostles did emphasise the fearful condition of the impenitent. Paul rested not: he made long missionary journeys, bore privations and sufferings inconceivable, if by any means he might save some. At Ephesus he spoke "with tears" to the unsaved, and the whole tenor of Christianity is that of a salvation for the lost. There are matters not yet revealed, and around which there is an awful darkness. The Gospel does not create that darkness; it comes to save from it; and while we welcome glimpses of the future which borrow light from inspired Scripture, we are afraid of speculations which appear to lessen the danger of neglecting the great salvation.

Of course, a condensed summary of 260 pages leaves room for objections. The subject must be studied as it is presented in the book. This however we may say, while we do not commit ourselves to all the interpretations, Scripture is appealed to as the standard of truth.

BATH PUBLIC-HOUSE MISSION.—It is still only the day of small things with this Mission, yet through it the Gospel has been set before every landlord and landlady in the town and suburbs. It has been no unusual thing for landlords to obtain tracts from the workers, and distribute them among their customers. In many instances swearing has been stopped through the cards being hung up in tap-rooms. Miss Skinner, of 5, St. James's-square, Bath, is the Treasurer.

LIFE IN IRELAND.

A PRAYER-MEETING ADDRESS IN DUBLIN.

BY GEO. F. TRENCH.

IT is, perhaps, hardly necessary to tell in a meeting in Dublin what the state of lawlessness is at present prevailing in country districts; and yet, as it is sought to stir up earnest prayer in all who believe in its efficacy, it may be well to state a few facts that have come under my own observation.

There is a gentleman in the South, who farms largely, now suffering most terrible persecution for the exercise of his unquestioned right, as a citizen of this empire, to hire land offered by its owner. When his meadows were being saved the police stood round the labourers to protect them from violence. In his dairy the servants made butter under the same conditions. In the village where he was brought up he cannot buy the necessaries of life. None will sell to him. The other day his child and its nurse were stopped by boycotters, and the perambulator searched lest any food should be concealed in it. In Limerick and Cork the shops whence he had sought and obtained supplies have been warned to refuse him and have done so.

He may be seen going through his land armed with a repeating rifle, as if he lived in Central Africa, exposed to the assaults of wild men or wild beasts. His hay has been burned in large quantities, and his daughter publicly charged with the crime by his implacable enemies. And all this to a man hitherto popular with his neighbours, for no offence whatever, but taking a farm on which the previous tenant had failed.

A few weeks ago, travelling by train, I met a Christian lady and her daughter hurrying out of the country, after a second attack on their dwelling. The first time it was blown up by dynamite; the second time a fusilade was continued round the house about midnight for an hour and a half, to the terror and distress of all who remained indoors, while her husband and the police sought to clear the woods of their murderous assailants.

In our own village a national school teacher incurred, without cause, the ill-will of his neighbours. The school was wrecked, the teacher and the parish priest driven away by violence when they sought to enter it. The children, set on by their parents, were active, and remain so to this day, in boycotting the teacher and the school. Several cases have occurred elsewhere of school children boycotting their fellows, whose parents had offended some "unwritten law" of the "National League," which de facto governs Ireland. If the youth of our land are thus early trained in the passive and active arts of lawlessness, I leave you to judge what the future is likely to develop.

This being the condition of social disease and disintegration at which we have arrived, it becomes us to look to our own responsibilities as Christians. For certain it is, that God, as the Governor of the world, and appointing rulers as his ministers for the good of his people in every nation, rules it in reference to them. When, therefore, calamities occur, we are bound to ask ourselves, what is God's controversy with us? Will you then set up a court of inquiry, my fellow-Christians, and investigate this question, and by honest and faithful self-examination and self-judgment seek to discover your faults, with holy resolution to amend? Nothing can be more gratifying to me than the unity displayed in these meetings, for surely we must all confess, in the presence of a distracted society, that division among Christians is our most prominent sin. I own to it myself, to the want of love and of fellowship with others not in all things of my way of thinking. And it is high time that we drop all other minor links and cling to the grand and only true bond of unity, life in and love for Christ Jesus the Lord.

Again, when our properties and possessions are affected, does it not become us to ask ourselves how far we have acted faithfully as the stewards of God in these things? Has there been no self-indulgence, no luxurious living, no waste? I have been for years persuaded of the soundness of the principle of systematic giving—giving in proportion to our means—and would heartily recommend all to set apart a regular proportion, "as the Lord shall prosper you," to be laid up for, or spent in, his service. By all means spend as much more as you like, but do not spend less than the fraction of your income which calmly and honestly, in prayer and grateful love, you decide before God that you ought to give.

Again, let us ask ourselves: Are we in all things surrendered to Him who has redeemed us to be his own, enjoying his great salvation to begin with, but not stopping there, going on to take his yoke, offering our bodies, talents, possessions, all and everything we are and have, a "living sacrifice" on his altar? Is this our state? Be honest, I beseech you, Christians of Ireland, and now afresh let us begin to consecrate ourselves in the power of the Holy Ghost to our Master's service.

Let us turn to Nehemiah i. The national distress may have been greater than ours, but the principles of this man's action must be a true guide to us. When he heard of the affliction of his brethren, what did he? He "sat down" (ver. 4)—attitude of calm and earnest reflection. It was not political fretting, not hurrying to and fro amongst men. He sought God in secret, and "wept, and mourned, and fasted, and prayed." Yes! he wept not only in sympathy for others' sorrow, but in broken-hearted confession of his own and his people's sins. He prayed also, in the beautiful words which I ask you to listen to, and bending your heads to make them your own prayer, now: "O Lord! I beseech Thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name; and prosper, we pray Thee, thy servants this day, and grant us mercy in the sight of our rulers."

But he did not only pray; he worked. And I want you to notice the three methods or lines on which he worked. He employed three implements or weapons which will indicate these —the Sword, the Trowel, and the Trumpet.

Yes, he used the sword. That points in our case to the power of the civil ruler, who "beareth not the sword in vain" (Rom. xiii. 4). To some it may appear that in a Christian dispensation we travel outside the path of faith when we look to or depend upon the "powers that be," wielding the sword of physical punishment. But this chapter (Rom. xiii.) is fatal to any such theory. The powers ordained of God are as truly his ministers in civil affairs as Paul who taught this was his minister in spiritual.

And that not merely for the world's sake, as though God should say, "Let the world trust its magistrates, but you Christians, look to Me;" but "He is the minister of God to thee for good" (ver. 4). It is for the Church's sake, where it is found, and for it especially, that rulers are ordained of God.

Let us bless God for this his care and love! It is Satan's work to cause disorders and troubles and wars, it is God's to put them down. We work with God, under God, and against Satan, when we work for social order, strong government and peace. It will be noticed how, with an iteration unusual in the Scriptures of St. Paul, government is six times over in as many verses of Rom. xiii. attributed directly to God as its source. With Paul, moreover, this was no mere theory, it guided his actions on three important occasions, besides others less notable:—

(1) In Acts xxi. 39, when exposed like ourselves on the one hand to the "violence of the people," and on the other to the incompetence of the government, he asserted his citizenship in its earthly character, as a Jew of Tarsus, a citizen of no mean city, and at once secured a hearing from his assailants. And shall we, because we are citizens of heaven in a spiritual sense, hesitate a moment, in an emergency like the present, to assert that we are also in a temporal sense, "citizens of no mean" empire, and demand of God's ministers, to that end ordained, the right of peaceful living?

(2) When the powers themselves, carried away by popular clamour and violating their Divine commission, were about to inflict penalties instead of praise on one who did well, Paul again asserted his rights as a citizen, and boldly reminded the rulers of the law which they were bound to serve. "Is it lawful," said he (Acts xxii. 25), "for you to scourge a Roman, uncondemned?" And afterwards, when still he failed to secure adequate protection from the inferior officers of the law, he appealed directly to Cæsar, as the chief depository of God's commission of the peace.

(3) And yet again, when it came to Paul's knowledge that a conspiracy or league had been formed to inflict injury, violence, or death upon himself, he took measures to inform the government of the day of its existence, with a view to its defeat. And, whatever may be the effect of a like information conveyed in the present hour (and I have spent part of this morning with others in such work), in Paul's case a heathen ruler made instant and ample provision for the protection of God's servant.

I ask your attention to this question: If Paul, as a preacher of the Gospel, engaged in that work, and as a disciple and follower of the rejected and crucified Jesus, who himself aspired to know nothing among men but Jesus Christ and Him crucified, could consistently use every available means to stir up the government for his protection in the pursuit of that heavenly calling, would we be wise to affect a higher spirituality than he, and sit idly by, when not merely the right to preach Christ is assailed, but the ordinary right of citizens to lead a quiet and peaceable life in the land of our birth? For my own part, I cannot accept this theory, or adopt this course.

Now observe that Nehemiah did not wield the sword; he and his servants wore it, ready to use it, but no blood was shed. If our rulers could bring themselves even to take the attitude of strength, neither in lawlessness nor law need blood be shed. It is sheathing the sword of government that tempts the assassin, and brings guilt upon a nation.

But Nehemiah also used the trowel. This points to Gospel work, because the builders were reviving the stones—figures of those who believe —out of the heaps of rubbish, to raise the wall of the holy city. Present troubles arise to a large extent from the breakdown of moral principle in the land. "Truth is fallen in the streets, and he that departeth from evil making himself a prey." The teachers of religion are too often the leaders of conspiracy to repudiate debt. Perjury has become so prevalent, that in one diocese, at least, the rules "reserving" absolutian for this sin have been relaxed, so that the parish priest may now confer it.

But, if the Bible had been in circulation amongst the people, can it be conceived that the present lawlessness could exist? Surely not. Our fervent prayers should, therefore, be that soon, very soon, God may open the door for his Gospel to spread far and wide through the land. Let us not pray under the relaxation of past experience, but in the energy of expectant faith. It will come suddenly, friends. Suddenly, as in Italy, the people will be found willing to hear you and to read your Book. Only expect it, and keep working, and watching, and praying. There is money lodged in the bank, provided by a lady, for a Bible-carriage for the South and West, and faithful men are only waiting for the workers, the guidance and the opportunity to start it. And when it goes, not a stone will strike it, nor a hair of the preacher's head be hurt.

Meantime, be at work where you can. Busy your heart and brain in the service of Christ, and the saving of souls, and you will find it a blessed antidote for care and fear.

But Nehemiah also used the trumpet to call together the builders scattered far one from the other on the wall. And so must we. The circular convening this meeting was a sort of trumpet-call to prayer. When the wolf enters the sheep-field, in an instant the flock is gathered together. It is their instinct. Let it be ours in the time of public danger to come often together, each set of us in our own districts, and pray as one man for God's favour and blessing on the people, on our labour, and on the rulers of this kingdom.

One concluding word on the attitude of mind befitting the Christian in this crisis. Following the example of Nehemiah, we shall begin by self-judgment, honest and searching, as I have already urged. Then will follow reform in the case of every discovered fault. This will give efficacy to prayer in the name of the Lord Jesus. And if, notwithstanding all, we have to suffer loss, let us take it cheerfully. Our portion, our inheritance, our substance, is not here, not accessible to rapacious hands. Meantime, let us fear nothing. Eschew fear as you eschew care or sin. Remember Nehemiah's words when Shemaiah sought to make him afraid: "Should such a man as I flee?" "I will not go in." In Christians, rather let the world find courage when all others are dismayed. "When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, There is lifting up" (Job xxii.). Who should be so strong, so courageous, so patient, or so peaceful as the man who trusts in God!

STATE CHURCH REFORM.

WE are asked to publish the following paragraphs from the recent letter to The Times by the well-known clergyman, Rev. Lord Sydney Godolphin Osborne:—

Of late years there has been a movement ever tending to make Church services more and more attractive by all manner of artistic accessories; as in secular matters the age in which we live is one of great sumptuary extravagance and display, so it seems to have been held advantageous to the Church to develop luxurious devotion, to so conduct public services that all possible appeal can be made to the eye and ear. All that art can afford by harmony or decoration has been pressed into the service, and thus church-going, retaining the character of God-worship, has been adapted to the taste of those whose worldly lives need costly stimulants. I should regret to think it is so, but I have heard it urged that there is another reason for the influential support given to the Established Church; it is held to be, of all Christian ministries, the one which is singularly indulgent towards its higher-class supporters, most useful in regard to the morals of other classes, but unobtrusive as to those of known habits which may infringe on the teaching of the pulpit, zealous in the work of the reclamation of the victims of purchased vice, but slow to rebuke the promoters and purchasers.

I own to having my doubts as to whether, if the bishops and clergy were one hundredth part as zealous to Christianise a very large proportion of these wealthy Church supporters as they are to attack the vice of an inferior order with the money obtained from them, they would not find financial support as proof of their affection for the Church very rapidly diminish.

No Church can claim Apostolic character which is not aggressive. It cannot sit still and urge, "Here is our ministry, here our temples, here, open to all, are the means of affording to all participation in devotional exercise, here are our ministers ready to teach all alike the Gospel truths which make wise unto salvation, to warn all alike against the sinful life which leads to destruction."

DISTRESS IN MONMOUTHSHIRE.—The recent reductions in the wages of our poor ironworkers, and the great depression, has plunged many families in the Blaenavon district into heartrending poverty and want. Despite all efforts, the intensity of suffering increases. Through the kindness of friends, we have clothed and fed many, but could supply hundreds of others (in some cases seven and eight children in a family) if help were forthcoming. Left-off clothing or money will be thankfully received by Pastor O. Tidman, Broad-street, Blaenavon.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND AT KINGSTON.

ON Sunday, January 17, this evangelist commenced the second week of his successful mission in this town. In the morning, a children's meeting was held at Christ Church, Surbiton, and was well attended by many of a high social position. The preaching of the Word was blessed to the conversion of a considerable number of these young people.

In the afternoon, on arriving at the Albany Hall, the writer found a crowded assembly of children, young people, and adults. Serried rows of young faces met the eye in all directions. Platform, galleries, aisles, were all crowded; standing room only could be found. Rather more than 1200 persons were within the building. "What St. Luke says about Jesus," and "The seven sorrowful ways that Jesus walked," formed the basis of an address altogether unique in illustrative power. The story was told of Benjamin West's picture, "Christ Rejected," at Philadelphia, and we felt, as we listened to its pathetic recital, that the most obdurate heart would surely melt. The impression produced was driven home by the "Magnetic Hammer," with which and a few nails Mr. Hammond sought to illustrate, to the great delight of the children, how people come to Jesus. Little nails were attracted quickly, and helped to bring others. Large nails proved hard to draw, and needed the hammer to descend right on them. The numerous groups of anxious little ones, scattered about the Hall after the meeting, indicated the deep impression that had been made. In the evening, the building was filled with over 1000 adults, who listened eagerly to the message of salvation. As on previous occasions, large numbers remained behind to the after-meeting.

On this Sunday evening many striking cases of conviction and of conversion came to light. A young man yielded himself to Christ—one of two who came into the inquiry-meeting on the previous Friday with the avowed purpose of creating a disturbance. One young man, who was lovingly requested by Mr. Hammond to remain to the after-meeting, repeatedly refused, and pushed his way out. He was afterwards found on the other side of the Hall, deeply anxious. One poor woman on her knees by the door, surrounded by workers, was praying for mercy.

During the week the evangelist's powers were taxed to the utmost. Four meetings a day was the general rule. Besides the services for adults, held each evening, averaging 300 persons each night, meetings were held for the police and postmen. These were fraught with blessing, and many of the men decided to follow Jesus. Meetings for praise and prayer were also diligently maintained, and were greatly appreciated by the Christian workers. Open-air meetings were held in prominent places, and were addressed by Mr. Hammond, Rev. T. Anderson, G. Wright, J. Clarke, and others. A service was also held at "The Gables," Surbiton, and was well attended by many persons of a high social position, and resulted in much blessing, as on other occasions. Messrs. Hammond and Spiers held services for the children at the Albany Hall every evening, at 6.30, and the inquiry-rooms furnished abundant evidence of the good work done. The recital of Mr. Hammond's American experiences proved deeply interesting. Amongst other matters, he told of preaching in Calton Jail, Edinburgh, when, mounted on a high part of the building, he preached to the prisoners locked in their cells, and hidden from his view. The anxious manifested themselves by tinkling their bells, and souls were saved there.

On Wednesday, Mr. Hammond requested all Christians, young converts, and anxious ones to rise successively in their seats. When the last had risen, it was found that only half a dozen remained seated. Two of this number, young men, fled precipitately from the gallery, but were presently found amongst the anxious ones below.

We might sum up the results of the Mission, in the words: Souls saved and saints encouraged. To gauge the full scope of the blessing would at present be impossible. But the workers present every night can testify to the fact that large numbers have pressed into the kingdom. Backsliders, too, have been restored, and Christians have received a stimulus not likely to be soon forgotten. As the Mission drew near its close the work grew in intensity and solemnity, till it seemed to take the form of a death-struggle between sin or righteousness, the world or Christ, heaven or hell. Mr. Hammond leaves this town greatly beloved by all with whom he has come in contact; more especially will he be remembered by those young converts who have accepted Jesus and eternal life through his instrumentality. He will be remembered in the prayers of many, that his labours may be greatly blessed at Clapham and other places to which he is going. Mr. Spiers, also, has greatly endeared himself to the crowds of children amongst whom he has worked so devotedly. His departure will also be greatly regretted. The Kingston Evangelistic Choir rendered great assistance to the Mission, and the sweet hymns from "Gems of Praise" soon became general favourites.

A jubilee meeting, the last of the series, was held on Friday, Jan. 22. The Committee have resolved to carry on the meetings during this week.

"A DARK SPOT IN SOUTH LONDON."

TWO and a half years have elapsed since a few working men and women commenced the Mission at Penarth-street, Old Kent-road. Some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN have taken a deep interest in the work; and have helped to sustain it during this period.

The dire distress of the people immediately surrounding the mission-hall is heartrending, and, indeed, almost beyond description. In one house dwell a married couple with eight children. The last chair has been pawned for a florin, and every other saleable article has piece by piece been disposed of. "I have heard a good deal in the mission-hall," said the father, an intelligent and industrious man, the other night, "about answers to prayer: do pray for me that I may get employment."

What is to be done for the throngs of poor starving children, whose wan faces depict hunger, and whose scanty rags bespeak intense poverty and suffering? This is a question which is constantly perplexing those engaged in practical work amongst the poor, and nowhere more so than in this district.

Last Monday week, a free meat tea was given to a large number of hungry and destitute men and women, whose cases had been carefully inquired into beforehand. It would have aroused the pity of the most callous to note with what eagerness the famished crowd partook of the repast. Many a story of sorrow might be told if space permitted.

The work of the Mission has been greatly blessed; some have been born again, and backsliders have been reclaimed. Numerous shops in the neighbourhood which, before the Mission was started, were open on the Sabbath, are now entirely closed on the Lord's Day. In order to save the heavy rent of the present building, which amounts to £52 per annum, exclusive of other expenses, it is desired to erect an iron building on an adjacent piece of land, at a cost of £150. The Committee ask the continued prayers and support of your readers.

ENGLISH BLIND MUSICIANS IN THE STATES.—Dr. Campbell presented several pupils of the Normal College for the Blind, Norwood, in a concert at Boston, last week. They were well received. Surprise was expressed at the thoroughness of their education. The Boston newspapers speak well of their performance. Dr. Campbell will present his pupils at a concert in Washington, under the patronage of President Cleveland.

"A LITTLE MEMBER."

"Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things."—JAMES iii. 5.

I HAVE before me as I write the account of a strange accident which befell a splendid Atlantic steamer, in the beginning of last year. She had sailed from Queenstown for New York, and had on board nearly three hundred passengers, besides her crew. She was considered one of the fastest and best steamers afloat. Her engines were the most powerful in the world, and when she encountered the storms of the Atlantic, she seemed to meet them like some mighty monster—dashing the waves in volumes of foam from her bow, as she sped on her way across the deep.

On this particular voyage she encountered a severe storm as soon as she left Queenstown, but nothing seemed able to check her in her resistless progress, and, when the storm abated, she was apparently uninjured and undisturbed by it. But suddenly, without the least warning, she refused to obey her helm, and, notwithstanding the power of her mighty engines and the perfection of her machinery, she lay for three days and three nights like a log on the ocean, in the greatest danger of being lost. Happily another steamer came to her assistance at the end of that time, and she was towed into New York harbour. It was then discovered that her rudder was fractured. "By the unexplained fracture of a small piece of metal, this splendid ship was almost as helpless as a log," was the newspaper report, on the accident.

How forcibly this brings to our minds the words of our text! "Behold also the ships. which, though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth." And this small helm, you may be sure, is an especial object of care and attention with all captains, lest there should be lurking in it, unobserved, any flaw which might in the moment of danger wreck the ship.

"Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!"

Even very little children are often like that great vessel with the faulty helm. There is something wrong with their tongues. They may have beautiful bodies, and people may admire them, but God, who reads their hearts, and who sees there tongues, and hears every spoken word, knows that they are in great danger, although they may not know it themselves. I remember when I was a little boy, hearing other little boys using words that were wicked, and poisonous, and, although I have forgotten many things that it would have been well for me to remember, I have never forgotten the evil words I then heard. Truly we may say, "The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison."

We know that there is only one remedy for this mischief, and that is love to Jesus in our hearts, and the power of the Holy Spirit in our lives. David, you remember, knew how impossible it was for him to guard his own tongue without the help of God, and so he prayed: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth: keep the door of my lips!" I sometimes hear children—even very little children—answer pertly, when reproved for saying evil things: "I'll say what I like: my tongue is my own." Let them remember what King David said of the wicked people of his day: "The Lord shall cut off all flattering lips, and the tongue that speaketh proud things: who have said, With our tongues will we prevail; our lips are our own; who is lord over us?"

There is, indeed, no surer way of telling who is lord over us than by our tongues. We may think that we are not serving the devil; but, if our tongue is evil, our text tells us the reason. "It is set on fire of hell;" and we know who is lord there.

But if our lips and our tongue love to speak to God in prayer, and to ask for his protection and blessing, then we may know that Jesus is our Lord, and that we are seeking to serve Him.

It is good for us to remember the words of our text: "Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!" In the chapter from which the text is taken, the tongue is compared to a bit in a horse's mouth, to the rudder of a ship, and to a spark. When the horse takes the bit between his teeth, he rushes headlong to destruction; when the rudder breaks, the ship may be lost; and the tiniest spark may set a city in flames. I have heard of a great mansion being destroyed by a spark. It fell on a sheet of blotting-paper in the library, as the owner of the house was sealing a letter, just before going to bed. The blotting-paper smouldered, and the desk caught light, and by-and-by the alarm ran through the neighbourhood—"Fire! fire!" as the flames leaped from the windows, and the inmates were with difficulty rescued from a terrible death.

So you see how great a matter a little fire kindleth. And words are sparks. They fall from our lips unheeded, but they may smoulder and spread, and do deadly damage where we least expect it. Our only safety is in God. May we all send up the beautiful prayer of David in the nineteenth Psalm: "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer!"—Sunday at Home.

ANOTHER GOOD EXAMPLE.

IT was most delightful to hear of the St. Helier "School Girls' Bazaar;" and I am sure your young readers will be pleased when I tell them of a similar effort in the far North.

Some months ago, a few girls in Inverness, of ages from ten to seventeen, resolved that they, too, would make their Christmas vacation doubly enjoyable by working for the little ones of the Dublin "Birds' Nest," and of our own Highland Orphanage. Accordingly, a "Children's Bazaar" was planned; and the arrangements were carried out in thorough business-style. At noon on the day before Christmas the interesting "Bazaar" was opened, and realised the unexpectedly handsome sum of £72!

It gives me pleasure to add that the five leading young stall-holders—Aby, Agnes, Jeanie, Mary, and Edith—are earnest members of the Scripture Union; and I know how very happy it made them to do this little service for the Friend of whom they read together daily.

Now, boys and girls, will you not merely admire, but will you really try to follow the beautiful example of St. Helier and of Inverness? Perhaps you cannot get up a "Bazaar;" but there is not one of you who cannot do something if only you are willing in a quiet, humble way for others, and thus do something for the Lord Jesus who has done all for you.

I once asked a little girl: "Why, darling, are you always so eager to do something for papa?—to have his cosy slippers warming in the fender when you know he is coming home, and his special little favourites, the freshly-gathered snowdrops, just ready for his button-hole?" The sweet face flushed, the black eyes sparkled, and in a very second came the answer: "Because I love him so!" And if you truly love the Lord, it will not be a hard task—on the contrary, it will be quite the natural thing for you—to show that love constantly by glad, unbidden service.

"There's a work for little children
  Which their tender hands may do,
A love that their hearts can render,
  A service bright and true;
There are souls to win for Jesus,
  By their Christ-like words and ways,
And He smiles upon every effort
  To tell out all his praise."

CHURCH ARMY.—Two officers will leave England in February for Australia. Prolonged Church Army Missions have just been begun at Wallingford and Cambridge, and others will shortly commence at Keighley and Newcastle.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION, MALDEN HALL.

THE twelfth anniversary of this branch was held on January 14, afternoon and evening. There were, as usual, large attendances, and the anticipations of spiritual blessing were abundantly realised, much of the time being devoted to praise and prayer.

Mr. J. Denham Smith's address will be found in Footsteps of Truth for February. Mr. Russell Hurditch said that, as men are yielding up the old foundation truths of the Gospel, a necessity arises for going over the ground trodden years ago, in the strength, courage, and grace of God. Mr. W. R. Lane said three classes are easily turned away from the truth—simple ones (Rom. xvi. 18), those of stunted growth (Eph. iv. 14); and unstable souls. Mr. J. G. McVicker said, security against the evils pointed out is found in 1 John ii. 18—24.

After an interval for tea, Mr. Swan gave an account of the Lord's leadings, resulting in his purpose to go to the help of Mr. Arnott, who is doing so noble a work in the interior of Africa. Mr. Scholes, a native of the West Indies, who is preaching at Kilburn Hall this month (January), contrasted the hostility of the heathen fifty years ago with the open doors and open hearts of today. The story of Livingstone decided the speaker to give his life to the work on the Congo. This address led to prayer on behalf of Bishop Hannington. Mr. F. Twinch quoted Bishop Selwin's saying—"If you want blessing at home, have sympathy with the heathen abroad." The speaker had personal reasons for sympathy with foreign work; and Malden Hall is certainly a scene of continuous blessing. Mr. Wm. Allwright, a platelayer, gave an earnest and a vigorous account of his conversion at Malden Hall, under the preaching of the three gipsies, some years ago. Mr. Edward Hurditch spoke of stones of remembrance—of defeat and sorrow, personally and in the Church; but, beyond and above this, the stone of Ebenezer and renewed covenant. Mr. J. G. McVicker showed that in Acts xxvii. 25, Paul knew God had spoken to him, what He had said, and believed Him. A man brightened by a word from God is able to encourage others; and they who keep God's company take "good cheer" with them. Dr. Popham rejoiced that the marks of Christ's coming surround us. Mr. R. Paton said a higher conception of the living God, and the right use of his Word, will leave less difficulty in Gospel labourers going to the ends of the earth. After an appeal to unconverted ones who might be present, Mr. Hucklesby closed the meeting in prayer.

On the following night, a free tea was given to 350 unemployed working men and their wives, together with a loaf of bread for the morrow. Others came in and filled up the Hall for a Gospel service afterwards. Several appeared deeply impressed, and some are believed to have been led to the Saviour.

LIVINGSTONIA MISSION.—At a largely attended missionary meeting in Glasgow, presided over by Mr. J. Campbell White, and at which Prof. Drummond and Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Edinburgh, were among the speakers, it was resolved to support the appeal for £20,000 now made for the maintenance and extension of the Livingstonia Mission during the next five years.

PRIZE ESSAYS ON THE SUNDAY QUESTION.—The prizes for essays on various aspects of the Sunday question, offered by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, have been awarded as follows: £25, What does God's Word teach about the Sabbath?—J. W. Stanford, blacksmith, Minster, Sheerness; £20, The Sabbath: its Moral, Social, and Physical Advantages—W. Neal, compositor, Farnham; £10, The Closing of Public-houses on the Lord's Day—G. H. Millward, drapers' assistant, Abergele; £10, Objections to Opening Museums on Sundays—F. Spicer, compositor, Old Ford; £10, Arguments for Opening Museums on Sundays, carefully considered and answered—F. Spicer, compositor, Old Ford; £10, Sunday Traffic on Railways—R. Yuell, station-master, Kirriemuir; £10, Sunday Postal Work—E. Goodall, bootmaker, Ryde. There were 220 competitors. The essays will be published in a few months.

THE NEW ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE END.

By Mr. HENRY VARLEY.

OUR fellow-worker, Mr. F. N. Charrington, is well known. I need say nothing to your readers concerning his consecrated life and character. The work under his care has grown in every direction, and, through the blessing of God, has taken a deep hold of the sympathies and attention of the people. I desire to influence many Christian friends to visit Whitechapel-road in order that they may see for themselves something of the magnitude of this work. For the sake of those who cannot possibly do this, I would give a brief account of the new and magnificent building which is nearly completed, and which is about to be opened.

Situated in the Whitechapel-road, somewhat beyond the London Hospital, on the opposite side, stands what is appropriately called The Great Assembly Hall. The frontage is very wide, and comprehends on its surface a most substantial and lofty superstructure. On the ground floor we find a first-class, comfortably fitted coffee tavern, with spacious bars, where hundreds of the people resort for the substantial and genuine refreshments dispensed from morning to night. Ascending to the first floor, you come upon the office where a batch of clerks are at work in the necessary department of figures and detail. Here are also club-rooms, Bible-class centres, library, young men's classes, inquiry rooms, &c.; in short, everything which is comprehended in a large centre of Christian work.

In the centre of the handsome frontage is the main entrance to the new hall, the capacity of which will be understood when I state that it is within a few feet as large as Mr. Spurgeon's Metropolitan Tabernacle. Like that capacious building, the Assembly Hall has two galleries that run round the building, supported by ornamental iron columns. The building is a model of architectural proportion, combining great stability with the cheerful attractiveness in which the common people delight. The seats, which number nearly 5000, are very comfortable and all within sight of the preacher. The platform is on a line with the first gallery. There is a capacious organ gallery, adapted for the choir, and a richly-toned and powerful organ. The seats on the floor are movable, so that it can be turned, when occasion requires, into one large area for the mass tea-meetings which are held. In my judgment the lighting is admirable.

Every facility exists for after meetings; inquiry-rooms abound, whilst without, at the side, another hall is found, capable of holding from 600 to 700 persons.

My heart was glad when I saw this vast educational institution, this new proof of the great heart of Christ caring for the poor, this splendid argument against infidelity and ungodliness, this workshop in which human material is to be gathered and fashioned for industry, sobriety, and godliness in this world, and for glory, honour, and immortality in the world to come.

It ought to be known, however, that this great enterprise is sorely pressing the resources of Mr. Charrington. With unselfish devotion of his personal substance, he has largely borne the burden, which, I venture to think, the stewards of substance in the Church of God should deem it a privilege to share with him. No less than £30,000 has been expended in this noble work. About £10,000 is yet needed to free the toiling hands of our brother and his devoted coadjutors. Are there not some who will read these words who should help?—some to whom the Lord is saying, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

The opening of the new hall takes place, I believe, on Thursday, February 4, when many well-known brethren will gather together to celebrate the event. Mr. F. N. Charrington's address is 31, Mile End-road, London, E.

GOSPEL WORK IN GERMANY.

FROM Sunday, October 19, until Tuesday, December 1, Mr. Schrenk, the evangelist, held a course of meetings at Frankfort. During this second visit to Frankfort he spoke every evening to immense audiences, and, excepting Sundays and four or five week-days, held meetings of believers each morning, besides Bible-readings and prayer-meetings—speaking in all about eighty-three times. His power and freshness were undiminished to the end, and the attention and interest of the audiences steadily increased.

His style is very simple, and there is a total absence of rhetorical ornament about it, but he has an unceasing flow of language, and great aptness of expression, and makes frequent use of anecdote and illustration. There were no after-meetings, but, at the end of each Gospel address, the anxious and inquiring were invited by Mr. Schrenk to see him during the day at his lodgings. Many availed themselves of the opportunity. The evening meetings were held for the first ten days in a large dancing saloon; for another ten days in the circus, which holds about 2000 people; then, for ten days, in another dancing saloon at Bockenheim, a very poor suburb, inhabited chiefly by workmen and their families. For the last week they were held in the largest Protestant church in Frankfort. This does not include Sundays, on all six of which Mr. Schrenk preached in the evening at the Christus Kirche, the pastor of which, Mr. Benemann, was throughout a warm friend of the mission.

The last two evenings at each hall were devoted respectively to meetings for women and girls, and for men. The principal object of these was to help those who wished to lead a new life, by bringing them into contact with other Christians. Mr. Schrenk succeeded in swelling considerably the numbers of several Young Men's Christian Unions already in existence, and in forming a Young Women's Christian Union, which now reckons about eighty members. A number of married men also meet once a week for Bible-reading and prayer, under the direction of a pastor. The size of the audiences at each hall increased rapidly from night to night, and in each district a different class of people was reached.

Mr. Schrenk seemed to feel most of all in his element at the circus, which is in a low part of the town, and where the audience (which included a large proportion of men) looked as if they had not often been inside a place of worship. The order and quiet, however, were perfect, and reverent attention and deep stillness prevailed as soon as the preacher began.

The subject at the morning meetings for believers, which were attended by about 200 people, was "The Indwelling of the Holy Spirit." Mr. Schrenk laid great emphasis on the importance of dethroning all idols in the heart, and thus "preparing it for the Spirit's habitation." All faculties of the mind and each member of the body must be surrendered to the service of our Lord and Master. "How can we be afraid to give ourselves up to Him unconditionally, who is Himself the author of our being, physically and spiritually?" At these morning meetings many were greatly helped. At the close prayer was made, generally by several of those present, for blessing on the evening meetings and on the work in general.

Mr. Schrenk has now returned to Berne, but will soon, it is hoped, visit Germany again to evangelise in other cities. Those who know Frankfort will realise, with thankfulness to God, what a beneficial change in methods as well as matter, has thus been introduced into the work of God there, and will be stirred up to pray for deep and extending blessing on these efforts.

RESCUE WORK IN BRIXTON.—Mrs. Harrier, 6, Pope's-road, Brixton, S.W., writes to us:—I have put twelve girls into service, boarded out four children, have got three here at present, and six girls. I think, if I am able to get help to tide me over present difficulties, the work eventually will be self-supporting.

LIBERIA, WEST AFRICA.

THE following extracts from a letter of Miss Sharp, an American missionary, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, recently received by a friend in Manchester, will interest our readers, as showing the spread of Christianity in that part of the Dark Continent:—

"Since I last wrote to you I took a bright boy of eight or nine—they never keep an account of ages or anything else; he did not know one word of English, nor did he ever hear of God. A very bright boy belonging to my Mission Home took him in hand, and taught him of God and the Saviour. On the third day the little fellow began to do his own praying—his first prayer translated reads thus: 'God, if you will take all the bad out of my heart, every bit, and drop it down one deep, deep hole in the big water (i.e. the ocean), when I get big I will build you a church house, you hear him now, all right.' His 'all right' meant Amen. The avidity with which the children grasp and take in religious truths is truly encouraging to those who labour among them.

"Death has stood sentinel so long on these shores, and white missionaries have lived so short a time, the work consequently has been slow. Every advance has been over the graves of the fallen missionaries. To missionaries this has been pre-eminently a death-doomed shore. On we go, nevertheless, at the Master's great command, and count it joy that He counts us worthy to bear his message to Africa's benighted sons and daughters. 'Africa for Christ' we have inscribed on our banners.

"Will you kindly endeavour to procure some good coloured pictorial Gospel tracts, periodicals, and books in the English language?" Parcels of tracts, books, &c., carriage or post paid, should be addressed to Miss Sharp, Missionary, Monrovia, Liberia, West Coast of Africa.

RELIGION IN PERSIA.

A LECTURE was given on Monday week, at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., by Colonel C. E. Stewart, on "Some Recent Developments of Religious Fervour in Persia, and the Rise of a New Religion in that Country." Lieut.-General Haig, who presided, said few were aware that there are no less than one million square miles in Persia inhabited by heathen and Mohammedans, with only a very few Christian teachers. The religion is Mohammedanism, the ruling power despotic, and apostacy is punishable with death. Persia has been sadly neglected by the Christian Church, but it is now more than ever open to the religion of Jesus Christ.

Colonel Stewart said he had travelled a great deal about the country in the disguise of an Oriental, and had more than once been in peril of his life. The combined populations of Armenians and Nestorians amount to about 200,000. A Christian, sad to say, is generally looked upon in Persia as a wineseller. The education of the women is absolutely necessary to the progress of religion. There is a great work to do to prevent Armenians from turning to Mohammedanism. In 1852 a so-called prophet arose, who preached against Mohammedanism, declaring he had a mission from God. His name was El Bab (i.e., The Door). He chose eighteen disciples, and himself made nineteen, the mystic Persian number. In six years his followers numbered 150,000. The Shah and his Government tried to get rid of him, and, after many unsuccessful attempts, at last succeeded. Many of his followers were in like manner cruelly put to death. He was succeeded by El Baba, who continued the crusade against the Mohammedan religion.

By way of application, the lecturer asked if Christians were prepared to suffer for their Leader like those who died in defence of El Bab? He greatly desired to stir up a deeper interest in Persian missions; and exhorted all present to look for answers to their prayers. He himself had some most remarkable experiences of God's faithfulness. Dr. Bruce, of the Church Missionary Society, is doing a wonderful work at Julfa among the Babis, now that both leaders are dead; the people are at the present time just in the frame of mind to accept Christian teaching.

Notes and Comments.

WE are requested to state that the meetings, announced in our last issue to be conducted in Exeter Hall, by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, will be open to ladies. (See list of Forthcoming Meetings.)

The first week in February has been set apart by the London City Mission for earnest prayer on behalf of London, and for enlarged success in every department of the mission work. Every evening the missionaries, 460 in number, will assemble at the Mission House, New Bridge-street, E.C., to wait upon God, and to seek "the fulness of the blessing" on themselves and their work. All friends of the Mission are earnestly asked to intercede with God on behalf of these servants of Christ during the coming week.

In nothing is the Christian Church of this period more indebted to the Providence of the Spirit than for the fulness of light which is now being poured over the age that witnessed the dawn of Christianity. The advantage can hardly be estimated. Among other recent works is one by Professor Schmidt, of Strasburg, which has been made accessible to English readers. (Isbister & Co.) Unspeakably terrible is the well-supported picture it presents of the utter heartlessness, pride, vengeance, and family foulness of even the highest Roman society. "The Social Results of Christianity," which is the title of the book, are shown to be the introduction of charity, unselfishness, humility, kindness, and purity.

The evidence, now so fully brought out, of vast ameliorations in Roman society through the influence of the first Christians, has its weighty lessons. Roman believers, according to Paul's letter to them, did understand that, buried with Christ through baptism unto death, they were called to walk in newness of life. Surely the Spirit is teaching us that a real spiritual vitality should not in these days be without its power upon the world's life, as it clearly proved its divine and constraining power at the beginning.

At a new period of work for the Master, and when the cry of believing ones is so urgent for the reality of pulpit earnestness, many preachers will be glad to be reminded of a sentence from the "Remains" of Richard Cecil, once minister of St. John's Chapel, Bedford-row:—

> Faith is the master-spring of a minister. Hell is before me, and thousands of souls shut up there —Jesus Christ stands forth to save men from rushing into this bottomless abyss—He sends me to proclaim his ability and love: I want no fourth idea! Every fourth idea is contemptible! Every fourth idea is a grand impertinence.

A Welshman forcibly contends in The Spectator that in a recent work on "Great Welsh Preachers," by a popular writer, the explanation which attributes their success to the language, emotion, imagination, and superstition of the people, is altogether inadequate. Their power, he pleads, was owing to their deep convictions as to the truth of the Gospel, to their nearness to God in prayer, and to the enduement of the Holy Ghost. The Spectator sets this plea aside by the remark that the great Welsh preachers were not peculiar in these spiritual qualifications. It may, however, be maintained that in every land, and every age, the successful preachers have been those who, in the Welshman's language, have been "richly adorned for the pulpit by the Spirit of Christ."

The Contemporary Review contains a calmly written article by Mr. F. Peek, on the Salvation Army. A society, which in a few years has turned half a million of people from being the enemies of religion, to become its friends; and from national indulgencies, to be people of self-denial; and which has in so remarkable a manner brought, through Christ's salvation, a new life to the hopeless, ought, it is pleaded, to receive not a carping but a careful consideration.

This, one thinks, must strike candid persons: efforts to reach the people by comic songs and readings, frequently under the auspices of ministers of religion, and often on the very eve of the holy services of the House of God, receive commendation; whereas those who never after this manner come down to the people, but by their music and hymns always try to raise them to a higher level, receive from the same persons only condemnation. Mr. Peek contends that the Salvationists have incarnated the unselfishness of real Christianity. In so far as they or any other people do this, they offer a timely example of vital religion.

A little while ago a curate in the East-end of London told us that for some time after he entered on his duties in Whitechapel he was quite unable to take dinner after he had been going about from room to room all day, and finding almost everywhere pinching want and a deadly struggle against starvation. With the memory of the wan and emaciated faces of men, women, and children haunting him, to take good food and to sit by a cosy fire seemed almost sinful, after the little he had done to alleviate the want and sorrow round about him.

Under the influence of a somewhat similar sensibility, John Ruskin has stated that "luxury at present can only be enjoyed by the ignorant; the cruellest man living could not sit at his feast unless he sat blindfold." The ignorant and the blindfold are, however, very numerous in these days, and many of them object strenuously to enlightenment. Day by day the newspapers contain reports of inquests upon persons who, surrounded by almost unbounded wealth, have died of starvation; yet in our midst there is a waste which in the sight of God must be criminal.

The City Press has stated that the expenses incidental to the last Lord Mayor's Day in London amounted to nearly £5000, of which sum £2000 was expended upon the banquet at the Guildhall. It may reasonably be asked if the money could not have been put to a better use, seeing that on every hand there are hundreds of deserving families in want of the barest sustenance. Week by week we have to record the dreadful fact that men, women, and children are tramping across London in the hope of getting a cup of coffee and a bit of bread, "morsels of humanity," many of the little ones, such as our artist pictured in the pathetic sketch in our issue of January 14. What banquets might be given, with fewer delicacies of the season, if the civic authorities, not only in the Metropolis, but in our provincial cities and towns, even for once only, resolved to follow the command of Christ, to "call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind;" and what a blessing would follow the feast!

A pastor who has had much experience among the industrious poor, and who has much of the spirit of his Divine Master, has suggested that many ladies, instead of simply "ordering" a bonnet or a dress, "not caring about the maker, who she is, or how hard she works, or how little she is paid," might make it at home with the assistance of an expert sempstress. The employer's kind heart might be safely trusted to take care of the workwoman's meals, and hours of labour, and renumeration. He adds, "Who would be the worse for the friendly intercourse?"

If our Christian women would return to this practice, for it was not uncommon twenty years ago, we should hear less of starvation wages, and there would be fewer lost ones in our midnight streets. A little trouble and a little additional outlay would be involved, but much good would be done to those who frequently hunger, not only for bread, but for a little sympathy and a few kind words.

In a recent number of The Methodist Recorder, Rev. Edward Smith has, in a powerful article, insisted upon it that there is but one way of reaching the artisan class in our large towns—"Soul to soul, life to life," or, as the writer designates it, "hearthstone work." To send "transformed artisans as unpaid missionaries among the saddest, and vilest, and lowest," means personal sympathetic contact with these unfortunate beings, and such effort undoubtedly would be blessed by the Master who stretched out the Divine hand and touched those whom He healed.

For some time back the police in Dublin have shown a praiseworthy zeal in the endeavour to protect the residents in tenement houses against the intrusion of improper characters. Recent murder trials show that a grave element of danger to the morals of children of both sexes is to be found in the occupancy of portions of houses by vile characters. In many cases the police authorities communicated with the owners of property, in order to have objectionable persons removed from tenement houses chiefly occupied by the industrious poor, and very good results followed. Since the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act the efforts have been greatly increased, and several localities have been completely cleared. That much can be done in support of good morals, when the authorities desire to protect the virtuous and well-conducted, has been clearly shown: it is no slight thing that many young women have, by the wise action in Dublin, been saved from that enforced contact with the vicious and depraved, which, in some districts, seemed to be almost inseparable from the tenement system.

In 1883, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Hart paid a visit to Ireland, and found among the peasants of Donegal, what, alas! is never absent, much poverty. They found, however, what was better, much willingness to work, and, as the women showed great ability in knitting and embroidery, Mrs. Hart gave orders for work in the hope of finding a market for it in London. In this hope the kind lady was not disappointed, and the demand to-day for the Donegal hand-knit hosiery enables her to employ quite a large number of the peasantry. From September, 1884, nearly £1000 have been paid to the workers, and there has been a consequent improvement in the condition of the people.

At 43, Wigmore-street, London, samples of all kinds of knitted, woven, and embroidery work done by the industrious peasants, are on view, and may be purchased. Some of the work is very beautiful, and purchasers may have the satisfaction of knowing that they are helping to develop cottage industries and to alleviate the hard lot of the industrious poor in a wild district of Ireland but seldom visited by anyone so practically kind as Mrs. Hart has shown herself to be.

The Countess of Dufferin is turning to admirable account the influence secured by her position as wife of the Viceroy of India. She is endeavouring to raise a fund for the institution of a school of medicine for women in India. A correspondent of The Pioneer, a leading Indian paper, in advocating this fund, cites many sorrowful facts, especially as to the sufferings of youthful wives in India from the lack of native medical skill. In furthering this noble project Lady Dufferin is proving a benefactress to the great nation over which her husband rules, and we wish it the most complete success.

An English lady, who recently went to China as a worker in connection with the Inland Mission, says, in a letter to some friends in the old country :—

> I am so glad I came to China, if only for the blessing it has been to my own soul. There is no half-and-half Christian life in China. The devil reigns, and unless we keep close to Christ we grow like the people around us.

This is an argument on behalf of foreign missions that perhaps does not always enter into the calculations of those who think of devoting themselves to such work ; but it is one that deserves to have its full weight.

The lady who superintends the Y.W.C. Institute at Coleridge-road, Seven Sisters'-road, N., writes :—

> When I hear objections to the offering of the same petition again and again, I think I should like to publish world-wide how my dear father, from the time he received such a blessing at Stafford Rooms, night and morning, at family prayer, repeated each of our names and said, "We seek not for our children the riches and honours of this world, but that Thou wouldst make them useful in their day and generation." The same words were always used, and now we are scattered to the ends of the earth, and our father has to thank God that all his children are being used to the salvation of souls. Surely we have to be thankful for a father who is a priest in the home.

The last remark is in allusion to an address in Finsbury-park Hall, on Leviticus iv. 1—12, in which the responsibility of the priest was dwelt upon, and it was shown that, as in patriarchal times, the head of every household stands, like Job, in the relation of a priest to his family, servants and employés.

An Irish correspondent, writing with respect to the recent agitation produced by Mr. Stead's "revelations," says :—

> The tone of the Protestant Dublin paper, The Express, was absolutely intolerable ; strange to say, the Roman Catholic Nationalist journal took the right side, and even spoke in praise of Miss Hopkins' visit and addresses, which The Express decried. So much for the tone of public opinion in Dublin.

Mr. Spurgeon's health is now so far re-established that he hopes to return to London in time to conduct the services in the Metropolitan Tabernacle next Sabbath.

We would call attention to the charming little incident told in the letter headed "A Prayer of Faith." The definiteness of the parents' prayer, that they might be shown "how soon and how much" they were to teach their young children of things divine; their wisdom in deciding to give them only what they could apprehend, so that their religion might always be real to them ; and the beautiful results following this prayer and effort, strike us as points of great interest. What a relief would come to many an anxious parent if they would only learn to trust God simply, to be taught as to the how, the when, and the what of their children's education! What a relief, too, would come to many children, if parents were always on their guard against "religious cramming," being chiefly concerned that the children's religion should first of all be real.

We venture to remark, further, on the great benefit of public testimony to God's faithfulness. The faith of hundreds will probably be strengthened by this homely little tale. Are there not many of our readers who have similar experiences to tell? We are aware that most of our best experiences of the Father's faithful care cannot be told. They are too secret and sacred ; or they cannot be properly set forth to outsiders ; or they would be told, as such experiences often are, alas! to the great moral injury of someone concerned. For instance, if little Magdalen, of the story before us, were old enough to read THE CHRISTIAN, or if her friends were to be so cruelly unwise as to talk of her faith to others in her presence, the influence on the child's character would be simply terrible. Still, there are many glorious deeds of Providence that might and should be published.

The Divine responsiveness to human confidence : What a refreshing subject of thought!—that there is a God Who cannot fail to respond to the confidence of men! We find that men respond to the trust reposed in them, in proportion to their nobleness of character. The higher the character the more sensitive the man to the touch of confidence. This helps us a little to understand our heavenly Father's marvellous sensitiveness to the appeal of faith, and the amazing generosity of his response.

The Divine joy in human confidence : a still more refreshing idea. We love to be trusted. How near it brings God to us to know that He also loves to be trusted! With us such joy is a measure of greatness, for great souls long most for great trust, and have most delight in it when found. What, then, must be his joy when we lean all our weight on his proved faithfulness and perfect compassion! It is, indeed, wonderful to think that we may utilise every care and vexation that annoys us,—that by entrusting them all to our heavenly Father, simply and definitely, we may minister gladness to Him, while we draw down upon ourselves that generous response which never fails to bless the trustful.

As already announced, the united Conference on Foreign Missions, Melbourne-hall, Leicester, will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday, February 2 and 3. The following workers have promised to be present: Rev. James Smith (late of Delhi), Mr. H. Soltau (Burmah), Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Mr. Jas. A. Adler (Mildmay missionary to the Jews), Mr. J. Cecil Hoyle (Spain), Mr. E. H. Glenny (Kabyle Mission), Mr. Robert Burn (Y.M.C.A), Mr. J. W. McGill (Manchester), Miss Annie McPherson, Mr. B. Broomhall, Mrs. Hudson Taylor, Mr. T. W. Pigott and Mrs. Pigott, and an outgoing party of missionaries in connection with the China Inland Mission. The meetings will be held each day, morning, afternoon, and evening. Further particulars or programmes will be forwarded on application to Pastor Wm. T. Float, Foxton, Market Harboro'. Friends from a distance needing accommodation are requested to write to Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., Leicester.

We trust our readers will not overlook the sadly interesting and touching communication on another page, from the Director of the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen. How seldom we ponder over the fact that "the price of fish" is too often "lives o' men," as the Scotch ballad puts it. That is truer than ever in these stormy days. Let us not be guilty of the black ingratitude of enjoying the fruits of their perilous toil, while we take no heed of the dangers of the deep to which these brave fellows are exposed, and do nothing to counteract or alleviate them.

In consequence of ill-health, Rev. W. R. Nicoll, editor of The Expositor, has resigned his pastoral charge of the Free Church, Kelso, N.B. At the Presbytery meeting, at which the resignation was tendered, there were many expressions of deep regret, from members of Mr. Nicoll's congregation, and from fellow presbyters, at the cause of his removal and the loss they would sustain. We hope Mr. Nicoll's sojourn in the south of Devon, whither he has removed, may restore his health, and enable him to continue, with comfort, his valued labours in connection with The Expositor.

Mrs. Reaney, of Stepney, continues her noble and disinterested efforts for the amelioration of the hard lot of our London tramcar employés. As a rule, those engaged on the North Metropolitan lines have to bear the strain of sixteen hours continuous work per day—on Sundays as well as Saturdays—for a small wage ; and this with the Company earning a yearly dividend of nine per cent. Such a state of slavery is a simple disgrace to any public organisation, and it ought not to be continued. We trust the humane shareholders of the Company will make a point of attending the half-yearly meeting at Cannon-street Hotel next Wednesday, February 3, at twelve noon, to support Mrs. Reaney's efforts on behalf of these oppressed men. Every traveller by tram should carefully study the pamphlet she has just issued, "The Story of our Tramcar Men ;" she will forward copies, sixpence each post-free, from her address, Stepney House, 73, East India-road, E.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY. — The last Report gives full details of the work. All the meetings at the hall have been largely attended. Evangelistic services have been quite equal to previous years, the open-air work has been continued with increasing interest, a considerable number of Temperance pledges have been taken, and the Saturday improvement meetings greatly increased in the regular attendance. Tract circulation has done much good ; in one case a whole family was converted. An additional hall has been taken in Islington, to which anxious souls are directed for conversation ; and a batch of lodging-houses has been put on the visitation list in the South of London. Mr. J. Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, N., is the respected secretary.

WELCOME TO MR. STEAD.

If the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette was ever tempted to fear, during his sojourn in durance vile, that he had forfeited the esteem and sympathetic regard of the Christian community, he must have been speedily undeceived by the sight that presented itself as he stepped on the platform of Exeter Hall, on the evening of Monday week. Such a reception is seldom accorded in that building to anyone—much less to one who has just served a term of imprisonment in one of Her Majesty's gaols. The hall was crowded a full hour before the proceedings began; how many hundreds or thousands failed to get beyond the street entrance, we cannot say. There were not a few absent in body who were present in spirit, as the telegrams and letters read by Mr. Coote amply showed. The gathering was remarkable, as well for its composition as for its numbers. When Mrs. Stead, leading a little son in each hand, passed to her seat on the platform, the applause was deafening; the climax of demonstrative enthusiasm was reached when Mr. Stead and his young daughter marched along in rear of Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., who assumed the chair.

Prayer having been offered by Dr. Stephenson, The Chairman said they were met to welcome, on his release from imprisonment, one of the most fearless and devoted men it had ever been his lot to know. To such a man, the only welcome they could give, the only tribute they could pay, was to determine to prosecute his work. Mr. Stead had not exaggerated the vices and the crimes which honeycomb the very substance of our social life. These vices, with their consequential crimes, we must continue to drag into the light of day. To conceal, to ignore, to pretend to deny them is itself a crime—the basest, perhaps, of all crimes. There must be no truce with evil or with evildoers. Every Christian man and woman is bound to take sides in this controversy; and henceforth those who are not with us we will hold to be against us. He expressed the strongest and the most absolute conviction, that, but for the exposures in The Pall Mall Gazette the Criminal Law Amendment Act would not now be the law of the land. Mr. Stead's friends have not been idle during the period of his incarceration. The land is being covered with associations, having a common centre in London, whose object is to track, to discover, to punish, to repress crime, to protect minors and women, and to discourage vice. What Mr. Stead has done he has done from a sense of duty, and at enormous cost. There is another work to do—a Parliamentary work. Law and Government should be on the side of virtue, and not on the side of vice. The Contagious Diseases Acts were suspended by virtue of a resolution carried in the House of Commons in the last Parliament, but they still remain on the statute-book, a disgrace as well as a menace and a danger to the freedom and virtue of this country. They must be repealed. There are even higher objects still than those named. We have to create a loftier ideal of virtue throughout the land—to form a pure, an elevated, a courageous public opinion, and to train it to speak and to act. The churches are now being aroused, and we are nearing a termination of an ignoble state of things. Above all, we must herald the one true and equal law of social purity for women and for men. It is only when the supremacy of the moral law shall have been acknowledged in legislation, in Government, in social, and in individual life, that our work will be accomplished.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes moved: "That this meeting heartily welcomes Mr. William Thomas Stead from his prison to the enjoyment of his liberty again, accords to him its increased confidence and warmest gratitude, and pledges itself to the furtherance of the great national work which he has done so much to promote." In the course of a thorough-going and greatly applauded speech, Mr. Hughes said they were there to justify by their presence, by their words, and by their applause, that in their judgment the Government and their legal accomplices had utterly failed to fix any stain of crime upon this honoured Englishman. Exeter Hall has never had any sympathy with evil; it has always been on the side of truth, and of purity, and of justice; and the man who is triumphantly acquitted by Exeter Hall need not fear the verdict of posterity. The most eminent servants of God and of humanity have at some time or other been sent to prison, and Mr. Stead has now that great honour, over which Christ Himself bids his servants rejoice and be exceeding glad. The speaker said everyone in the meeting who had not yet read Mrs. Butler's book on Rebecca Jarrett* should read it without delay; it is the best book that has yet been produced in the course of this controversy. It exposes the facts, and explains them, as no other book; and it put Rebecca Jarrett's conduct in a light in which no newspaper has been able to put it. Another name he felt bound to mention was that of Dr. Heywood Smith who had been the victim of one of the most infamous persecutions ever attempted by a trades union or by anti-Christian society. Mr. Hughes asked the meeting to support the proposal made, for the establishment of a Home under Dr. Smith's control, where the best surgical and medical assistance might be obtained by ladies who did not possess sufficient means to secure first-class treatment at their own houses, and yet, from their social position, were unable to avail themselves of ordinary hospitals. No greater boon could be conferred upon a suffering class. No question, continued the speaker, has so deeply stirred the heart of the nation since the time of the Indian mutiny as the movement championed by Mr. Stead. It cannot be stopped by prosecutions and imprisonments. It has illustrated the enormous power of the press. A supreme need to-day is a new London morning newspaper inspired with the enthusiasm of humanity that would protect every weak or fallen sister, and would follow Jesus Christ to any length in the pathway of justice, purity and philanthropy. Another important thing to be accomplished, said Mr. Hughes, is the moral purification of the Legislature. No man who is content to sacrifice the daughters of the poor to the lusts of his own sex is fit to help in making the laws of England. The tone and standard of public opinion must be raised till it becomes impossible for an immoral man to fill any public position, from the village policeman to the occupant of the throne. Having strongly commended the perusal of the book "Hidden Depths" (referred to in our Book notices), Mr. Hughes concluded his stirring speech by appealing to the people not to rest till the honour of every poor girl in England was as sacredly guarded as the honour of the daughters of our Queen, and till the laws and customs of this country were animated by the pity, the purity, and the tenderness of God.

Thereafter followed short addresses by Mr. Costelloe, Mr. C. B. MacLaren, M.P., Rev. B. Waugh, Mrs. Fenwick Miller, and Mrs. Ormiston Chant. The two ladies, as representing many thousands of their English sisters, warmly thanked Mr. Stead for his noble services on behalf of their sex; the latter presented to the hero of the evening a handsomely framed illuminated address and a purse, to the contents of which over 27,000 women in all stations of life had contributed one penny each. A Teacher's Bible was also handed to Mr. Stead on behalf of the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A.

When Mr. Stead rose to speak, the great audience rose with him en masse and gave him a right royal reception. The cheering and waving of hats and handkerchiefs were again and again renewed, and it was with no small difficulty that quietude was at length restored. Then a solemn hush and stillness fell upon the vast assembly as Mr. Stead said, "Let us pray," and in these simple, fitting words, gave expression to his heart's desire: "O God, our Father, Thou who hast brought us unto this hour, give us strength, and grace, and wisdom. Thou hast been pleased to exalt us by suffering, and to humiliate us by praise. If there be any here who are making an idol of me, and thinking of me, instead of the work which Thou didst raise me up to tell and to do, oh! break the idol in pieces; and help me to speak as Thou wouldst have me speak. For Christ's sake. Amen."

For over an hour and a quarter Mr. Stead held his place at the platform rail, and riveted the rapt attention of his hearers. We regret that the demands on our space only permit of portions of his memorable speech being given. He began by picturing Rebecca Jarrett in her lonely cell at Millbank. The thought that she was there while he was at liberty, being cheered and praised, made his heart heavy, and sore, and sad. "I feel once more bowed down by a sense of that great social iniquity, and that crowning injustice of the world, which, when two have sinned, visits upon the weak the worst penalty; and when a man and a woman are both concerned, puts its foot on the woman and lets the man go free. I felt, in prison, more happy than I feel here to-night. I am grateful to you; but, when you remember me, do not forget, rather remember, with far more kindness and far more sympathy, that poor ruined, blasted, blighted woman, who, in the moment when she thought to atone for a life of vice and crime, was seized by the hand of law and thrust into a felon's cell." Notwithstanding the reproof of some good people, I still rejoice, continued Mr. Stead, in being the humble instrument of doing good. There is still going abroad a sharp two-edged sword, smiting the evil-doers—going hither and thither, shielding the weak, protecting the helpless, doing good to those for whom many engaged in this movement would have gladly died. We have great reason to be thankful to those who set on foot the prosecution which led to my going to gaol. Nothing has helped the cause better than that prosecution and that imprisonment. Those who, after long consultation and great deliberation, thought they could lay their hand on "this pestilent fellow" sadly overreached themselves. From one end of the world to the other—wherever English-speaking men and women meet together—nothing has caused more keen, vigorous, sustained, and intelligent discussion than the trial, which some friends seem to regret. In the "Maiden Tribute" there was nothing new, from first to last, excepting one fact, and that fact the trial was the means of substantiating to the very hilt. It was no revelation that drunken and degraded parents would sell their children to vice. But what was a revelation was this: In the midst of this crowded city, with its temples and its cathedrals, its law courts and its police, there had lived and flourished, for long years, a woman so monstrous in iniquity as Madame Mourez. I confess that I thought it incredible that any woman could sit down and formally certify the purity of a child in order that that purity should be destroyed. But in the trial it was proved beyond all gainsaying that Madame Mourez existed, and she is now in Millbank.* There is one reason why I regret the prosecution; it has put me on a pedestal I had no ambition to occupy. (A voice: "You will have to stop there.") It has also, to some extent, discredited those whose support it is most necessary to secure, namely, the National Vigilance Association. To all those good men who are so distressed by my "errors of judgment," I would say, "Here is a great evil: here is a great wrong; the work of remedying that great evil, and repressing that great wrong, has, in some inscrutable and mysterious way, been allowed to fall largely into the hands of the individual whose errors of judgment have done much to discredit the cause. Oh! you, who never make errors of judgment, you whose unimpeachable virtue and infallible wisdom never discredited a good cause, why do not you come forth, instead of leaving one like me to take up the part that I have had to play, and that, God help me, I will continue. But all you, good gentlemen, wise journalists, and sage senators—you who see so clearly my errors of judgment, do not know how gladly I will abdicate and get down off my pedestal if only you, with more zeal, more eloquence, and more faith than I possess, will take from my hand the banner if I have failed to carry it on to victory."

* Rebecca Jarrett. Morgan & Scott. 6d. and 1d.

* Since these words were spoken, Madame Mourez had died and gone to her account.

But, in the strange work of Divine providence, even the very errors of man are overruled for good. This morning, when I drove from Holloway Gaol to Northumberland-street, I found there a letter which had come across the world from Tasmania, the writer of which gave me the best greeting that could have fallen upon my ears; he told me that the name and the terror of The Pall Mall Gazette had forced through the Tasmanian Legislature a bill for the protection of young girls. Mr. Benjamin Scot has just informed me that in South Australia, in Victoria, in New South Wales, bills have been introduced, since this agitation, raising the age of protection. There is great need for work in carrying on this movement.

The constituencies should see to it that they return moral men to the House of Commons. We want in the House of Commons men who are in earnest about this matter. At this very moment, under the British flag, there are being carried on those compulsory outrages against which Mr. Stansfeld has constantly protested. It is enough to make one's blood boil to think that England, the mother of liberty, the nursing mother of free nations, has carried all round the world the hateful inoculation of State-regulated vice, and that, wherever a Crown colony has been established, there she has introduced, by the high command of her Imperial power, the examining-surgeon and the Contagious Diseases Acts. If Madame Mourez deserved six months' hard labour, how many years of hard labour do all those doctors deserve who, under the Contagious Diseases Acts, have carried on their infernal researches until the number has reached no fewer than 500,000 in England alone. When, at Holloway, I looked upon my fellow prisoners, I could not help thinking: "If only all men had their deserts, half of you would be going out free, and half of the other fellows, who are held in all the odour of sanctity, blessed by the Royal College of Physicians, and are allowed to go on perpetrating their outrages without end, would have to come into gaol." My three months' sentence will be a very powerful argument for Mr. Stansfeld, who will be able to say: "There is one man who has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for one examination ordered by him. How many months are you prepared to serve if you vote against the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts?"

After touching on various points dealt with in his letter to Mr. Price Hughes, quoted elsewhere, Mr. Stead closed by giving what he called his "New Year's Message." I had leave, he said, from the governor to sit the Old Year out and the New Year in. I was writing, as I always do at that time, the retrospect of the year that has gone.—What has it brought me, what has it taught me, wherewith shall I mend my way? As the hour approached twelve, I was writing the very message which I have just delivered to you—"Be a Christ!" The words stuck in my mind, and I have not been able to get rid of them. As I wrote the words "I have not been—" the solemn hour struck, and in a moment the past year, with all its tragic memories, was folded up as a scroll and passed away into the vast abyss of recorded time. I heard the glad shout of those who hailed the New Year just born. I thought for a moment and then looked back to see what I had written—"Be a Christ;" and "I have not been —" I did not intend to write that, but oh! how true it was. These were the last words I wrote in the Old Year—"Be a Christ"—the message; and "I have not been—," the confession. I thought: In the New Year I will try to bear my cross and live my Christ-life to those whom I know, and to those whom I can reach. But ere the day had gone I received a brief telegram, with its stern, cold fact that one of my earliest friends, the mother of my dear wife, had passed away into the silent land, and I had lost my chance. How many are there here who have friends—those whom you know and love, but to whom you have never given a kindly thought, or spoken a single sympathising word. I ask you to think of the bitter hour—and it may come soon—when those who surround you pass away, and you may stand there feeling: "To me also came the command, 'Be a Christ,' and I have not been."

With these weighty parting words Mr. Stead resumed his seat. Though it was close on eleven o'clock, the meeting was not allowed to break up till hearty thanks had been tendered to the chairman. Then many crowded around and mounted the reporters' table in order to shake hands with one of the noblest and truest men that the century has seen.

In one of its issues last week The Pall Mall Gazette had the following note:—"Nothing during the last few months has better illustrated the solidarity of the British Empire than the magnetic influence which the New Crusade has had all round the world, and the strengthening of the criminal law, in sympathy with the movement at home, in almost every colony and dependency abroad. The echo of the Antipodes was heard some time ago; the last place to take up the cry is nearer home, the Isle of Man, to wit. The Manxmen, we are glad to see, are setting about the protection of their girls in a more thorough fashion even than the House of Commons was compelled to do here. The age without consent for instance, constituting felony, is to be fixed in the Isle of Man at sixteen instead of thirteen; and the age with consent, constituting a misdemeanour, is to be eighteen instead of sixteen. The Isle of Man has very properly followed the mother country in adopting a Criminal Law Amendment Act; the mother country will soon have to follow the Isle of Man in strengthening its Act."

"WHEN THOU MAKEST A FEAST."

THE destitution which appears to be the normal condition of things in the East-end of London seems at present to be very much intensified. When, therefore, a generous Christian gentleman offered to provide a substantial meal to a number of destitute persons if Dr. Barnardo would take the matter in hand at the Edinburgh Castle, there were not two thoughts as to the answer. Dr. Barnardo's helpers went forth to casual wards, night asylums, and common lodgings to make a selection of "the unfittest," with the instruction that only those over fifty-five years of age were eligible.

On Tuesday evening last week 800 men and women responded to the invitation. It was a sad sight to see them filing into their places. By the use of stick and crutch many hobbled along. The weight of years, care, and destitution seem to have impressed a stamp of hopelessness upon many a face. Bright and lively music was played by the boys' brass band, but they heard it as if they heard it not. Even grace could hardly be said to have been sung, so feeble were the voices; but, as many of them had hardly broken their fast that day, how could it have been otherwise? For once in their lives they sat down to a hearty meal—piping hot roast beef and potatoes, followed by plum pudding and a cup of tea.

Besides the brass band, the Home had also provided a company of youthful bell-ringers. We wondered as the tune of "There is a happy land" was rung out, how many hearts would be stirred by it with memories of youthful days, and with hope to reach it in the future. The Stratford male choir sang out the Gospel "o'er and o'er again," and it seemed as if they never had a more appreciative audience. Mr. Robert Paton spoke simple and loving words that such weary pilgrims as they could well understand. Dr. Barnardo followed him. How blessed must have been the opportunity to bring the Gospel of Hope to poor creatures whose day of life was so soon to end, and whose days of hope upon earth seemed already ended. We took the opportunity of conversing with many of them, and found they came from all ranks and conditions, from the B.A. of Cambridge downward. From the tales of utter destitution which were told, one could only re-echo the desire expressed by Dr. Barnardo, and which for once roused the latent enthusiasm of the hearers, "I wish I could make you all comfortable and happy for life."

THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

DEAR SIR,—At this time, when the minds of Christians are being much exercised over James v. 14, 15, and other passages in God's word bearing on the same subject; and when we hear it constantly asked, "Who are the Elders?" "Is sickness sent by the Lord?" and much that is contradictory, strange and mystifying is being preached and taught, it seems to me that the following little instance of the kind of true, simple, unquestioning faith, such as our God delights to honour, should be recorded.

The parents of three little children, the eldest of whom is not yet four years old, have anxiously thought and prayed over the question as to how soon, and how much, to teach the little minds entrusted to them about heavenly and unseen things. They decided to tell them only by degrees what they could clearly understand, praying that spiritual things might always be a great reality to their little hearts.

A few weeks ago the mother was taken seriously ill. The little ones came down stairs (as usual) before breakfast. One morning little Magdalen, the eldest, stopped short in the midst of her play, and came to her father with an earnest look on her merry little face. "Father" she said, "don't you think the Lord Jesus would make mother well, if we were all to ask Him together?" "Yes, darling," the father answered, "I am sure He would." She ran to the others in great delight. "Come along Muriel; come along Cyril! we are all going to ask the Lord Jesus to make mother well!" She made them both kneel down with her, and the father put up a simple prayer for what they wanted, the three little voices all joining in, and repeating each sentence after him; even the baby boy earnestly doing his best. Then as they rose, little Magdalen said with a joyous smile: "There, dad! now we shall soon have mother down to prayers again!"

From that very day the mother's dangerous illness was suddenly arrested. Each morning, entirely of their own accord, the three little ones came to their father to ask the Lord Jesus again, Magdalen remarking confidently, "And He'll do it, dad." On the third day they heard that their mother was nearly well, and coming downstairs. "Oh! then," suggested Magdalen, "we had better ask the Lord Jesus never to let mother be ill again at all any more; and don't you think He'd like his little bodies to thank Him?"

When they came to the drawing-room that evening, and found their mother down, their joy was great. "And, you know, my own mother," said little Magdalen, eagerly, "we asked Him three times with father, and lots and lots of times alone." And little Muriel said, "I asked Him, too." And the baby boy looked up solemnly, and just said: "Lord Jesus."

Is not this a "prayer of faith," such as brings down an immediate answer from the Throne of God, and bears glorious testimony to the teaching power of the Holy Spirit?

Yours faithfully,
THE MOTHER.

CLERKENWELL. — The Juvenile Christian Mission, Board School, St. John's-lane, was started in 1872. The work rapidly increased; so much so, that in 1876 a large room in the St. John's-lane Board Schools was engaged to carry it on. Soon after the work was started a free breakfast was commenced, and has been continued every Sunday morning during the winter months for the outcast children in the district, many of whom, but for this, would have to go without their Sunday morning meal. For the last ten years from one hundred and fifty to three hundred children have been thus warmed and fed by this Mission every Sunday morning, a short service being held after the breakfast. The friends connected with the Mission are seriously hindered in carrying on their good work for want of funds. I would make a most earnest appeal for the needful help, both for the breakfasts and schools. The Treasurer is Mr. George Gillett, 9, Birchin-lane, E.C.

AMERICAN EVANGELISATION.

DEAR SIR,—I send you some items of intelligence as to religious efforts here, which may be acceptable. Our own mission work in New Haven is prospering greatly. I have been engaged in it for eleven years, and it is now well established. It is an undenominational agency to reach and win the people of the city. The two chief ways in this country by which the people have been sought after outside of the regular Church work have been "City Missions" and "Mission Sunday-schools." City Missions have been half-and-half charity and religion, or practically a loaves-and-fishes affair. This was the form of Mr. Moody's first work in Chicago, and I often think of what he once said, "I thought to get all Chicago converted by taking a loaf of bread in one hand and the Bible in the other, but I could never get the people to look beyond the loaf of bread and see the Bible." His best work was in his mission school, out of which grew his church in Chicago.

Another thing about the charity, or temporal relief in the City Mission work, is that it does not reach a large number of middle-class working people who are non-churchgoers. These will not mix up with paupers or semi-paupers, and so are not reached. I ought to except New York city from this scheme of City Mission work, for there the City Mission is carried on in a different manner. The City Mission Society there send a worker who is usually a minister into a neglected district. He starts a Sunday-school and meeting for adults, making the people pay as much as they can of the expense; the rest is met by the Society. Very soon there is a number of converts, and a Church is formed, which in time becomes self-supporting. This is an excellent way, but it is not easily carried out in the smaller cities.

My idea has been to get at the people with the Gospel only, leaving the temporal needs to be met by charitable persons or visitors, of which latter there are many in New Haven. After accustoming the children and people to informal religious services and forming habits of going to religious meetings, we give them up to the churches. All our services have been held, with the exception of our Sunday-night Gospel meeting, at hours other than those of the Church services. The teachers in the Sunday-school and the helpers in the meetings have been urged to introduce children and adults into the churches. The work has been liberally sustained by the very best people of all denominations. The committee or directors have been, and are, prominent ministers and business men from the various churches.

As I have said, I have been at work hard for eleven years, beginning in October, 1874, when I was a member of the junior class of Yale, and carrying it on during the three years I was studying in the theological school. It is quite interesting to note the results. It has been to me a practical study of "How to reach the Masses." When we began, there were about 2000 Protestant children, or children other than Roman Catholic and Jews, of school age (four to sixteen) who did not attend Sunday-school. New Haven then had a population of about 60,000. It has now about 75,000, and there are about 500 such children not in Sunday-schools. We have had about 1600 different children in our school during these years, and with only few exceptions these children have been taken into the church schools.

I looked upon this as the very strongest and best part of the work of getting the people into the churches. I thought the Church would hold on to the children as they grew older, and that through the children access might be gained to the homes of the people, and fathers and mothers, friends and relations, brought into the Church. This has been done, as I have said, to a small extent. I frequently meet the boys and girls who were members of my school eight, nine, or ten years ago, and who were passed into the churches. They are now about eighteen, twenty, or twenty-four years of age. Their habits of life are good, but they are not Christians, and very often do not attend church. Most of the people who were passed into the churches after being soundly converted in our meetings have held out, but the others do not go anywhere, so I think I shall be forced to say that my plan of getting the people into the churches has not been a success. I think, too, that many of the people have come into our hall, and, finding it a sort of mission, have gone out, and neither we nor the Church have got them.

I am working now on the problem of "housing the people." It is a great problem, as every worker will admit. How often are we grieved to the heart by the constant confession of some one most difficult to reach, "I used to be a Christian?" I have started a sort of semi-Church Organisation of the converts, which may develop into a Church. If I had known enough ten years ago to use this agency then, I feel sure that the number of those who would have held firm would have been largely increased. If this is of any interest, I will give another letter to an explanation of this plan.

Colonel G. R. Clarke, of Chicago, expects to hold meetings for a week or ten days with us, beginning January 10. He will also hold several meetings in Brooklyn or New York. Next to D. L. Moody I think he is the greatest soul-winner in this country. For the year ending October 14, the eighth of his mission work in Chicago, there were 3668 persons forward for prayers in a room that will not seat over 500 persons. Ben Hogan is having great meetings in Western cities.

Dr. Pentecost has about 3000 persons in his Sunday afternoon meetings in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Mr. Moody has been holding conventions of two or three days in various towns and cities, with wonderful results. He is going South in January. Just now he is at home fitting up the rooms in the new building of the boys' school. Fifty dollars, or £10, will fit up a room. Of course, many of his English friends would like to help.

Geo. C. Needham also goes South in January. He expects to be in England next year. He is a grand worker, and one of our best speakers in evangelistic meetings.

Major Whittle is doing good work in the West, and so are your English evangelists, Mateer and Parker and William Noble. May the Lord bless all the workers in England. It is an inspiration to read of them, and, though known only in name to many of us here, we love to think of you all.—Yours sincerely,

JOHN C. COLLINS.

MASSACHUSETTS AND MICHIGAN.

IN a recently issued report of "The Christian Mission," Mr. William F. Davies, evangelist, Mount Washington, Chelsea, Mass., writes:—During the past six months the work of The Christian Mission has been carried on chiefly in Massachusetts and in Michigan. In Massachusetts it has been my joy to preach the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ out of doors and in doors in Boston, Dedham, Weymouth, Saxonville, Chelsea, Melrose, and Stoneham. At these meetings many have signified their acceptance of Christ as their Saviour.

Frequent letters from the little band of missionaries in East Saginaw speak of the spiritual blessing which they have received in their testimony to Jesus. The conversion of some, and persecution by others, have followed the word preached there as well as here. Brother Geo. A. Williams, who has proved himself a helper of sterling worth, comes East to study and train for greater usefulness. Sister Laura Tatham has rejoined the East Saginaw Mission.

The object of The Christian Mission is to glorify God in the conversion of sinners, and the upbuilding of Christians. America is attracting all nations. If we can evangelise the un-churched foreign population in this land, we can evangelise the world. In the lumber-woods, and among the scattered settlers of our country, who, during the present century of unexampled missionary activity, have been more neglected, spiritually, than India, China, Japan, and the South Sea Islands, this work has begun in earnest.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.

A PAMPHLET issued by the Secretary of these Homes, Rev. A. O. Charles, contains a record of twenty-one years' history of the institution; it forms a most interesting narrative of small beginnings, rapid growth, and the ultimate attainment of majority. "During this period no less a number than 1,061 destitute children found home, food, clothing, education, industrial training, recreation, and religious teaching. They were thus equipped for the battle of life, taught how to live well in this world, and how to prepare for the next."

Additional interest is given to the pamphlet by the publication of sermons preached on behalf of the institution by Canon Fleming and Archdeacon Farrar, both of which are of a high order. Friends of the work will also learn with pleasure that the sum of £6,000 has been paid to the trustees in full discharge of the mortgage on the Farningham property, which is now free from any such incumbrance. There still remains a debt, however, of £6,000 on the Swanley property, and the removal of this would be the removal of a great burden from the mind of Mr. Charles.

Coming to the work of the past year, it seems that signs of God's blessing have not been wanting, many of the lads affording by their good conduct ground for hope that a work of the Spirit has been begun in them. In some of the houses the boys have begun a weekly prayer meeting. The report of the inspector is very satisfactory. A gentleman living at Burnley has recently visited the institution, and has ever since been actively engaged in enlisting the sympathy of others. All communications are to be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. A. O. Charles, Bank Buildings, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

OF late we have had many books with startling titles, and the reading world has been variously entertained; but it has been left for the volume before us to introduce a new and a revolutionary element into literature. New, because no one has had the courage hitherto to write thus; revolutionary, because though more tragically thrilling than the most powerfully conceived situations of the best works of fiction pure and simple, it is a narrative of simple truth. Of deepest, saddest interest, of intensest reality, of heart-melting tenderness, this book must create an era not only in the lives and loves of many of its readers, but also, we hope, in the art and aim of book-writing.

A woman of high, noble, God-like impulse has had the courage to lift the curtain that has hidden the horrors of social villany, and with delicacy and power has revealed the depths of this "cruel wrong." May God bless the effort! May Ernestine Courtenay find many followers in Christ-loving hearts to-day! Young men and maidens, fathers, mothers, Christian workers, and writers, should get and read, and keep and give this book. Let no one be afraid of it; it is full of the sin of man, as it is full of the love of God, but there is not one word of its wonderful pages but may, and indeed ought, to be read by all who value purity and truth in the light of God, and who would help the tempted, the erring, and the wronged.

* HIDDEN DEPTHS: a Story of Cruel Wrong. By F. M. F. SKENE. With an Introduction by W. Shepherd Allen, Esq., M.P. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton.

ORPHANAGE AT FLORENCE.—As our readers may know, Dr. Comandi has an Orphanage at Florence, similar to Mr. Müller's at Bristol, where poor starving orphans are taken care of, fed and clothed, and given a sound Christian education. Numbers of these boys have been brought to the feet of Jesus, and have then gone forth as evangelists throughout the length and breadth of Italy. The good man toils on from day to day and from year to year, bestowing all possible care upon the little ragged children that he rescues from starvation and eternal death. Anyone wishing to contribute to this excellent work may communicate with Mrs. Macrae, 45, Moray-place, Edinburgh.

Letters to the Editor.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—In my note, which appeared in The Christian of December 3, my statement as to there being no missionary in the Sumbulpore District was incorrect. Not till after I had written you did I learn that that station had been taken up by the General Baptist Missionary Society.

Also, I do not wish to be understood as having any sort of sympathy with those who speak of Protestant Missions in India as a failure. Since Ziegenbalg and Plutschan began their labours on the Tranquebar coast in 1706, more than two thousand Protestant missionaries have laboured in India. Many of them have fallen victims to the climate. As a body of servants of Christ one will have to search far and long among the worthies of the past two centuries before he will find an equal number of such devoted labourers of God. Much of the best work done by them has been in quiet, and without attracting the notice of the world. The great standing monument to the devotion of these 2000 missionaries is the native Church of India.

After much observation, I have no hesitation in saying that, in my opinion, our dear native brethren of India, in love, faith and consecration, stand much higher on the average than the churches of Great Britain or of the United States.

CHRISTIANS AND BOARDING SCHOOLS.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of January 7 I find a paragraph in which you say, "A parent has been much troubled latterly by the very common announcement in newspapers of the style of entertainment, private theatricals, &c., in private schools, both for young gentlemen and young ladies;" and the writer thinks it would be well for Christian parents to remind those to whom they entrust the education of their children that they do not pay large fees in order that their boys and girls may be taught how to live a life of frivolity, &c., &c.

As I read this I had sitting by my side a lady whom we have long known intimately, who, for many years past, has had a good class of school for girls, boarders, and daily pupils—with a full staff of excellent governesses, not young, underpaid girls with all their experience to gain. I knew she was well qualified, experimentally, to have a sound opinion on the subject referred to. Turning to her, I said, "What do you think of this?" and read the paragraph. She replied, "I should be disposed to be amused by it if I did not so well know the other side (the parents' side) to my cost." We have heard her say from time to time in the past, "If that kind of thing is the only way in which a school pays, and what is called prospers, I will never conform to such requirement, and if my school will not prosper without such conformity, it never shall with it." In the present day, professedly Christian parents, as well as others, in seeking a school for their children, appear, by the course they take, to require a great deal of display, publicity, and show for their children, anything which they think will promote the worldly interests of their children and bring them into association with families into which, by and by, they may "marry well." I can but wonder as I see Christian people doing this. It would seem as though many can never have read, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God;" for it would appear to be the last thing many seek. Such parents do their children a cruel wrong, probably affecting their whole after life.

It is but just that the responsibility in this matter should be borne by the right persons; those who keep the schools and resort to the means above referred to do but pander to the urgent requirements of those by whose custom and favourable opinion they live, if not expressed to them in so many words, yet made unmistakably known. Such entertainments are evidently effectual advertisements for schools, and are found "to pay well," even though it be at the cost of all that makes childhood and youth of both sexes most attractive to those who look below the surface, making them, almost in infancy some of them, little artificial men and women, robbed of the simple childhood which ought to be theirs and can never come to them again. Such are some of the blessings attaching to securing for children a place in so-called "Society." It appears from evidences on all hands that our Christian life, on its practical side, needs to be rearranged, so that we may "live more nearly as we pray."—Yours, A Constant Reader.

MR. PRICE HUGHES AND IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—I must make the shortest possible protest against that part of the address of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes reported in your issue of January 14, which refers to Ireland. Under the heading of national sins we find England's "outrageous" maltreatment of this country ranked with the opium and drink traffic, and other abominations more recently disclosed. And England is exhorted to stand before Ireland as a white-sheeted penitent confessing her tyranny.

Nobody denies that previous generations of legislators grievously oppressed the Irish people. If there were any danger of its being forgotten, Irish orators by the score would avert it. But why does Mr. Hughes ignore recent history, the history of his own time? He says: "A beginning must be made on our side." Has the last half-century brought forth oppressive legislation so completely in line with the previous record that it can honestly be passed over unnoticed? To read these fervid periods of his, one would imagine that the penal laws were still in force, the Roman Catholic religion oppressed and disabled, the holders of land unprotected or robbed.

The people of Ireland enjoy popular privileges in every respect equal to those of Great Britain. Taxation falls less heavily upon Ireland than any other branch of the Union. The holders of land enjoy security, state-protection of rent and tenant-right beyond what any farmer in England, Scotland or Wales possesses, and the Roman Catholic religion is fostered and endowed beyond what to many seems consistent with the state-endowment and establishment of Protestantism across the Channel. Who has ever said that we "must keep the Irish down by brute force because they are Roman Catholics"?

A Christian minister should, in my judgment, seek to "bury the hatchet" of strife, not to disinter it; and if a portion of our people are inflamed by cankerous recollections of a shameful past, we ought to point them to the present proofs of England's good-will and love of justice, rather than to fan the flames.—Yours sincerely,

Co. Kerry. George F. Trench.

COLD AND HUNGER IN ST. GILES'S.

Sir,—Words fail to express the bitter sufferings of large numbers of the decent struggling poor in St. Giles's during this severe weather. Besides the lack of employment for willing hands, the frost and snow greatly interfere with the out-door trades of the poor, so that costermongers, fruit and flower sellers, and others, are all but at a standstill and must have temporary help, in the shape of food at least, to keep starvation from the doors. One of my best helpers who attends to this branch of the work thus writes to me:—"To sit here from morning till night listening to sickening tales of trouble and want during this sad weather is enough to turn one's brain."

I am glad to say we have in connection with St. Giles's Christian Mission a brave band of house-to-house visitors whose practical knowledge of the people of the district makes them peculiarly suitable for the distribution of warm cloth, fuel, and food. Who among your kindly readers will help us in this hour of special need? Monetary gifts may be forwarded to our Treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C., or suitable clothing and money to yours sincerely,

Geo. Hatton, Superintendent.

RAGGED SCHOOL WORK.—Dear Sir,—I can fully endorse Mr. Le Mair's letter, which appeared in your issue of the 14th inst., as to the urgent need for additional teachers and workers in our Ragged-schools. Not unfrequently scores of children may be seen outside the school doors, clamouring for admittance, which the perplexed Superintendent does not grant for lack of teachers. "More workers" forms the burden and plea of the teachers' prayer-meetings, and I am constantly asked at the office if I can solve the problem, how to get workers. I need not add how glad I shall be to give every information as to centres and corners of usefulness, either on Sunday or week-day, in any part of London.—Yours faithfully,

The Ragged School Union, John Kirk.

"THOU GAVEST ME NO KISS."

Luke vii. 45.

Thou gavest Me no water for my feet,
  No fragrant oil upon my head didst pour;
Thou gavest me no kiss of welcome sweet,
  It was not love that met Me at the door.
But here a sinner, at my mercy seat,
  In love's fair loveliness—though sin-defiled—
With love and sorrow, penitence complete,
  Hath come to Me, and on her I have smiled.
She hath told forth in tears her heart's deep pain,
  My feet hath wiped with tresses of her hair,
Ointment and kisses, prayers that are not vain,
  Her sorrow, and her love for Me, declare.
She lovèd much, and much hath been forgiven:
  Love is the highest thing in earth or heaven!

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

REV. SAM JONES has lately held a Gospel Mission in St. Louis, Mo. His homely, incisive and fearless utterances have, it is stated, aroused professors of religion to a more consistent life, while the godless have been stirred to consider their ways.

BELFAST.—Mr. William Smith, evangelist, has concluded a series of meetings in Great Victoria-street Baptist Sunday-school. A most earnest spirit pervaded the services, and there is reason to believe that, in some cases, good impressions deepened into decision.

PISHILL, HENLEY-ON-THAMES.—Mr. Israel Sida has held a hopeful mission of eight days in this place. In spite of bad weather and long distances, the people came in numbers to hear his stirring Gospel addresses. The worst men and women were attracted, and some gave good hope of a real change.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.—On Monday evening, January 17, Mr. Wilkinson baptized at the Conference-hall a young Jew, named Solomon Ginsburg, on his public confession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The young convert is under the shelter of the Inquirers' Home, and is learning the printing trade.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND McGRANAHAN have been labouring in the Gospel at Aitchison, Kansas. A local paper says:—It is evident that the meetings are growing in interest, and there is every appearance that there will be a real religious awakening. The meeting yesterday morning was well attended, and the exposition of Scripture as to the work of the Holy Spirit was another evidence of Mr. Whittle's great power in handling Scripture.

DOVER.—We have had in this town a most interesting series of services. Mr. Henry Varley was invited to conduct them, and they have proved eminently successful. The power of God was indeed "present to heal," and on the first Lord's day nearly forty persons confessed Christ. The influence of these hallowed gatherings spread far and wide night after night. Mr. Varley gave a series of Bible readings on the week-day afternoons, on the Lord's Second Coming. These meetings were crowded; believers connected with all the churches gathered to study the things which concern the coming of the King.

STRETHAM, CAMBS.—We have had good times lately at the Mission Hall, Stretham (which is a flourishing branch of the London Evangelistic Mission). The many converts of previous years are standing well, and friends are co-operating to increase the interest of the work here, and in the surrounding villages. During the recent severe weather, special efforts have been made to bring cheer and gladness into the hearts of old and young, and encourage them to find in the gatherings of Christians, and earnest Gospel meetings, that joy which the world cannot give. During the past week, January 18 to 25, a special mission was conducted by Mr. and Mrs. William Grove, of London.

D. Newell.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Feb. 1, John ix. 30—41; Feb. 2, x. 1—18; Feb. 3, x. 19—30; Feb. 4, x. 31—42; Feb. 5, Prov. i. 1—19; Feb. 6, i. 20—33.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—That a young man may be delivered from the power of drink.——For Gospel meetings at Uffcolme, Devon, by Mr. George Hefford.——For blessing on meetings for the deepening of spiritual life to be held in the United Presbyterian Church, Airdrie, during the first week in February, to be conducted by Dr. Cumming, of Glasgow, and others.

The Book World.

LOYALLY LOVED; and, LOST AND FOUND. By Mrs. CHARLES GARNETT. Home Words Office. Two excellent tales—the one on Temperance, and the other on Home Missions.

JOYFULLY READY. A Sketch of the Life of Harry McInnes. By HIS MOTHER. 2s. 6d. Seeley & Co. These reminiscences of a bright, boyish life, suddenly cut short, will stimulate many young people in the upward path.

HIS GRANDFATHER'S BIBLE. By Rev. C. W. BARDSLEY, M.A. "Home Words" Publishing Office. A genial and racy narrative: the work of a keen and kindly observer of human nature. Its sketches of character are fresh and forcible; while the tone of the book is both natural and godly. It smells of the heather and the fell.

BOTH SIDES OF THE STREET: An American Tale. Religious Tract Society. We remember reading this story some years ago in its American dress, and heartily welcome it in its present form. The story of Lucky Bronson, his heroism and final reward, with the contrasted lives of the Bronson and Dudley families, will win many appreciative readers.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS. By Rev. ARTHUR MCARTHUR. 1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A wise and spiritual exposition of this much-used parable. The writer disclaims any sympathy with restorationists and universalists; describes the "larger" and "eternal hope" expositors as rash and unwarranted in their interpretations, and endeavours, not without success, to throw new and helpful light on this parable.

THE HALLAM SUCCESSION: A Tale of Methodist Life in two Countries. By AMELIA E. BARR. T. Woolmer. A fine tale, marked by freedom and grace of thought, imaginative power, deep-seated love and reverence for the highest good, and an original plot. Mrs. Barr has created a true woman in Elizabeth Hallam; the story of her love, life, struggles, victory, and glorious end, should help to ennoble all English girls.

PHIL'S MOTHER. By EGLANTON THORNE. Religious Tract Society. This is a well-written little story, drawn from life, of a young woman in a house of business, who marries a Frenchman at a registry office, but ere long is abandoned. Phil is born, and is entrusted to the care of a woman who turns out to be drunken and vile. For a time the child is lost, but at last everything comes right, and Phil is restored to his mother. The moral to the story is the danger of Englishwomen contracting marriage hastily and thoughtlessly with foreigners.

THE MILLENNIUM A SPIRITUAL REIGN OF CHRIST. By E. STORROW. 2s. 6d. John Snow & Co. The writer believes that the millennial reign of Christ will be spiritual, not personal. He utterly rejects the pre-millennial theory of a material reign, and arranges a plan of events to follow "this glorious summer of our race," about which he says there is "a coherence, a sweet reasonableness, and a Scripturalness, both in authority and spirit," which he thinks "more than justifies our adhesion to it." In true optimist spirit he says: "It is quite contrary to fact to assume that the world is growing worse," and insists that "millennarianism is, in doctrine and in fact, inconsistent with the principles and aims of Christianity." Believers in a personal Advent and Reign of Christ may study the book with profit, though they will not accept the writer's conclusions.

The Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union sends the following interesting and useful publications. The annual volume of OUR BOYS AND GIRLS (1s.) is full of crisp, telling anecdotes (which carry their own morals), and healthy, stimulating prize competitions. Its quaintly illustrated cover will help to gain it a hearty welcome. Senior and Junior TABLET LESSON BOOKS (3d. each) contain outlines of Scripture lessons for one year, with questions for home use. A real help to hard-working teachers who have little time for study. Also three story-books by the author of "The White Cross and Dove of Pearls," each carefully written and conveying some phase of truth: WAITING: AN ALLEGORICAL STORY (1s.) shows the uses of discipline in refining the character. THE ARCHER'S CHANCE SHOT (1s.) tells of a Belgian pastor, and how a seemingly chance word laid hold of the mind of a friend, finally leading to his conversion and that of his daughter; it lays bare the scheming of Romish priests to force the converts back to the faith they had left. ELEANOR'S AMBITION (1s. 6d.) shows how lawful aims may be unlawfully pursued, and how a thirst for higher education may be satisfied at the cost of ruin to health and neglect of home duties.

THE POET IN MAY. By EVELYN PYNE. Kegan Paul & Co. Mr. Pyne is a true poet. Graceful, musical, original and vigorous, with a happy combination of depth of feeling and delicacy of expression, these poems speak to the heart because they flow from the heart.

THE MAN WITH THE WHITE HAT; or, The Story of an Unknown Mission. By C. R. PARSONS. T. Woolmer. A story of inestimable worth, true to life, full of incident, breathing the spirit of Divine love, and showing what one life may do for the good of other lives.

ABOUT OUR FATHER. By Mr. WILLIAM LUFF. 1s. 6d. Drummond's Tract Depôt. A volume containing a hundred and five fresh and musical poems, printed in beautiful clear type, and therefore admirably suited as a present to one whose life-work is well nigh spent, and whose thoughts are ever revolving round that dearest of all relations, "Our Father." Mr. Luff is a diligent Bible student, and he has enriched the volume by attaching Scripture references. Not unfrequently the stanzas are rhythmical versions of precious passages of the Word.

OLD-FASHIONED TRUTHS. By Rev. J. C. CROXFORD. 1s. 6d. Partridge & Co. These "Old-fashioned Truths" are well suited for these new-fashioned times. If put into the hands of a thoughtful young man the little book may, under God, decide his everlasting destiny. "Is man immortal?" "Does a believer in Christ possess eternal life?" are the subjects treated in the first two chapters; while the Resurrection, Judgment, and Future Destiny of the Righteous and the Wicked are the all-important topics of those succeeding. Mr. Croxford is rich in the literary art, and he has sanctified it by the manner in which he treats these pregnant questions.

THE THRONE OF ELOQUENCE. By the late E. PAXTON HOOD. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This portly tome is a striking monument to the untiring industry and literary skill of Mr. Hood. He could not be said to be himself a great preacher: he shone rather on the platform and on the printed page than in the pulpit. He had a keen spiritual insight and a fine literary taste, however, which made him a most acceptable writer. The subject of this volume—the vocation of the pulpit, and the characteristics of its most famed occupants—is a very large one, but it would be difficult, surely, within the same limits, to have it treated with more freshness and comprehensive ability than Mr. Hood has done. In a dedicatory preface, written by Mrs. Hood and addressed to Mr. Spurgeon, we learn that three more volumes on the same topic were projected, but only one more was completed, or nearly so, when the author was summoned to his rest. The present volume contains sketches of celebrated preachers, including Bossuet, Bernard of Clairvaux, Chrysostom, Robert Hall, Henry Melvill, Father Taylor of Boston, Billy Dawson, and many lesser lights; it is altogether worthy of the theme.

WHAT I BELIEVE. By Count LEON TOLSTOI, Translated by Constantine POPOFF from the Russian. Elliot Stock. None can read this book without deep thankfulness, as the spiritual autobiography of one who has passed from Nihilism to Formalism, from Formalism to a strong simple faith in Christ crucified. Knowing, too, that Count Tolstoi has spent seven years in translating the Gospels for his countrymen, and writing other religious works which the Russian Government rigidly proscribes, we cannot but honour the diligence and devotion of this modern Wycliffe. Being a man of good family and previous literary fame his consecration is the more influential. But we add one necessary caution. Far as the truths held by the writer rise above the superstitions of the Greek Church, English Christians should not read his strong opinions without frequent reference to the "law and the testimony," and accurate remembrance of all our Saviour's conduct in things civil and religious. A glance at pp. 105 and 224 will justify these remarks. The peculiar state of Russian society is doubtless accountable for much that Count Tolstoi insists on.

The new issues for this year of the Monthly Tract Society are "The Earl of Shaftesbury" and "The Conversion of Adolphe Monod" (1d. each. 8, New Bridge-street, E.C.).

THE PROTESTANT DISSENTER'S ALMANACK for 1886 (6d. Banks, Racquet-court) is not a whit behind its predecessors. It contains a beautiful photographic portrait of Rev. J. G. Rogers.

A WOMAN ON TOBACCO. By Mrs. ARTHUR ARNOLD. 1d. Anti-Narcotic League, Manchester. A very practical and instructive address read at the annual conference of the League in October.

NAVAL AND MILITARY CHARITIES AND INSTITUTIONS. Compiled by Major JAMES GILDEA. Cull & Son, Houghton-treet, Strand, W.C. This compilation supplies a long-felt want, and will be much appreciated by many. The definite object of each society is made a special feature.

DAILY BREAD ALMANACK. By Rev. JAS. SMITH, Dufftown. 1d. A. Murray, Aberdeen, N.B. The texts are well selected. The articles are short and varied, are written in a devout spirit, and are very practical and stimulating.

THE DREAM OF THE ATHEIST. By Rev. GEO. LITTING. 2d. John Snow & Co. A rather sensational tract, designed to convince of the moral evidence in support of the existence of a God—a part of the controversy which the author thinks is disregarded in these days of scientific research.

THE ANGLICAN PULPIT OF TO-DAY is the title of a volume which Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton have just published, containing typical sermons by forty distinguished preachers of the Church of England. The sermons have been authorised and revised by the authors, and to each is prefixed a life of the preacher.

L'Ami de la Maison, a monthly French evangelical paper, edited by M. Armand Delille, begins the year well. The engravings are good, and the letterpress readable, useful, and Christian. The January number contains also a bright little piece of music. Le Rayon de Soleil, by the same editor, and of the same character, is for children. Both may be procured from Messrs. Partridge & Co., Paternoster-row.

"IS THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD STRAITENED?" A CALL TO PRAYER, is the title of a small volume by the Rev. WM. CROSBIE, of Brighton, which Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton will publish immediately. Canon Wilberforce will publish a small volume in a few days, through Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, entitled THE TRINITY OF EVIL, in which he deals with Infidelity, Impurity, and Intemperance.

LESSONS ON THE GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN. By Rev. W. M. SINCLAIR, M.A. 2s. Church of England Sunday-school Institute. This volume, of nearly two hundred pages, is a reprint from The Sunday-school Magazine, comprising forty lessons on the above Gospel; they will be found of great value to preachers and religious instructors generally, as well as to teachers.

THE CHURCH-WORKER, 1885. 2s. 4d. Beside the usual expositions, articles, &c., this annual (vol. iv.) contains "Lessons on the Collects, for the Little Ones;" a series of "Labourers in the Harvest," by Rev. John F. Kitto; and "Prayer-Book Teachings;" all of which will be of considerable value to lovers of the Established Church. TWELVE LESSONS ON THE CHURCH CATECHISM, by THOMAS RUTT (6d.), will be most helpful to teachers in their class preparations. Church of England Sunday-school Institute.

THE BRETON MISSION.

THE little company of faithful converts who make the Tremel station their centre for worship met for praise, prayer and conference upon the work of the Lord on the opening of the new year. The communion was a precious time and the spirit of earnest supplication moved the whole company. A code of rules has been framed, by which each undertakes to do some work for the Lord, and to bear as far as their means, which are little above poverty, will admit, their full share of the financial needs of the mission.

Quite a revival of earnest inquiry is manifes everywhere. Truly the "Word of the Lord ha not returned to Him void," for the thousands o Gospels and New Testaments which have bee scattered as seed corns have been read; the cr from every side is "Come and further explain the beautiful things we find here and teach our chil dren." But the funds are wanting to permit o such an answer as the committee would give Never were matters so ripe for action as now. Mr I. Waites, 4 Prince's-road, Lewisham Hill, S.E. will thankfully receive any help and give any in formation.

SERMON-LANE MISSION HALL.—Mr. Georg Fuller, Superintendent, 54, Liverpool-road, Isling ton, writes:—"We were never doing a greate work for God than now, but I am sorry to say w have had less money this Christmas than for man years. I hope God may dispose some hearts t help us to carry on our winter work, which ha grown so large of late years: Sunday free break fast, soup dinners, coals, and tea and sugar for th sick, clothing for the poor, and many other thing

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

EUROPEAN.

WEEK OF PRAYER IN PARIS.—At first sight it seemed as though the meetings this year were not so well attended as those of the preceding year, but as there were three each day in place of one as before, the relative number was greater, and the interest increased.—Evangéliste.

FLORENCE. — Rev. John R. McDougall Scotch Church, Florence, has issued a circular letter in which he says: — Everything presages distress this winter. The scare of the plague, stretching from Spain to Sicily, is still on the public mind, and will prevent the coming of visitors, on whom the town almost wholly depends. I should therefore be glad to be in condition to exercise a large-handed charity. May the Lord stir many hearts to respond to this appeal.

PROTESTANTISM IN ITALY. — The correspondent in Rome of The Daily News writes:—The Clerical Osservatore Romano speaks in the most opprobrious terms of the meeting which took place last week at Pinerolo, in the Waldensian Valleys, of the delegates of the Waldensian and Free Italian Churches, which are about to unite. This unionist movement, which creates such a flutter in the Clerical camp, is due to the initiative of Rev. Mr. McDougall, the Scotch Chaplain at Florence. If successful, it will remove a grave obstacle which Protestantism meets with here, viz., the perplexity of Italians at the multiplicity of Protestant denominations.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUNDAY REST IN CALCUTTA.—A movement for securing the closing of shops on Sunday is gaining favour among the Hindoos of Calcutta. The jewellers and watchmakers of Radha and China bazaars in that city are proposing hereafter to close their shops on that day, which the stationery dealers have already done for some time. The motive for this change is undoubtedly a purely mercenary one, and not a recognition of the Divine command. But it is no less an evidence that the leaven of the Bible is permeating even the callous and superstitious devotees of Hindooism.

SOUTHERN ARABIA.—The Hon. I. Keith-Falconer has set a good example in going out to the East as a volunteer missionary. Aden is in so many ways connected with Western India, that this addition to the force is an encouragement to all the friends of missions. If he is enabled by the blessing of God to carry out his plans of establishing an Industrial School and a Medical Mission, we may confidently hope that a brighter day has begun to dawn on Southern Arabia.

MR. JOSEPH HOARE, formerly a partner in the banking firm of Barnett, Hoare & Co., treasurer of the London City Mission, British and Foreign Bible Society, and the Church Missionary Society, died last Thursday night at his residence, Child's-hill House, Hampstead, in his seventy-second year.

GERMAN BAPTIST MISSION.—The Quarterly Reporter, published for this mission by the Baptist Tract Society, Castle-street, Holborn, is as usual full of interest. One article says:—"During the past three years nearly 5000 members have been added, with 15 more churches, and 125 new preaching stations; also 3000 more Sunday scholars, and 170 teachers. 13 new places of worship have been erected, the liberality of the members increased by 20 per cent., and the various branches of mission work show signs of vitality and vigour." Outside the German Empire, in the Baltic provinces, "the kingdom of Christ is also extending, and a meeting-place is sadly needed at St. Petersburg." Rev. F. H. Newton, 59, Bagby-road, Leeds, is the English secretary.

WATERCRESS AND FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION.—The Committee report success in the different departments of their work, and a large increase in the number reached and gathered in. The free breakfasts were accepted by 1500 poor women in the early morning, when the Gospel was presented to them. Loans, consisting of baskets, stalls, barrows, &c., have been mostly repaid. The Flower Girls' Brigade and the Destitute Children's Dinner Society have perseveringly continued their work. The Sunday evening services at Foresters' Hall have drawn large congregations, the Sunday-schools are flourishing, the mothers' meetings are well attended, and the Temperance Society maintains its upward course. The Superintendent is Mr. John A. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

PETERBOROUGH.—The Committee of this branch are anxious this year to put forth a special effort to influence the many young men of the city. A special service was held in the Cathedral, on Thursday last, when Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe was the preacher. Mr. Packer, the newly appointed secretary, asks prayer that the Association may become a greater power for good amongst the young men in the city.

SHEFFIELD.—The new session of this Association was opened with a social entertainment on January 9. Mr. E. Bainbridge, the President, was prevented from presiding, but sent an inaugural address, the closing words of which were: "Every earnest member should constitute himself an 'honorary secretary,' thinking constantly of the best means of extending the influence of the Association, and its capacity for usefulness."

COBOURG, ONTARIO.—You will be glad to know that the results of the work begun here by Miss Logan and Miss Beard about eight years ago, in connection with the Y.M.C.A., are still to be seen. The Lord's blessing was very abundantly bestowed at that time, as nearly 100 professed faith in Christ, some of whom have since passed away triumphant in the faith of Christ. Many are to-day faithful witnesses for Jesus, and some of them are much used of God in winning souls. The recent visit of Mr. and Mrs. Haslam has been a time of great spiritual reviving. J. W. B.

CARDIFF.—There are thousands of young men in Cardiff between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five. It is the aim of the Young Men's Christian Association to bring good influence to bear upon this important part of the population. On Sunday evenings evangelistical services are held in the lecture-room; these meetings, which are supposed to be for non-church goers, and from which great good has resulted, are usually attended by between 500 and 600 worshippers. Some of the members of the Association go forth into the highways and byeways and preach the Gospel. At present there are about 100 annual subscribers to the Association, which numbers 300 members and associates, forty of whom have joined since the advent of Mr. George Hughes, the genial and capable secretary.

LONDON.—Last week, at the invitation of Mr. G. Williams, 300 secretaries and committee-men of the fifty-nine London branches of the Y.M.C.A. met at Exeter Hall, in what is known as the "Radley" meeting, for the purpose of reporting the progress made in their various centres. Mr. Williams stated that the Association had now nearly 9000 members and associates in London; it was also reported that the total increase in the work of the Association in Great Britain for the last seven years had been that 248 new associations had been formed, sixty new paid secretaries appointed; thirty-two new buildings erected, and an increase also of 26,060 members and associates. In the course of the proceedings favourable mention was made of the work which the London Diocesan Council is doing amongst young men.

YORKSHIRE WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—The report before us (which may be obtained of Miss Acton, Peckitt-street, York, for fourpence), contains minutes of conference, accounts of affiliated associations, a list of subscribers, and statement of treasurer's account for the past year. "One of the missionaries at Sheffield has been much engaged in visiting the public-houses, leaving tracts, singing hymns, and speaking of the Saviour. Most of the publicans asked her to continue her visits." A considerable amount of work has been done during the year, and although no fresh branches have been affiliated, several have been formed and will shortly be added. Temperance tracts have been largely circulated.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—The Quarterly Record for January says: "The amount of child-misery in London and all large towns is very great. From the beginning of their lives they are grievously neglected, and are so hungry that they pick up dirty crusts, orange-peel, and offal, and devour it ravenously. To alleviate this misery the Ragged-schools exist." A drawing of the handsome marble tablet and bust of the late Earl of Shaftesbury placed in the King Edward Ragged-schools is given. At present the income is altogether insufficient to meet the claims made upon it; at the same time, some of the schools need rebuilding, repairing or cleaning, thus necessitating special and immediate aid. Communications to be made to the Editor of The Record, Mr. R. J. Curtis, Ragged-school Union, Exeter Hall.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

It is stated that Dr. Moorhouse, the new Bishop of Manchester, is not an abstainer.

A LANCASTER publican has been sentenced to a month with hard labour, for threatening the chief constable.

PRINCE BISMARCK'S "Brandy Bill" would give the State a practical monopoly of the spirit traffic, and add £15,000,000 to the Imperial Revenue.

AT Toronto, January 4, women voted for the first time at the election of Mayor, and "were almost a unit for the Temperance candidate."

DURING the past year 1338 new members joined the Total Abstinence Section of the Missions to Seamen Branch Church of England Temperance Society, Bristol.

Recently, at Norwich, 160 persons engaged in shows, &c., were entertained at tea. Dr. Geikie presided, and several joined the Travellers' Abstainers' Union.

NORTH SUNDERLAND.—Mr. A. G. Marment has held a seven days' mission in connection with the Gospel Temperance Mission. A large number have signed the pledge.

REV. C. S. ADAMA VON SCHELTEWA'S translation of Dr. Richardson's "Temperance Lesson Book" is to be published in a Dutch paper, in weekly lessons for fifty-two weeks.

A SPEAKER at a recent meeting of Carubbers Close Gospel Temperance Mission, pleaded that women should make home so attractive as to keep their husbands away from the public-house.

The Morning Advertiser states that a publican has given as a shooting prize a pint of ale every day for a year, the winner to attend and drink it at the house. "Surely in vain is the net spread."

THE Wigan Temperance Mission has had a successful year. Over 200 meetings were held, reclamation work being prominent. Of the pledge-takers for the last two years over 1000 stand true.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR says, in one Teetotal county, United States, there is not a pauper or a criminal; and in Pullman City, population 2500, all Teetotalers, there has not been an arrest for twenty months.

THE Annual Conference of the Sunday Closing Association is to be held on February 5. At the request of the association, January 17 was by many observed as a day of prayer on behalf of the Sunday Closing Bill.

AT Birmingham there has been another exposure of "Temperance wines." "Port" and "Sherry," at 6d. and 8d. a quart, contained respectively 17 and 19 per cent. alcohol. The manufacturers, Messrs. Turley, were fined £10.

IN The Medical Temperance Journal, Dr. Ridge briefly reviews the results of Dr. William Roberts's experiments on alcohol and digestion, now published. He maintains they have not weakened the argument for total abstinence.

TWENTY-FIVE abstaining members of the New House of Commons attended a meeting in London last week by invitation of the National Temperance League. Several of them advocated the formation of a Temperance party in the House.

IN The Expositor, January, 1886, there is an article, "The Bible and Wine," by Dr. Delitzch, the German critic. Dr. Dawson Burns thinks the article proves that the learned critic has not "studied the subject of Bible wines."

THE following notices have been given in Parliament by the members named:—Sir J. Pease, a Sunday Closing (England) Bill; Mr. T. Fry, a Sunday Closing (co. Durham) Bill; Mr. Stevenson, a resolution in favour of Sunday Closing (England); Mr. S. Howard, a Bill to Amend the Licensing Acts.

A SUCCESSFUL nine days' Gospel Temperance Mission has been concluded in Dublin. It was conducted by Mrs. Joseph Lucas, of Sunderland, and the interest was well sustained to the end. Four hundred and fifty persons signed the Total Abstinence pledge, and many more put on the blue ribbon. Mrs. Lucas also addressed a large and influential drawing-room meeting, and delivered her lecture to parents on the subject of "Heredity."

KINGSTON, JAMAICA.—The Y.M.C.A. which was organised in May last here, has already attained to a membership of two hundred and sixty young men. It has acquired premises of its own in Hanover-street, Kingston.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JAN. 31.—LEVITICUS XVIII.

2.—Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, I am the Lord your God.—“The Lord prefaces the laws he is to lay down in this chapter by very solemn declarations of his sovereignty, ‘I am Jehovah,’ and of his relation to them as a reconciled God, ‘I am your God.’ He sets before them his authority and his constraining love. He knows our frame; and He sees that man resents interference with his liberty in daily life and private actions more than in anything else; therefore, to silence objection and to draw the will, He adduces his sovereignty and his love.”—A. Bonar.

3.—After the doings of the land of Egypt . . . . shall ye not do: and after the doings of the land of Canaan . . . shall ye not do.”—The marriage laws and customs were very lax among the Gentile nations, and especially among the Egyptians. A people brought out of Egypt, and about to be brought into Canaan, where the inhabitants were to be driven out with the sword on account of their gross sensuality and wickedness, must be clearly taught the sanctity of the marriage relation, and be put on their guard against the violations of that sanctity which they might see or hear around them.

27.—For all these abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled.—“The land designed and consecrated for his people by Jehovah (xxv. 23) is here impersonated, and represented as vomiting forth its present inhabitants, in consequence of their abominations here mentioned. The iniquity of the Canaanites was now full (see Gen. xv. 16).”—Sp. Com.

MONDAY, FEB. 1.—LEVITICUS XIX.

2.—Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy.—“These words express the key-note to the whole Book of Leviticus, being addressed as they are not to the priests, or the rulers, or the saintly few, but to the whole nation. There does not appear to be any systematic arrangement in the laws which follow; but it is evident that they were intended as guards to the sanctity of the elect people, enforcing common duties by immediate appeal to the highest authority.”—Sp.. Com.

9.—When ye reap the harvest of your land, &c.—This was a gracious provision for the poor and needy, for whom it provided food (Ruth ii.), and in doing so inculcated consideration of others upon the children of Israel. “All this was meant to check selfishness and greediness; to encourage brotherly kindness and liberality, and to condemn covetous, avaricious, grasping tendencies in the people of Israel. Besides, Israel was thus taught that though they got the best of the substance, yet there were strangers who were to share in their blessings. There were poor Gentiles often coming across their borders from Moab or from Egypt, from Syria or from Edom, who must receive a share in Israel’s blessings. Here was a type of the Gentiles partaking in their spiritual things.”—A. Bonar.

11.—Ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither lie one to another.—“The meaning of the eighth commandment is here expanded into the prohibition of (1) theft, (2) cheating, (3) falsehood.” —Sp. Com. Lying is robbing another of truth, which he has a right to at our hands.

17.—Not suffer sin upon him.—This is rendered by R.V., “not bear sin because of him.” So also “Speaker’s Commentary,” which explains it to mean “either by bearing secret ill will (Eph. iv. 26), or by encouraging him to sin in withholding due rebuke.”

TUESDAY, FEB. 2.—LEVITICUS XX.

“The Lord, knowing well the deep delusions of the heart, warns Israel against sins which had already been forbidden. But He does it here by a reference throughout to the former state of morality and idolatry in the land, lest Israel should say, ‘let us try what was once done in the land before’ (see ver. 22, which is the key to this chapter). How thoroughly the Lord knows the readiness of the corrupt heart to adopt a suggestion of evil! and how accurately He saw the tendency to what was afterwards really done by Israel!”—A. Bonar.

24.—“I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people; ye shall therefore put difference between clean beasts and unclean An important connection, as throwing light upon Acts x., where the matter is reversed. The difference between clean and unclean beasts was to be disregarded, to show that, so far as the Gospel was concerned, the separation between Israel and the nations no longer existed.

27.—“A man also or woman that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death.”—The connection in which this law stands with the immediately preceding words: “I have severed you from other people, that ye should be Mine,” is very similar to that of xix. 30, 31, on which passage Keil remarks: “True fear of God awakens confidence in the Lord and his guidance, and excludes all superstitious and idolatrous ways and methods of discovering the future. This thought prepares the way for the warning against turning to familiar spirits, &c. The word ‘familiar spirit’ denotes a departed spirit, who was called up to make disclosures with regard to the future.” Modern Spiritualism is most distinctly condemned by this law.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 3.—LEVITICUS XXI.

The contents of this chapter are well summarised by Keil, thus: “The sanctification of the priests. As the whole nation was to strive after sanctification in all the duties of life, on account of its calling as a nation of God, the priests whom Jehovah had chosen out of the whole nation to be the custodians of his sanctuary, and had sanctified to that end, were, above all, to prove themselves the sanctified servants of the Lord in their domestic life and the duties of their calling. They were (1) not to defile themselves by touching the dead or by signs of mourning (ver. 1—12); they were (2) to contract and maintain a spotless marriage (ver. 7—15); those members of the priesthood (3) who had any bodily failings were to keep away from the duties of the priest’s office (ver. 16—24).”

2.—But for his kin . . . . may he be defiled.—“He is, however, not to be devoid of sympathy and feeling. Nay, he is fully permitted to pour out his grief over mother, father, son, daughter . . . and, of course, also over his own wife, ‘his own flesh.’ This is implied in Ezek. xxiv. 16. A priest must have feelings of deep emotion; he must resemble Jesus the Antitype, weeping over his own kindred most of all, and only restrained from weeping over all by express enactment of Jehovah. A priest must have in his soul the yearning of all affection, though he give not vent to all he feels.”—A. Bonar.

12.—Neither shall he go out of the sanctuary.—“I.e., not for the purpose to which reference is here made. The words do not mean, as some have imagined, that his abode was confined to the sanctuary.”—Sp. Com.

21.—No man that hath a blemish . . . shall come nigh to offer the offerings of the Lord.—It is only in Christ that the royal priesthood (i.e., all believers) are “without blemish” (Eph. v. 27). Hereafter to be presented so actually. At present “accepted” as such “in the Beloved” imputatively. It is of the utmost importance that all priestly approaches to God in prayer, praise, or service of any kind should be distinctly on the ground of our standing in Christ, not on the ground of what we are in ourselves. No attainments in holiness, real or supposed, must ever be allowed to take the place of imputed righteousness (Rom. iv. 11).

THURSDAY, FEB. 4.—LEVITICUS XXII.

2.—Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, that they separate themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel. — This is rendered in the “Speaker’s Commentary,” “that they so abstain from touching the holy things of the children of Israel which they consecrate unto Me that they profane not my holy name;” and it adds in explanation, “No one of the sons of Aaron who was in any way ceremonially unclean was permitted to partake of the sacrificial food, or even to touch it.”

21.—“It shall be perfect to be accepted: there shall be no blemish therein.”—“The ‘holy, harmless, undefiled’ One is ever set before our eyes. The Lord does not weary of the sight; and surely sinners may never weary of the sight of one who brings them life by his death. So if the man brought any peace offering, there must be no blemish. A holy God will hold no fellowship with man but in a blameless way; no peace or reconciliation except through an unblemished sacrifice.” —A. Bonar.

32.—“I will be hallowed among the children of Israel: I am the Lord which hallow you.”—“These ceremonial matters against which the sons of Aaron were warned have their antitypes in the Christian economy. Had they to be warned against unholy contact? So have we. Had they to be warned against unholy alliance? So have we. Had they to be warned against all manner of ceremonial uncleanness? So have we to be warned against ‘all filthiness of the flesh and spirit’ (2 Cor. vii. 1). Were they shorn of many of their loftiest priestly privileges by bodily blemish and imperfect natural growth? So are we by moral blemish and imperfect spiritual growth. The more highly we estimate the blessings which attach to that priestly house of which we have been constituted members in virtue of our spiritual birth, the more carefully shall we guard against everything which might tend, in any wise, to rob us of their enjoyment.”—C. H. M.

FRIDAY, FEB. 5.—LEVITICUS XXIII.

2.—“Concerning the feasts of the Lord.”—R. V. reads “set feasts,” and in margin, “appointed seasons;” or, as “Speaker’s Commentary” would translate it, “appointed times.” These appointed seasons (not including the weekly Sabbath) resolve themselves into two groups connected with the Passover and the Day of Atonement respectively, and occurring in the first and seventh months of the year. First came the Passover, on the fourteenth day of the first month, followed closely by the Week of Unleavened Bread, and, at a distance of seven weeks further on, the Day of Pentecost. These three form the first group. Six months afterwards, on the tenth day of the seventh month, comes the most solemn day in the whole year—the Day of Atonement, preceded at ten days’ interval by the Feast of Trumpets (a sort of proclamation of the approach of another cycle of solemnities), and followed closely by another week’s feast—that of Tabernacles. This was the second group. Both the Passover and the Day of Atonement pointed typically to “the redemption that is in Christ Jesus,” but each presented a different aspect of that great transaction. The Passover, as the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, typified redemption from Satan’s power through the blood of Christ. The Day of Atonement, when the High Priest went within the vail, typified redemption to God by the same blood. Redemption from—redemption to—these were the two great lessons of the Jewish year; the first, with its accompanying “Feast of Unleavened Bread,” typifying that redemption from Satan’s power is followed by the practical putting away of sin; and the second, with its accompanying “Feast of Tabernacles” (recalling Israel’s sojourn in the desert), typifying that those that are redeemed to God by Christ’s blood, and brought nigh to Him, must live as strangers and pilgrims upon earth. These two aspects of redemption are brought out in 1 Pet. i. 18 and ii. 9—11.

17.—Two wave loaves . . . they shall be baked with leaven.—As the sheaf of firstfruits waved before the Lord “on the morrow after the Sabbath” (ver. 11) typified Christ in resurrection: so this Pentecostal offering of two loaves typified the Church, sanctified, indeed, by the Holy Ghost, as Pentecost (Acts ii.) bore witness, yet not without sin, as 1 John i. 8 testifies.

SATURDAY, FEB. 6.—LEVITICUS XXIV.

5.—Thou shalt take fine flour, &c.—“The shewbread is mentioned Exod. xxv. 30, xxxv. 13, xxxix. 36; it is not in this place designated by its peculiar name. The purpose of the passage is to give instructions for its preparation and treatment. The Hebrew name might fairly be rendered ‘Bread of the presence.’”—Sp. Com. It is rendered in the margin of R.V. “Presence bread.” It seems to have been intended to typify Israel as spread before the Lord for his food—comp. the expression, “the food of his God,” xxi. 17 (margin)—implying the satisfaction that Jehovah took in his people. The memorial of frankincense, which was burnt upon the altar (ver. 7), conveyed the same lesson.

6.—Two rows, six in a row.—“The Hebrew word might denote either row or pile. But the measure of the table and the testimony of Josephus favour the notion that the bread stood in two piles.”—Sp. Com.

17.—He that killeth any man shall surely be put to death.—The interposition of this and the following few verses between the sentence pronounced upon the blasphemer and its execution (ver. 23) is remarkable. It serves, at all events, to show very distinctly the difference between murder and the judicial punishment of death which was about to be executed. Whilst man was forbidden, under threat of death, to take away the life of his fellow, he was commanded to do so in the case of judicial guilt involving such a penalty. May not the ceremony of ver. 14, the putting the hands upon the head of the man about to be stoned, have pointed to the transfer of guilt which would attach to homicide as such to him whose sin called for death punishment? In other words, it may have been an outward symbolical expression of “Your blood be upon you, not upon us.” Israel, in putting to death the Son of God, instead of thus putting the guilt from them, took it upon themselves: “His blood be on us, and on our children.”

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carryingto the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. SHERRARD, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

"The sketch of the life of JAMES SCOTT, by the Rev. ANDREW BONAR, D.D., is interesting and full of pathetic beauty. Mr. Scott seems to have been a man of intense Christian enthusiasm. His life work, so early closed, began when other young men have scarcely realised responsibility, and was carried on with eager earnestness through the recent wonderful period of religious revival in Scotland. Side by side with Mr. Moody, Mr. Scott laboured till strength broke down and consumption closed the active, useful life at the age of thirty-eight. A helpful book for Christian workers."—Christian World.

"These expositions of, or rather lessons from, the Parables, have been written since A. L. O. E. went to India as a missionary. They were intended to aid in bringing Hindus and Mohammedans to the faith of Christ, and are written from an Oriental point of view. Nevertheless, English readers will enjoy and may profit by them. All will rejoice to receive a fresh work from the hands of so old a favourite as A. L. O. E."
The Record.

"The get-up of this volume is beautiful in every sense. Every parable is illustrated to the eye as well as to the heart, and we have seen no more perfect specimen of a gift book for this season."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"From Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT we have a most attractively-got-up and strikingly-illustrated volume by that most justly-popular writer for young people, A. L. O. E., called 'Pearls of Wisdom from the Parables of Christ.'"—Christian Miscellany.

"These Pearls are gathered from the Parables of Christ, and very gracefully arranged by this practised hand. The contents of this pretty volume were first addressed to natives of India, among whom A. L. O. E. has recently been labouring."—Bradford Observer.

"These are 'PEARLS' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books; and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work. We wish it the wide circulation it well deserves."—Christian Treasury.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE,

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds.

By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I.

AN ELEGANT GIFT BOOK.

Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

With Coloured Frontispiece, and

TWENTY-NINE OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."
Sword and Trowel.

"A beautiful little volume, printed in red and black, with numerous engravings. Will be found both interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy. One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday School Rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."—Christian Treasury.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily-written and prettily-illustrated work."
British Messenger.

"This book . . . is illustrated in very good style, the coloured frontispiece of the swallow being specially good. The list includes seagulls, peacocks, cuckoos, sparrows, ravens, and others."

HOUSE OF WAITING (29, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.) was instituted for the purpose of affording an inexpensive, and comfortable, and highly respectable home for governesses while seeking situations; for daily governesses, ladies of limited means, and lady nurses. Donations for the purchase of needed additions to the furniture are earnestly asked for by the Lady Superintendent.

CLAPHAM JUNCTION RAILWAY MISSION.—Towards the formation of a free lending library, and reading-room, an earnest appeal is made for gifts of sound religious, historical, and other suitable books; also funds for the same object, and an organ. This Mission is being connected with the parent society, Aldersgate-street. Parcels addressed to the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. W. H. Wrigley, New Wandsworth, will be duly acknowledged.

MRS. ALICE SHAW, 3, Crossthwaite-park, Kingston, co. Dublin, has established an "At Home" once a week, of her lady acquaintances to work for three hours in making dresses, boy suits, knitting socks and warm skirts, and other little garments for the children under twelve years old of those clergymen in country districts in Ireland whose incomes are dependent on the resources of the impoverished landlords and farmers of their parishes, and on an income under £200 a year. She is endeavouring to carry on the work this winter, but funds are sadly needed, and her own circle have emptied their wardrobes of suitable garments. Miss Annette Baker, 36, Hogarth-road, Kensington, will receive parcels.

THE WEATHER.

In civilised countries scarcely any more general and antiquated topic of conversation can be imagined than that of the weather, and yet the subject is not worn threadbare. In uncivilised countries, of course, weather changes make little difference, neither are animals under natural conditions much affected by climatic changes. This means that civilisation and sickness, or liability to sickness, go hand in hand. What an anomaly, and yet how true! George R. Sims has well put it in the following few lines: "It is the increased civilisation of this marvellous age which has made life a victory only for the strong, the gifted, and the specially blest, and left the weak, the poor, and the ignorant to work out in their proper persons the theory of the survival of the fittest, to the bitter end." Civilisation has given us warm socks and comfortable boots, and yet was there ever more complaining of cold feet and dread of suffering from the ill effects of cold and damp? Very few would have to complain of the after-effects of cold if a vigorous circulation were kept up during exposure. Nothing new in that proposition, says the reader; then, we reply, a knowledge of the disease does not lead to the cure. Nor need we go back to barbarism for the remedy: civilisation and health need not be antagonistic. Nature and art have propounded a means of keeping up a successful warfare against cold and damp, snow and rain, alternate fog and frost, to which we have recently been exposed, and the following will set forth the success which attends its application:—

Captain C. D. CAMPBELL (late H. M. I. N.), Oak Side, Box Grove Road, Guildford, Surrey.

OCTOBER 11, 1882.—"After an extended naval service of 40 years in the Indian Seas, also in Egypt and Arabia, with active engagements in the Indian Mutiny, the Bengal and Burman Wars, I was so far invalided as to be precluded from exposure to evening air. Twice I was given over while suffering from severe Bronchitis, about which time (six years ago) I tried your remedy, and, under God's blessing, I have had an almost entirely new lease of life through wearing your Appliances.

"I have had no cough or cold for a whole winter together, or the least indication of any tendency to Bronchitis. I have not spared myself in the least, and have been constantly subjected to the risks of hot class-rooms at night, and walking home one and a half miles in all weathers at 10 and 11 p.m.; giving lectures and taking meetings where I have to speak at some length, so that I may fairly say I have put the remedy to the full test. I am in the best of health, and in full vigour of life, such as I have not enjoyed for years during the winter weather.

"Contrast my former inability to be out in winter evenings with my present experience. On the terrible Tuesday of the snowstorm I had to make my way home at night, a mile and three-quarters from the station in the face of the gale, through drifts many feet deep, without meeting a single individual, and for five days that week I was out till 11 p.m. in different towns about here at our Science and Art Classes (of which I am secretary), walking home in cold and wet, yet never had more than a slight cold, which passed off within the 24 hours.

"I now weigh 4 lb. more than I have done for some years, and drive my velocipede or paddle my own canoe six miles an hour for pastime.

"My health is excellent for any exercise, swimming, boating, walking, and riding, in winter and summer. Many others have adopted your magnetic Treatment after witnessing the results in my case."

JUNE 19, 1883.—"You will be interested to hear that the poor old seaman at Brighton, Henry Abraham, who served under me, for whom you sent me a set of Appliances, has found the greatest relief and benefit from them. At first he was frightened at the idea of having to pay so much, when he could hardly get enough to live upon, and wrote urging me to take them back at once, but I persuaded him to try them, and the result is he now says he would not part with them for three times the money, as he is now able to stand the cold morning air at his coffee-stall without being chilled and racked with cold and phlegm as he used to be, and feels twice the man he was. Is not this excellent? He is so grateful, and thanks God for his mercy.

"I am able to report being quite well and hearty, and equal to any hard work. I have had for months past, meetings, lectures, canoe and tricycle trips at odd times, beside heaps of letters, which are perhaps the most fatiguing of all my daily work, which often requires me to be on my legs for many hours."

JAN. 8, 1885.—"I am happy to tell you I am keeping remarkably well, and active as ever, though I don't feel quite as I used to do; but at 72 I think we must not expect to be as we were at 21."

We only wish to educate Society to an intelligent understanding of the first principles of health. CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASES at ESHWINNING, near DURHAM.

Reported by Mr. ERNEST FOSTER, 18, WEST-TERRACE, ESHWINNING.

Since the case of Mr. Thomas Pope, reported in the spring of this year (a case of diseased lungs, which had been given up as past all human help), I have had much correspondence with Mr. E. Foster.

One case of importance was that of Mr. JAMES WOODWARD'S SON, of Quebec-street, Langley-park—a member of the Baptist Mission in that place. Disease had followed upon pleurisy in so decided a manner as to cause great anxiety to Mr. Foster, and others connected with the Mission. In a few months' time Mr. F. writes:—"I am glad to say Frank Woodward is now very well. The father now wishes to place his little girl under your kind care."

Another case is that of a daughter of the Mr. Thos. Pope above mentioned. The mother had died of Consumption. The girl was just showing unmistakable signs of her mother's complaint. Mr. Foster, writing me in March last about her, says:—"A few weeks ago she was hardly able to get out at all, but she has taken a bottle of your medicine, and is very much better." In the following May he writes:—"I am glad to tell you Mr. Pope's daughter is now quite well. Her father desired me to express his great thankfulness."

Several others whom Mr. E. Foster (like a good Samaritan) has been the means of helping by obtaining medicine for them, are referred to in his correspondence.

A Mr. W. WALKER, suffering with severe attack of ASTHMA, which the doctor attending him failed to relieve, was supplied with medicine at reduced cost, by means of which he got fairly well until the unfavourable weather of November last brought on a return of some of the symptoms, and he resumed the medicine, which had been left off too soon. Another (Mrs. OWENS) is referred to as having "found a great deal of good."

Mr. Foster himself has recently proved the value of my medicine. During the late election time, exposed alternately to heated rooms and inclement weather, he caught a severe cold. He says:—"I at once resorted to your medicine—its effects were wonderful. A few doses entirely set me up. I believe it to be a splendid invigorator of the system, and a sure cure for cold as well as for those complaints which you specially treat."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

A LIBERAL ALLOWANCE ON QUANTITIES FOR DISTRIBUTION.

At the Great Meeting at Exeter Hall on Monda January 18, on the occasion of the release of Mr. W T. STEAD from prison:—

Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES said:—

"Every one in that meeting who had not yet read Mrs. Butler's book on Rebecca Jarrett should read it without delay. It was the best book that had yet been produced in the course of this controversy. (Cheers.) It exposed the facts, and explained them, as no other book that he had read. It had put Rebecca Jarrett's conduct in a light in which no newspaper had been able to put it. (Cheers.) Mrs. Butler had not lost her faith in Rebecca Jarrett; and her opinion was worth more on such a question than the opinions of all the lawyers and all the journalists in the United Kingdom." (Cheers.)

Mr. W. T. STEAD said:—

"When Mr. Hugh Price Hughes was speaking, a all this crowded hall rang with a loud reverberation your cheers, I heard a sound that you did not he A mile from this place my accustomed ear heard sharp clangour of the prison bell sounding the hour repose in that felon's cell at Millbank. A mist pas before my eyes, in which all this cheering throng lost; and through the mist I saw in one of those bar and bolted cells, which lead from either side of stony corridor, a lonely, solitary form: and as she l down on her plank-bed for her night's rest, thanki God that one more day of her sentence had passed saw my victim—Rebecca Jarrett." SUSIE AND CHARLES H. SPURGEON.

NO living preacher has moved and had his being in such a bright blaze of world-wide publicity as the famous pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, whose portrait, with that of Mrs. Spurgeon, graces this page To attempt any adequate sketch of his unique career within the narrow limits of our space would be almost to insult the intelligence of our readers. Nor is it needful that we should essay such a hopeless task. Paying the penalty of greatness, Mr. Spurgeon's every public act, outside of the merest daily routine, has for many years been faithfully chronicled by the Press, sacred and secular alike. He is as much a public possession, and his history during later years has been as familiar to the reading community, as that of the august lady who sits on the throne of these realms.

To our younger readers, however, a few details of Mr. Spurgeon's early life and ministry will probably be acceptable and full of interest. He comes of a staunch Puritan stock, and is the greatest of a long unbroken line of preachers, that bids fair to stretch down the vista of the future—as far, we may hope, as it does backward into the past. "The great-grandfather of Pastor Spurgeon," says Mr. Stevenson, in his excellent sketch of the Pastor's "Life and Work," published recently, "was a pious man, and ordered his household according to the will of God. From that day to this their family has never wanted a man to stand before God in the service of the sanctuary." It is a most interesting and well-known fact, which may, however, be here put on record, that three generations of preaching Spurgeons are at this moment engaged in that service—Pastor Spurgeon's father, his brother, his two sons, and himself.

The Essex village of Kelvedon has the honour of being the birthplace of C. H. Spurgeon. After a childhood and boyhood of singular promise, we find him, at the age of fifteen or thereabouts, as usher in a school at Newmarket. There, and at that early age, he espoused and publicly professed the Baptist principles with which his ministry has been so conspicuously identified. The story of his conversion, which took place shortly before, is told with some fulness in Mr. Stevenson's book, in Mr. Spurgeon's own words. Suffice it to say, that after six months' soul anxiety, as deep as that which is recorded of another famous Puritan—John Bunyan—he chanced one snowy Sunday to enter a Primitive Methodist Chapel in the town of Colchester. There he heard a sermon from the words, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth," which was instrumentally the messenger of peace to his soul, and started him on that narrow way into which, by voice and printed page, he has allured so many thousands of his fellow-mortals. Evangelists, who would illustrate the simplicity of God's way of salvation, could not do better than make frequent use of this incident, fraught with such far-reaching issues in the religious history of this century.

The story of Mr. Spurgeon's first public discourse has often been told, but we may re-tell it briefly in his own words, spoken in 1873. In introducing the text, "Unto you therefore which believe He is precious," he said:—"I remember well that more than twenty-two years ago the first attempted sermon that I ever made was from this text. I had been asked to walk out to the village of Taverham, about four miles from Cambridge, where I then lived, to accompany a young man whom I supposed to be the preacher for the evening, and on the way I said to him I trusted God would bless him in his labours. 'Oh dear,' said he, 'I never preached in my life; I never thought of doing such a thing. I was asked to walk with you, and I sincerely hope God will bless you in your preaching.' 'Nay,' said I, 'but I never preached, and I don't know that I could do anything of the sort.' We walked together till we came to the place, my inmost soul being all in a trouble as to what would happen. When we found the congregation assembled, and no one else there to speak of Jesus, though I was only sixteen years of age, as I found I was expected to preach, I did preach, and from the text I have just given." There are many to-day who would like to read that sermon, but the youthful preacher, in his round jacket and turn-down collar, had not then made a practical acquaintance with the stenographic fraternity, and so we presume his first sermon lives only in the memories of those who heard it, and in the wonderful ministry which has been its outcome.

After a short but markedly successful pastorate at Waterbeach, also near Cambridge, begun in his eighteenth year, Mr. Spurgeon was invited, after trial, to take a few months' supply at the Baptist Church, New Park-street, Southwark. This had been one of the most ancient, and formerly one of the most influential churches of that denomination in the metropolis; in the good providence of God it was destined to see days of prosperity and success before which its past would fade into insignificance, as the light of the pale moon vanishes at the rising of the sun. The letter of Mr. Spurgeon, in which he formally accepted the unanimous call to the pastorate after a three months' probation, appears in Mr. Stevenson's sketch, and a very remarkable production it is for a young man of scarce twenty years old; it has in it all "the promise and potency" of his subsequent career. From the same source we quote the following paragraphs, which will suffice to tell all that need be told as to one feature of Mr. Spurgeon's London ministry, which has now extended over a period of nearly thirty-two years:—

"Before three months of the new pastorate had expired, the fame of the young minister had spread over the metropolis; crowds of people flocked to his chapel at every service, and the newspapers week by week for some time were asking, Who is this Spurgeon? For a long time that question was a puzzle to many minds; but one thing was certain, he had secured the ear and the attention of the public, who waited upon his ministry by thousands.

"From the commencement of his labours in the metropolis he had a happy manner of turning to good account passing events. Great national events, royal marriages, deaths, or public calamities, furnished in their turn subjects on which he spoke, and out of which he drew lessons of practical good for his hearers. This disposition he manifested before his sermons began to be regularly published. In the autumn of his first year's pastorate he preached a sermon from the words, 'Is it not wheat harvest to-day?' The sermon attracted attention, was much talked about by his hearers, and during the following week it appeared in The Penny Pulpit, under the title of 'Harvest Time,' and had a large sale. This led the publisher shortly afterwards to print another of his sermons, under the title of 'God's Providence.' The public at once took to his sermons, and by the end of the year about a dozen had thus been issued. This greatly increased his popularity; for many who had not heard him, read those sermons, were interested in them, and soon found opportunity to go and hear him. The demand for his sermons being considerably greater than for the sermons of other ministers then being published, Mr. Spurgeon made arrangements with the first friend he met in London, who was a printer, and a member of his church, to commence the publication of one sermon of his every week, beginning with the new year, 1855. Through the good providence of God the sermons have appeared continuously, week by week, without interruption, with a steady, improving, and large circulation, which is in itself a marked indication of divine favour. No other minister the world has ever known has been able to produce one printed sermon weekly for so many years. The work still goes on with unabated favour and unceasing interest. Their present sale is 25,000 copies weekly."

How, through good and ill report, the fame of the young preacher spread far and wide; how in 1856 he was married; how the New Park-street Chapel, though enlarged, soon became altogether inadequate to hold the congregations that flocked to hear him; how he preached to vast multitudes, now in Exeter Hall and anon in the Surrey Gardens Music Hall, besides filling engagements in all parts of the country; how the great Tabernacle in Newington-causeway was built, paid for, and opened in 1861; how the Pastors' College arose and flourished, and sent forth its preachers; how the Metropolitan Tabernacle gradually became the centre of the manifold and varied Christian activities that now cluster around it; how Mr. Spurgeon blossomed into an editor and a most voluminous author, as well as the first preacher of his generation; how his two sons were thrust into the work of the Gospel ministry, and his wife founded and developed her marvellous "Book Fund;"—all these, and many other matters, are succinctly set forth in the book to which we have referred; in the Pastor's own illustrated history of the Metropolitan Tabernacle; and in other works issued by his publishers, Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster, Paternoster-buildings.

The most interesting book by the late Mr. Paxton Hood: LAMPS, PITCHERS, AND TRUMPETS (Hodder & Stoughton), published originally in 1867, was chiefly composed of lectures delivered to the students at the Pastors' College. To one of these lectures Mr. Hood appended a "Pulpit Monograph" on Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, in which he essayed at some length to account for the wonderful success of which the Metropolitan Tabernacle was the outward sign. Some extracts from Mr. Hood's sketch will be appropriate here. The reader of course will bear in mind that it was penned nineteen years ago:—

"It may be safely affirmed that never, in any period of the history of the Christian Church, did any man rise and hold in sustained attention and active Christian useful labour a weekly congregation certainly not numbering less than from five to six thousand persons, with no popular prestige, no music to aid, no robes to give effect, no ceremonials of service—plain, simple, and unadorned. Then there are his sermons, translated into the principal languages of Europe, and some, we believe, into the dialects of Asia; circulating largely throughout the United States, throughout the English Colonies; and the preacher, after all this extraordinary achievement, after having enrolled in his church upwards of three thousand members, having founded his college, and poured his young followers—themselves a sort of rough, earnest, Protestant-preaching friars—over the whole country; after having been abused and assailed on every hand, and having received and worn the still more fatal and dangerous commendations and flatteries of—perhaps it is not too much to say—millions, still at this hour in the years of early manhood. We are not aware that the records of any church or sect, or of all church history, furnish an analogous instance to such a phenomenon. . . .

"There can be no doubt that the voice accounts for much; it is a voice of astonishing compass, a voice the waves from which roll with astonishing ease over the most immense company, full, sweet, and clear—clear and ringing as a bell—a voice like the man and the matter, independent of most nervous impressions, and all nervous agitations. It is a clarion of a voice; other voices of orators have pierced us more, have possessed more accent, have been able to whisper better, but we never knew nor conceived a voice with such thunderous faculty. . . . Mr. Spurgeon might possess many of his mental attributes, but, manifestly, this power of being easily heard, of always striking the right pitch, so that he compasses immense assemblies, is one great element of success in holding the attention of masses of people. . . .

"Mr. Spurgeon is evidently a born preacher—absorbs into his mind readily all that he sees, reads, or hears, and talks it all forth again with amazing fulness and freshness. His memory, that wondrous assimilative power, is something prodigious. It is not difficult to him to talk at any time, to any length, although his wisdom has always been shown in the moderation with which he has taxed the time and patience of his audiences. This talking power is another reason of his great success. It has precluded, in his case, the necessity of great preparation. . . . . Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, printed or not, we know to be comparatively impromptu—i.e., he is in fact always preparing; texts and thoughts are always coming; and the opportunities with them for binding them into sheaves. The waters of experience are always flowing, and he is always filling. There are seasons, of course, hours—perhaps even on the Saturday—a day, for the receiving, remembering, and marshalling into order; but it is in that infinite fulness of ready talk, that copiousness of words reflecting moods, illustrations, homely proverbs, household usages, anecdotes, never far removed from the knowledge and ordinary sense of the people, that we find the second great cause of his fame. . . .

"A third element of his power I take to be that he is not more extensively heard than understood. His words have no peculiar selectness of subtle and charming propriety like that which pleases so much in the masters of melodious composition. Twelve years since, in a paper I wrote upon him, I likened his style to that of William Cobbett. The likeness would be still more apposite now; it is a level style on the whole, though, of course, we are prepared to note great exceptions. It is a thoroughly English style. It rolls, yet the sentences are never long; they never will be where the wheels of the mind are running swiftly, and the furnace of the soul is hot. . . .

"It should be remembered that what constitutes a preacher is his power to gather, and to hold the people interested while he speaks; to use not select, but average words; to meet average and every-day moods. I have heard of preachers who have addressed themselves to the two or three, the half-dozen cultivated and very thoughtful persons in their audience. It is a common, but a great mistake; Christ did not so. It is a practice which must ensure the defeat of the preacher. Much wiser of the two was that preacher who always selected the man whom he thought the most stupid in his congregation, and determined to use such a variety of plain words, such a nimble recurrence of level, apposite, easily-understood illustrations, such a succession of appeals to his obtuse conscience, that he should be left no loophole of escape. . . .

"Of Mr. Spurgeon it is remarkable that while the masses of the rudest and most uninformed throng round him, he numbers in his church artists, men of the richest taste, and has had the personal friendship of, and a delighted listener in, the greatest master living of a glowing, gorgeous, and rich English style, John Ruskin. It arises from the reasons we have indicated; for a conscience earnest, burning, and impressed to aim at truth, at conscience, at what is supposed to be most ordinary in human nature, is to reach that which is common to all, and interesting to all the truly human in man."

Quite a library of Spurgeonic literature has arisen, all of it marked by the strong characteristics of the illustrious author. The publishers' catalogue is before us, and if we begin to particularise we shall scarce know where to stop. In the region of "Homiletics" we have the thirty volumes of the "Tabernacle Pulpit," besides many volumes of selected sermons. We have several extracted volumes of "Illustrations for Preachers and Teachers," and yet others of "Gems" and "Gleanings." There are his well-known companion devotional books, "Morning by Morning" and "Evening by Evening," and also his "Interpreter," all of them prized in many a Christian household. There are his four volumes of "Lectures to Students." There are his popular "Talks" and "Pictures" by "John Ploughman." There is the monthly Sword and Trowel, in which the editor's fresh and breezy utterances are always a chief attraction. And, lastly, passing over many minor publications, there is Mr. Spurgeon's magnum opus, "The Treasury of David," of which the seventh and last volume has lately gone forth, and from which we recently made a timely and telling extract. As we scan the catalogue our wonderment grows at the exceeding magnitude and multiplicity of the works that God has enabled this one man to write, and plan, and perform. We can only say, This also cometh from the Lord, who is mighty in counsel and excellent in working.

For the wonderful story of Mrs. Spurgeon's BOOK FUND we must refer the reader to the most pathetic and beautiful records of that work published annually for the last few years by Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster (6d. each). It deserves a whole article to itself, but these fascinating volumes are within the reach of all.

To the deep sorrow of all who know him, personally or by reputation, Mr. Spurgeon has been a great sufferer these past years from a painful rheumatic affection that sometimes lays him completely prostrate. He has lately been sojourning under the sunny skies of Southern France, seeking restoration and fresh supplies of health for future service. That restoration, we rejoice to say, has been in a measure granted, and next Sunday he hopes to stand once more in his accustomed place.

TEXAS EVANGELISTS IN SCOTLAND.

THE two Texas evangelists, Major Penn and Mr. G. R. Cairns, are comparative strangers in this country, but on the other side of the Atlantic, and especially in their own State, they are well known and highly thought of by the Churches. Major Penn was a lawyer in good standing, but twelve years ago the Lord called him out to tell the story of the Cross to his fellow-men. Although the call necessitated sacrifice on his part, he cheerfully obeyed, and went out on the lines of faith and love. The Lord has given him many souls for his hire. Mr. Cairns, who accompanies him, is a good singer, and some of the old favourite hymns as well as new ones from Major Penn's own book, have proved a great attraction in the meetings.

Having received invitations from friends in this country, they came over here in November, and began work in Galashiels. These services were owned of God in the conversion of many souls. At the beginning of the year they were invited to Glasgow in connection with the Orphan Home Mission, and for a fortnight conducted meetings every night. Major Penn handles the word of God faithfully. Many souls have been awakened, and not a few professed to enter into liberty. From the Orphan Home the evangelists went to John Knox-street Baptist Church, and have just closed a successful mission there. They have now left Glasgow for Nottingham. The sympathy and prayers of Christians are requested for them in their further work in this country.

HO! HO!

BY CHARLES H. SPURGEON.*

THE Gospel provisions are free to all thirsty souls. Do notice the words of the text—"Ho!" That is like the cry of a salesman at a fair. He calls out to passers-by, "Ho! look! listen! turn hither! Here is a bargain; something worth your attention!" So God condescends, as it were, to put it to those who are busy with this world's cares, its business and its barter, its buying and selling. Ho! ho! ho! here is something worth your minding, ye that would be rich at little cost, ye that are in want, ye that are in need, ye that would find something that shall exactly meet your case. Ho!—this is the Gospel note; a short, significant appeal, urging you to be wise enough to attend to your own interests. Oh, the condescension of God! that He should, as it were, become a beggar to his own creature, and stoop from the magnificence of his glory to cry, "Ho!" to foolish and ungrateful men!

Notice the next word, "Ho! every one;" not some of you that thirst, but every one—you rich ones, you poor ones; you great men, you little men; you old people, you young folk. "Ho! every one that thirsteth." Now it does not say, 'Every one, except—except—except—." No, no. Here is an amnesty published without exception or exemption. Here is an invitation given to every longing, thirsty one, and not a single name struck out. "Ho! every one that thirsteth."

And then it is added "come." Not "make yourselves ready," not "bring your money," or 'prove your title," but "come!" Come just as you are. The coming is believing, trusting. Rely upon Christ; come to the waters; come now. Read the invitation for yourselves; it is written in the present tense. Obey the summons; come, come at once—come. What though you have no money, you may come and take a drink, for it is freely provided for you. As I walked over a long sandy road one day in summer, when the weather was sultry, and the heat, far beyond our common experience in this country, was almost tropical, I saw a little stream of cool water, and being parched with thirst, I stooped down and drank. Do you think I asked anybody's leave, or inquired whether I might drink or not? I didn't know who it belonged to, and I didn't care. There it was, and I felt if it was there it was enough for me. Nobody was there to call out "Ho!" My inward craving called out "Ho!" I was thirsty, and water was there, inviting to my taste. I noticed after I had drunk that there were two poor tramps coming along, and they went down, and drank in like manner. I didn't find anybody marching them off to prison. There was the stream. The stream being there, and the thirsty men being there, the supply was suited to their need, and they promptly partook of it.

How strange it is that when God has provided the Gospel, and men want it, they should require somebody to call out to them, "Ho! ho! ho!" and then they will not come after all. Oh! if they were a little more thirsty, if they did but know their need more, if they were convinced more of their sin, then they would scarcely want an invitation, but the mere fact of a supply would be sufficient for them, and they would come and drink, and satisfy the burning thirst within.

Now, although the Gospel provision is free to all thirsty souls, there are many who cannot believe this. Some cannot believe it because they stumble at the doctrines. What doctrine affrights thee, dear friend? Is it the doctrine of election? Well now, I believe the doctrine of election. It is a precious doctrine, and let me tell you, dear friend, that the doctrine of election shuts nobody out, though it shuts a great many in. "But I may not come and trust Christ?" How do you know? God says you may, and He tells you you shall; in fact He says, "He that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed," thus making it a sin not to believe; so you really have such a right to believe that it becomes even your duty. Whatever the doctrine of election may be, or may be meant to be, it is quite certain that it cannot contradict any plain, practical direction of Scripture. Here is a plain text, which no one can gainsay, "Whosoever believeth in Him is not condemned." If, then, you believe on Jesus Christ, you are not condemned, election or no election. But, let me tell you, if you believe in Christ you are one of his elect, and it is because He elected you that you come to believe in Him; it is because He chose you that you are led to desire Him, and made to accept Him. Let not that doctrine ever terrify you, or provoke your distrust, for, if you rightly understand the revelation, it is rather a finger beckoning to Christ than a spectre that should intimidate you, or drive you away from Him.

Then your spirit of legality will tell you that the Gospel is not free to you. Why not? "Oh, because I am not fit to receive it." This, I say, is a spirit of legality, and is clearly contrary to the Gospel. There is no fitness wanted to receive Christ. You see men go to wash. What is the fitness for washing? Why, to be dirty; and that is no fitness. All the fitness a sinner can have for Christ is simply to need Christ. If you are empty you are fit for Christ, and He will come and heal you. If you are poor, you are fit for Christ to make you rich; he that is sick is fit for a physician; he that is needy is fit for pity; he that is guilty is fit for mercy. I beseech you, get rid of that pestilent and soul-destroying idea of fitness for Christ. All black and unwashed, you may come and wash in the fountain which He has opened. Let nothing, then, by way of legality, make you think that the Gospel provisions are not free to you.

But what if your unbelief should tell you that the provisions of grace are not for you because you have been such a great sinner? Did not Jesus come into the world to save the very greatest of sinners? "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men." You may have soared as high as the mountains in your sin, but God's flood, like that of Noah, can go over the tops of all your iniquities. Do not limit the Holy One of Israel by your unbelief. Believe Him, and you shall be forgiven, even though you were worse than you are.

Ah, brethren! whatever the devil may say, and whatever your irritated conscience may say against the freeness of God's mercy, I tell you solemnly it is as free to every thirsty one as the drinking fountain in the street corner; as free as the air that blows over the mountain and into the valleys; free to every lung that breathes. So free is the mercy of God. God stints not his mercy when men need it. Be they but thirsty, let them but long for it, and they shall have it. If there be any difficulty it is on their part, not on God's part. You are not straitened in Him; you are straitened in yourselves. Oh! guilty sinners, if ye find not mercy it is not because God is unwilling to give, but because you will not trust Him, because you will not think that He can save you. The Prodigal never could have believed his father's heart to be so kind as it was, had he not tried and proved it. Come and try my Master's heart. I tell you He will blot out your sins like a cloud, and your transgressions like a thick cloud. Only do rest on Him, and you shall find Him better than ever you dreamed Him to be. As for my words, they cannot set Him forth. They fall flat to the ground. May you be brought to try Him, and you will be safe to find that He is a mighty Saviour.

* From STORM SIGNALS: Sermons preached on Sunday and Thursday evenings at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Thoroughly characteristic and rousing discourses; splendidly suited for circulation among the careless, the doubting, and the anxious. 3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.

The provisions of grace must be free to thirsty ones; why else were they provided? Wherefore should there be a Saviour for sinners if God will not give salvation to sinners? Why those wounds, why that bloody sweat, why that thorn crown, why those expiring throes, if still God will not receive sinners? The dying Saviour is the best answer to the cavillings of unbelievers. He must be willing to forgive who spared not his own Son. If the Gospel were not free to thirsty ones, wherefore is it published? If it were not meant for you, why are we bidden to tell it you, and to continue sounding it in your ears? If it were meant for a few in a corner, why publish it in the streets? Why gather the crowds together, as we are bound to do, and find out those in the highways and hedges, with a mandate to compel them to come in? Why do all this if God intends to bar the door in their faces? The very fact that the Gospel is preached to the sinner, is God's love-token that He will accept you if you will come to Him. Why a mercy-seat? Why are you allowed to pray, why are you bidden to pray, if God will not hear? This were a mockery, of which you cannot accuse God, that He should encourage a sinner to pray with no intention of hearing him. Let me ask you again—how is it that others have found God's mercy so free when they have come and trusted Christ? Why that multitude in heaven, all once as guilty as you are, but all having washed their robes in the precious blood? Why those on earth who have found peace? They had nought to recommend them any more than you have. They will all tell you that they came just as they were, in all their rags and beggary, and Jesus did not reject them. No, glory be to his name, He received us freely! Come, then, fellow-sinners, come! May the eternal Spirit draw you now! Even now come ye to the waters. Though you have no money and no price, and no goodness, come and rest in Jesus, and find everlasting life. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." That is my message. There is your welcome. Come; do come. So my errand will speed. So your souls will be blest. So God's name will be glorified.

CAUTION.—We again warn our readers against a woman who, under various names, calls on ladies in reply to advertisements, and, after telling them some untruthful story, in which she perhaps mentions some well-known name as a reference, pretends that she has no money to pay her fare home. Telegraph to the referee while she waits, and if the reply be unsatisfactory, act accordingly. The Apostle says the law is made for such. A correspondent writes to us that she has lately been victimised, and a similar but unsuccessful attempt was made by a second person.

THE PRESENT DISTRESS.

FROM all quarters of our city where the poor do congregate, the cry of the hungry and the naked reaches us, through the sympathetic appeals of those who are working among them, and doing their best to meet the pressing need. A batch of six of these appeals comes from the East-end; we can but give the facts in brief, trusting that many hearts may be moved to crave a share in this Christlike work:—

Miss Child, of the Welcome Home, 173, St. George's-street, E., is giving soup suppers as often as her means will allow, to those "destitute and homeless sons of the sea" who crowd about her doors, in this time of general depression in the shipping trade. She will gladly continue the work of relief, while she can and the need exists.

Mr. C. Coleman, of the Dock Labourers' Mission, 26, Chamber-street, E., writes that he is straining every nerve to alleviate the sorrows of the thousands of unemployed in that part of the city. A friend, he says, went down lately to the Docks, and was so impressed with the spectacles of want and misery that greeted him that he sent £10 to Mr. Coleman by next post to help in this work of feeding his hungry brethren. There is room for many to follow such a good example.

Mrs. Adamson, of the Vicarage, Old Ford, E., says that the inclement weather and the trade depression have made matters in that parish deplorable beyond expression. She is endeavouring to stem the tide of hunger, and asks that some good Samaritan should give her 300 tin pannikins and 300 spoons for the soup kitchen and the destitute childrens' dinners.

Rev. J. C. Sowerbutts, 44, Campbell-road, Bow, E., who is labouring in the same district, affirms that the poverty is heartrending. He wants the wherewithal to provide food and fuel and clothing to those whom he visits.

Mr. B. Wire, Superintendent of the Abbey-street Sunday-schools and Mission, Bethnal-green, and his helpers, are providing free breakfasts for the poor children who have too often to go to the Board Schools on an empty stomach, because their parents have got no work to do. He makes a piteous appeal for help, to enable him to carry on this effort, and would also be glad of boots, shoes, and left-off clothing, for distribution among these unfortunate bairns.

Mr. George Fuller, of the Destitute Children's Friend Mission (1, Follett-street, Poplar, E.), asserts that in his neighbourhood many homes are without fire or food, and mothers are weeping because their children are in sore want. With the help of kind friends he is striving to wipe away the maternal tear and to satisfy the cravings of these human "robins," especially the children of the widows who have a hard struggle for life with the breadwinner gone. He wants to give more dinners and more garments, but he must first get them, or the money to purchase them.

A work of relief is going on among the unemployed in the region of the New Cut, in connection with the Working Men's Mission Hall, Collingwood-street. Messrs. Young, 16, Queen-street, New Cut, Lambeth, are the conductors of this mission.

Mr. George Lawrence, of "The Welcome," Cardiff, finds much misery among seamen in that port, and is trying to relieve it; he needs help to continue the work.

On Wednesday, last week, a meat tea was given to unemployed dock labourers at the Millwall Hall of the North-east London Gospel Mission. Mr. William Chorley, 2, Marquess Grove, Canonbury, N., says: "We are now giving a limited number of mid-day meals four days per week to the poor hungry fellows found waiting around the dock gates at Millwall. Further help will be welcome."

We ought to add that all these friends assure us they minister to the needy ones around them the Bread of Life as well as the bread that perisheth.

"GOD'S FAITHFULNESS" is the title of a new monthly magazine, "showing the Lord's work in connection with the South of England Christian Vigilance and Girls' Rescue Association." The first number contains some simple and touching incidents in prose and verse. Pervaded as it is by the right spirit, this little paper should be useful to interest many in a cause from which flesh and blood too often shrink. It can be obtained for 1s. 6d. a year from Mr. W. F. Day, Norwood House, King's road, Reading.—The Sentinel.

A SERMON ABOUT THE SNOW.

BY H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

HOW it falls! Not in torrents like the summer rain; not in smiting strength like the terrible hail—but softly, in feathery crystals, light as down, spread out and open like exquisite foliage, flake on flake, so soft and light that it hurts no blade of grass or lingering leaf, but robes them in the raiment of winter loveliness.

What is it like? Think! When does it fall? Not in the time of verdant spring; not when the earth is smiling in summer beauty, or dressed in autumn's many-coloured robe; no, but in the day of winter's nakedness. When the leaves are gone and the flowers have vanished and the glory of the harvest is departed, then, as a veil over earth's blackness and deformity, softly and silently falls heaven's mantle and robes the world in bridal white. Cannot you see what it is like? Do you not know that nature is a parable? That it is an image and reflection of things spiritual, or of things which belong to the world you cannot see, but can feel within you and around?

What is it like—that snow? It is like God's mantle fallen from the skies. We are like the naked earth—dark, deformed, and dead. But lo! His salvation has come down to us! His righteousness has descended. He sends his Son; He speaks his word; and lo! we who receive that salvation; we who believe that word; we who welcome that Saviour, are justified. What is that? Being arrayed in spotless white!—made white as snow; yea, whiter than the very snow itself—spotless, blameless; no sin imputed; no fault reckoned; looked at as though we had never sinned, and treated as though we had never become defiled and guilty.

God's mantle fallen from the skies! That is what we find in the Gospel. Look at Isa. lv. Read there about the rain and the snow, and about forgiveness. Read about God's thoughts and ways. They are not like ours. They are as much higher than our's as He Himself is higher than we are. How then can we get his thoughts? How far away they are! He says, "I will give you my thoughts! I will tell you my ways! You shall know them." So He speaks his Word! As the rain and snow it descends from heaven; it comes down to earth; it came down of old in the days of Moses, and David, and the Prophets; and it came down later on in the person and ministry of Jesus Christ. Earth cannot climb to heaven, so heaven has come down to earth! God has revealed Himself to ruined man, as our Life and our Righteousness! Welcome that Word! Do you understand? Take the gift! He who clothes the naked wintry earth with virgin whiteness, clothes you with a better and more enduring robe of spotless righteousness, if you but welcome it!

TRUMPET CALLS TO BRITAIN'S SONS.

LETTERS FROM STANLEY SMITH AND C. T. STUDD.

THE following letters, recently received by a Christian student at the University of Edinburgh, will tell their own triumphant story; they ought to be as the beacon fires of the olden time, calling the scattered hosts of the Lord's redeemed to rally to the fight:—

Ping-yang-fu, Shansi, North China, Nov. 3.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—Here we are, Charley Studd and I, together at last after a long absence, he having arrived here on October 29 from Hanchung Fu. We have from time to time been greatly cheered in hearing of the Lord's dealings with you all. How greatly the Lord seems to have blessed Professor Drummond's words. I do so thank God for him.

Well, I can testify that Jesus satisfies. "Oh, how He loves." Here is a good, simple problem —an equation: The Father's love to Christ = Christ's love to us. I believe it to be a good receipt for a cold heart. It is, I find, a most precious side of truth to dwell on the Church's preciousness to Christ; and of course our individual preciousness as members of that beloved Bride. "Let Me see thy face, let Me hear thy voice," says the Christ in his Song of Songs; and whereas the Church says, "Thy love is better than wine," the Lord says, "How much better is thy love than wine!" Do those children of God who walk at a distance from Him realise that they are not only making themselves losers, but Him—for their presence and nearness are precious to Him. Alas! that we should be so blind to the character of our glorious God and Father and Saviour! See, for instance, how constantly "Thou God seest me" is quoted—utterly in a wrong sense. God only "saw" Hagar to bless her, not to pick faults (Gen. xvi. 13).

Now let me exhort you, beloved brother, and let me in fancy (for in fact I could not have your answer for nearly six months) hear you in the same way exhorting me, one word—"Abide in Christ." That is the Christian's compendium. Such a blessed thought to me, only comparatively lately brought home with power, is that the Father is the Husbandman. "Of God are ye in Christ Jesus." And He will see to it that we are kept abiding. Indeed, "apart from Him we can do nothing." May the Lord teach me this lesson far more deeply. Oh my soul! dost thou really assent to these propositions—

> Apart from Christ thou art nothing,
> Apart from Christ thou knowest nothing,
> Apart from Christ thou canst do nothing, except oppose the will of God? Although I believe the Lord would have us know what we are apart from Christ, I believe He would seldom have us dwell on it. To be occupied with bad self is about as bad as to be occupied with good self.

The Lord has led us through strange experiences, and we have had very fierce assaults of the devil. But, blessed be God, He has brought us through, and we are rejoicing in Him. Oh, to have "self" well nailed up on the tree; and when the world, flesh, and devil pass by wagging their heads and bidding it come down, that the Lord in his grace would keep it up there. And then, as our old man is crucified with Him, we abiding in Him can bring forth fruit unto God. I know most Christians assent with the head to the propositions before-named. And yet, practically, how many times we give our opinions, and do things without seeking his guidance. At least, when I say "we," I mean I fear I do.

Well, my brother, the time is short. Oh, "tell it out" while you have breath, that the Lord is King! I exhort you, do not forget to praise. What heaps of reasons there are for it. Let us cultivate a grateful spirit. "Let the people praise Thee, O God; then shall the earth bring forth her increase, and all the ends of the world fear Him." What shall we render to the Lord for all his benefits? Shall we sacrifice this or that? Shall we consecrate? Shall we give? The Lord does not say so, speaking by his Spirit through the Psalmist. He teaches him to say, "I will take the cup of salvation." The way to return thanks to our God for benefits is to "take" more. He delights to give, and his last action on the earth was to lift up his hands and bless.

Love to all the Christians. It will be good up above. Yours in Him,

STANLEY P. SMITH.

Ping-yang, Nov. 4.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—Isn't this simply glorious? Stanley Smith and I, after six months' separation, are again united, praise God! It was good of you to send that nice letter, telling of all the good things the Lord has done through you all. I did clap my hands, and shout with triumph. "The Lord reigneth," and no mistake. But that is to be only the thin end of the wedge that is to stir the young men of the world. The Lord can do it easily enough; nothing is too hard for Him. I am sure we want the young men to be saved; then how much more does Jesus long for it. Let us just yield to Him and trust in Him, and He will do it sharp enough. I believe the way is to believe. Impossibilities have no place in the real Christian soldier's vocabulary. No, we only know that "all things are possible." Some of us have only the jawbone of an ass; but oh, what a mighty weapon that is, when surrendered to the Lord Jesus! It beats a whole battery of scientific artillery, whose management is kept in human hands. Come along, then; let us go forward, some of us with asses' jawbones, some with empty pitchers with lights inside; others with better weapons, may be, but we won't go with anything that is not wholly consecrated.

Just look how some armies of the world have gone forth to battle, how they have longed for the fight, how confident, though they could only hope for victory. We Christians have certain victory before us; yet how many hang back, how many want to be mere camp followers, taking the spoil, but not fighting the Lord's battles. Let us not be camp followers; let us be well girded, and ever ready to wield the sword of the Spirit. It is only a very short campaign, too, before the final victory and everlasting reward; then we shall see our great loving General in all his beauty and splendour, and how we will shout and sing his praises. But had we not better be getting some practice for it down here? I am more sure than ever since coming to China that the reason why so many get dead and cold is that they refuse to obey Paul's command, "Rejoice in the Lord always." I am sure the devil is always trying to keep one from rejoicing in Jesus, and especially out here in China. I now more than ever realise that the joy of the Lord is our strength. Out here one finds the temptations are far stronger and more subtle than at home. You see, this is the devil's stronghold (but, praise God, it won't be for long). Temptations are of a different kind, too, as a rule.

You will be glad to hear that Stanley Smith can speak Chinese pretty well now; he took the meeting last Sunday, and the Lord spoke through him for half an hour, praise God! I am sure the Lord is going to do great things for us soon, and He will make the heathen acknowledge it, too: one often feels out here how the devil tries to get one depressed or cold, but the Lord is too strong for him, and so are we if we are abiding in Him, but not otherwise. Remember our temptations, and pray for us, as we do for you all.

Your letter reached me when going up the Han. Stanley Smith, Hoste, Cassells, and Beauchamp later on, went up to Chefoo, and on here, vid Tientsin, Pekin, Taiquen, whilst the Polhill-Turners and I went up the Yangtze-kiang to Hankow, 700 miles, in four days by steamer, and thence up the Han to Hanchung by river boat. It was 1100 miles in four months, and those the hottest of the year; it was real baking weather, but the Lord kept us in good health. We had grand times together, the three of us, all day long reading the Word and prayer. Then the last month Mr. Parker came, and took charge of the other boat, and joined, heart and soul, with us. I feel sure a happier seven never walked; it was a grand time, and the Lord taught us many things. We waited on the Lord, believing He would teach us, as He taught the 120 at Pentecost, and fulfil in us Mark xvi. 17, 18. He has now, after some time, shown us that at present He means us to study; they did not understand us at all at first at Hanchung—thought us idle fanatics, I fancy—but the Lord has now removed the misunderstanding, praise God.

The Polhill-Turners are still in Hanchung. I came on here to meet Mr. Taylor. After a month's journey over mountain and plain, I arrived here five or six days ago. I can tell you I did praise the Lord for bringing me among these real live boys again: I found them all well, and flooding the town and country round with tracts, &c. We are as happy a party of the Lord's children as you could find anywhere, and we are just longing for the time when He will open all our mouths to tell of Jesus' dying love to these poor Chinese in their own tongue. There are two grand Chinamen working the country round about this place, who are doing real red-hot work. One brought in six or seven young converts the other day, and they obeyed Paul pretty well, for they sang nearly all day and night. This is a real live work. If China is to be turned upside down, the missionaries must be turned inside out first. Pray that the Lord will rouse us all to go forth in his might, conquering and to conquer. Pray that Paul-like men may be raised up, whether among those here or at home. If a man cannot say from his heart and conscience, "This one thing I do and will do," let him not come out. We want the pick of the Christian army out here, where the devil's headquarters and main army are.

We have all been surprised to find that things about Chinese life and hardships had been exaggerated a good deal. We rough it in travelling, but nothing more: excellent food and a comfortable bed, and with the Lord Jesus as your Friend, what more does a Christian soldier require? We could well do without the first two, but not without the Lord; He satisfies, the others don't. Stanley Smith and Beauchamp are off for three days to-morrow to distribute tracts and sell Gospels, &c. We are expecting Mr. Hudson Taylor shortly for a conference, and then we hope to know some more concerning future plans.

Write again soon if you can spare time, and tell us what the Lord has done more. It will make us shout and sing more and more. Have you sent over to the American Universities yet? And have you roused all the English and Irish Universities, as well as Scotch? Let us be very, very ambitious for the honour and glory of the Lord Jesus.

Your loving brother in the Lord Jesus,

C. T. STUDD.

LOAVES.

By Rev. JOHN PEARCE CLARK, M.A.

THE Gospel miracles are symbolical. Mighty works wrought upon men's bodies, and before their eyes, speak to us of works mightier still which the same Mighty One is ever ready to do in the hearts of men. We will consider the feeding of the five thousand (Matt. xiv. 15—21) from this point of view.

(1) It reminds us of our Lord's love in making his people co-workers with Himself.

Before Lazarus was raised from the dead, there was a stone to be rolled away; after his resurrection, there were grave-clothes to be loosed. To have told the stone to remove itself, or the linen bands to burst, would have been but a little thing to Jesus Christ our Lord. But, no! He would have his people share with Him in his glorious work on earth, as by and by they will share in his reward in heaven. Hence his commands: "Take ye away the stone." "Loose him, and let him go."

So here: He had really no need of the five loaves and two fishes. He could have fed the multitude just as well without them. Why, then, did He call for them? For one reason, I suggest, because He wished to bless his friends with the privilege of service. And when, having received and blessed their scanty provision, He handed it back to his disciples, was it not partly because in his generous love He wished them to have their part in the great wonder He was about to work?

How beautiful the thoughtful friendship of Jesus in thus drawing his disciples into co-partnership with Himself in work so high. Let us ponder such evidences of his love, and prize them well. They are both many and great. May we be quick to see, and wise to value them aright! We shall then be ashamed to speak wearily of the strain and sacrifice of Christian labour. We shall think of it only as a great and humbling privilege.

(2) We are reminded that in working miracles Jesus generally employed the most natural and likely means as far as they would go.

I have already referred to the taking away of the stone and the loosing of the grave-clothes by human hands. Passing by other similar examples, looking only to the case before us, I ask, why call for the paltry bread-supply of the disciples? Why not make bread of the stones at his feet? The power that multiplied miraculously was great enough to change stones into bread.

We have noticed one probable answer to this question. I now suggest another, which in no way conflicts with the first, and which seems to have upon it much of the evidence of truth. Jesus never wrought an unnecessary miracle. As far as possible He used the most fitting and natural instrument that lay to his hand.

I believe that a careful inquiry will show that his method is the same to-day. If we closely observe the successful workers in the Christian Church, we seldom, if ever, fail to find something in their natural disposition or talents, in their position, training, or experience, that fits them specially for their life-work. We know that these qualifications would be nothing without his blessing; but, with that blessing, they are evidently precious in his eyes. Such gifts, profitably employed in spiritual work, are a perpetual witness to the fact that the Lord's method is to use instruments suitable to the object in view. He took bread, not stones, when He wanted to make bread; fish, not dust or sand, when He wanted to make fish. So, when the people to be reached are rude and depraved, outcasts from respectable society, his instruments are commonly men of that very class, who are specially successful in their work because of their former history and training. When, only last year, the hearts of many educated young men were to be won for Christ in Scotland and England, the chief instruments used were University men of peculiar suitability. One was a famous oarsman of Cambridge; the name of the second, C. T. Studd, was known and honoured by all lovers of English sports; while a third was a young professor, strangely gifted with powers of influencing young men, who had suddenly leapt into fame as an author just a few months before.

There is, no doubt, an opposite side to this truth; but truth it is that the Lord's will is to employ suitable instruments, provided always that the instrument be a fully yielded one. "A fully yielded one." Ah, there's the pinch! Often those who, by position and possession are naturally qualified for some great and noble work, lack the necessary spirituality, the thorough-going consecration. They are not fully yielded instruments, so they are passed by, and others much inferior take places that should have been theirs. Who can tell what the Church has lost through the spiritual unreadiness of many of her richly endowed sons, and their consequent rejection for high service.

But let us not forget the other side of our subject. Let us remember the importance of talents as well as of consecration, that we may be zealous to improve and educate every power and possession God has given us; for, full consecration being supposed, we may naturally expect that the nobler the instrument the nobler the work.

(3) We have here a startling call to an impossible enterprise.

"Give ye them to eat." This was startling enough to the disciples. "We have here but five loaves and two fishes!" How far would they go among 5000 men, to say nothing of women and children? Only one loaf, and two-fifths of a fish for a thousand men! "Give ye them to eat!" Impossible!

To us comes a similar call to enterprises as impossible." They need not depart: give ye them to eat." Do we not hear Him saying that to us as He points to the spiritually starving around us? I think I see Him looking down on the children in the class, on our unconverted neighbours and acquaintances, on the young people of the church and of the home growing up without any satisfying knowledge of Him, as He slowly repeats those solemn words: "They need not depart: give ye them to eat."

The duty He sets before us is plainly an impossible one; for, though our gifts were of the rarest order, our experience vast, our knowledge of the Bible and our spirituality profound, the Divine work of satisfying even one soul would baffle us. "Give ye them to eat." "We can't, Lord; the work is impossible. Our power at its best is no more than, five loaves were to the hungry multitude!" He replies, only to repeat again, but with greater emphasis, his own command: "They need not depart: give ye them to eat." I hear Him speaking to us, and to every true-hearted disciple, bidding us feed the starving souls around us with living bread. Thus He seems to shut us up to our duty.

Here let me mention two extremes to be avoided. (a) Slothful unbelief. We may choose to forget the Lord's authority and power, and say that our little store of Christian knowledge and ability is too small. So we may be idle labourers, lazy Christians, and live as though Christ had never said: "Give ye them to eat." We may do this on the ground of our inability. We may—but how will our conduct appear in his sight? We shall only excuse sloth by unbelief, and so add insult to unfaithfulness.

(b) Presumptuous haste. If the disciples had heard their Lord's command and nothing else, a strange scene might have been witnessed. They would perhaps have hurried away into the crowd with their absurdly small supply, saying: "The Lord bids us feed you! The Lord bids us feed you!" Then would come tumult, bitter disappointment, and shame, for what could their five loaves have done among so many? "But, in that case," someone objects, "they would have gone at Christ's command." True, but not at his time, in his way, nor with his blessing. The essential thing was his direction and blessing.

Is there not a great deal of this presumptuous haste in very much of the restless activity common amongst us—men and women hurrying out to work and to speak for Christ, at his command, but not with his blessing? They have heard nothing but the word: "Go—work." The duty to wait to learn the Lord's way and time, and to receive his effectual blessing has not been thought of. They have forgotten that loaves unblest are loaves unmultiplied. Is this not the secret of much of our failure? We have thought too much of our loaves—our skilful methods, diligence, natural ability, knowledge, experience, yea, of our spirituality perchance: we have thought far too little of his multiplying Word.

"Bring them hither to Me." Surely this is as much a command as "Give ye them to eat." And yet, how many very energetic Christian workers, who count themselves obedient servants of their Lord, make very light of that diligent waiting upon God through his Word and Spirit, which is symbolised by the bringing of the loaves and the fishes to Jesus! We are so apt to forget that this is the most important part of the entire enterprise.

"Bring them hither to Me." The word implies (a) Practical consecration. The deliberate and honest yielding up of every power and every possession to Christ our Lord, and the employment of these powers and possessions with a single eye to his pleasure.

(b) Believing prayer. Bringing the loaves to Jesus symbolises our talking to Him definitely and trustfully about each separate engagement. When each effort is begun, continued, and ended in prayer, when entire dependence on the Divine blessing is the active habit of the soul, the loaves are brought to Jesus, and the secret of power is discovered.

(5) Lastly, we are taught how much the Lord can make of utterly inadequate instruments when they are fully yielded.

They were but five, those loaves! But then, they were given up to Jesus. Blessed by Him, they went so far that each one of that vast multitude was satisfied. The very fragments—twelve baskets full—were more than the original supply. Then, too, how easy and pleasant the work! The undertaking in itself was enormous; the mere idea of it oppressing to anyone contemplating it from a distance, exactly as our work often oppresses us when we see it in prospect. But in its actual accomplishment all was orderly, smooth, and delightful. It is always so with those whose powers are fully yielded, and who employ them under the Lord's superintendence. The work is great, its results glorious, while the joy and liberty of the worker is equally wonderful. Who can tell what He will make of you who read these lines, or of me who am writing them, if only we will give Him his royal seat? May He now consecrate us and keep us consecrated for Himself henceforth and for ever.

ON TAKING OFFENCE.

"WHY does your cousin John not speak to you now?" "Indeed, I can scarcely tell. He took offence at something he heard I had said about him. I do not believe I ever said it; certainly, if I did, it was not with the idea of giving him any pain. But I cannot make him believe me. All my attempts to pacify him are useless. I can only wait, and hope that time may mend it."

"I have noticed that Miss M—— has not been at our workers' meeting for some time past. Is anything wrong?" "Well, she has taken offence, and has given up her class in the Sunday-school. She thought that she was slighted in the arrangements about the last soirée. You made a great deal, she says, of a lady who has only joined us lately, and you seemed to take very little notice of her. She is attending another church, and is likely to join it, for a great deal of attention has been paid to her there already."

And so it goes on. This taking offence is a plague which finds its way everywhere, even into the family circle. We are often perplexed and astonished at it; sometimes we should be disposed to laugh, so very ridiculous does it seem, were it not that we know, by sad experience, what bitterness and heartburnings it is capable of producing. The devil, we may be quite sure, delights in and tries to foster this spirit. He sees how it hinders the good work, by driving off some useful labourers, and by disheartening those who remain faithfully at their post. Could we only see it to be a snare of the devil, it would be easier to banish it from our midst.

Various causes lie at the root of this taking offence. There are some good people over-sensitive; a touch, a look, seems to give them pain; and yet, if you do not look at them, nor speak to them, it pains them still more. Much of the blame, I fear, must be laid at the door of vanity. There are so many who like attention, who live for praise —in fact, who cannot live without it. Pride brings many offences. A proud man must always have his pound of flesh; he stands on his dignity; he demands all his rights; he cannot pass by nor forgive any apparent slight. In a word, the cause of this offence-taking almost always may be traced to the big "I"—that "I" which is written so large in some men's record; that self which bulks so largely in the thoughts and purposes of many of us. A man who is humble and unselfish will be slow in taking offence. The more we consider the reasons for which offences are taken, and the causes that lie at the root of this spirit, the more shall we be ashamed of it in ourselves, and the less importance shall we attach to it in the case of others.

There is no time at which men are so apt to take offence as when a word of reproof or rebuke is addressed to them. None of us like to be proved to be in the wrong. It is said that, when a man is beaten in controversy, he gets angry. In Matthew xv. it is recorded that our Lord told the Scribes and Pharisees some plain truths, which, as rulers of the people, they should have known. He told them that mere ceremonies of any kind could never make a man clean; defilement springs from the evil heart within, and from the streams of evil words and acts that are flowing forth from it continually. The Pharisees could not answer Christ; they slunk quietly away. But the disciples heard their growlings of vexation, and threats of vengeance. In their distress and fear they came to the Master with the anxious question, "Knowest Thou that the Pharisees were offended after they heard this saying?"

Unless we would have the blood of souls upon us, we must often rebuke men who are doing wrong, and endangering their own souls; and it matters not how careful we are, we are certain sometimes to give offence. "I know more about it than you do." "Mind your own business!" "You are not one whit better than I am." Such are the angry answers we receive. To our great vexation, we see that we have turned a friend into a foe, and in trying to help a neighbour, have given him unpardonable offence. We reproach ourselves for it, and dwell regretfully on the words we used. "Perhaps I spoke unwisely," we say; "perhaps I should not have interfered at all."

There are three simple rules, which I am disposed to lay down for my own guidance, in regard to this matter of taking offence:—

I will try not to give offence needlessly. No doubt there are two sides to the question. It is foolish in a man to take offence at me, because I am trying, to the best of my ability, to help him; but much of the blame may possibly lie at my own door. I should consider my neighbour in love. I should remember his prejudices, and try not to tread on them. I should make an effort to understand his character and his circumstances, and to deal with him accordingly. A man who was very forward and pugnacious was boasting once that he had more backbone than others—so says an American religious paper—and that he was never afraid to stand up for what he believed to be right. Some one answered him, "My friend, it is not backbone which you possess, but bristles; and animals which have bristles are remarkable always for a very weak backbone." Men do not like either a chameleon or a porcupine—a man who has no opinions of his own, or a man who is always, in the most unpleasant fashion, intruding his opinions on others. He who has a strong conviction of a truth can afford to be patient and gentle in his efforts to impress that truth on others. Our Lord was very forbearing, even with the Pharisees, though He saw them through and through from the very first. It was only when they attacked him, in the person of his disciples, and tried to upset his work, that He turned on them, and told them their character in a few scathing words. It would be an awful thing if by thoughtlessnes or by undue severity, I should harden any man against the truth; still more awful were I to give offence to any of Christ's little ones.

I will make up my mind, God helping me, not to take offence. We meet a friend some day, and we fancy that his manner towards us is very cold; by and by we find that the man was in pain at the time, or in fear of some great calamity. How often we misunderstand one another! Our friend, at whom we took offence, makes us ashamed when we come to talk the matter quietly over. "I really thought," he says, "that you were above such things. I thought you and I understood one another thoroughly, and that I might have counted on your goodwill and help at all times, without even asking for it; and so I gave my attention to others who did not know me so well, to try to make them feel at home." They are but few who would actually set themselves to give offence to a friend or neighbour. It is an old rhyme and a good one—

> "I will not easily offend, nor be easily offended;
> What's amiss I'll strive to mend, and I'll bear
> what can't be mended."

There is one thing that will save me, perhaps better than anything else, from taking offence. If I have some interesting and important work on hand, my attention will be occupied with it, and I shall have no time for criticising my neighbour's attitude towards me. The man who has nothing great on his hands is apt to brood over trifles. If—for the sake of escaping responsibility and trouble—we refuse to take our share in the work and warfare to which all men are called, by a strange retributive providence we are sure to torment ourselves about imaginary troubles. Could you fancy Paul taking offence at something Timothy had said about him, when the burden of all the churches was resting on his shoulders, and he was wrestling night and day in prayer to God for the conversion of the world? Away, selfish ambition! Be it mine to lie low at the feet of Jesus, seeking that He would use me anyhow. Let me fill my heart and hands with his blessed work. Then my only thought about my brother, even though he be one who sets himself to do me hurt, will be, how can I help Him? How can I bring Him to the Saviour?

I should not be afraid to give offence, when necessary. Christ spoke out the truth, though He knew He would offend the Pharisees, and set them a-plotting to kill him. His disciples were frightened at their being offended; Christ was quite indifferent to the matter. "Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind." We want men who are not afraid to stand up for the truth, who are not always consulting the oracle of expediency. "We are fond of a good fellow, but we admire and esteem only the strong man, the heroic soul, the servant of God and duty." Where truth is involved, there must be no compromise and no silence. I will speak in love, with all tenderness and consideration; but if, in speaking thus the truth which needs to be uttered at the time, I give offence, it certainly is not my fault. Very inspiriting are these words of Dr. Maclaren:—

> If ever we feel that our strength is nothing, and that we stand solitary against many foes, let us fall back upon the peace-giving thought that one man against the world, with Christ to help him, is always in the majority; and let us leave the issues of our work in his hands, whose hands will guard the seed sown in weakness, whose smile will bless the springing thereof.

There are many still who take offence at Christ Himself, and that is the most terrible of all offences. They are offended at his dealings with them in Providence; they think Him severe and unkind. They are offended at his cross, and do not like to have to take up their cross, and carry it after Him. They are offended at his Gospel, and at the doctrines which it contains. If I am offended at Christ, and turn away from Him, what hope can there be for me? The best safeguard against all such offences is to draw very close to Christ, to listen reverently to his word, to live in daily communion with Him. Then doubts will flee, difficulties will vanish, his ways will seem right, and truth will grow plain. When the question is asked us, "Will ye, also, go away?" there will be but one answer possible: "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

THERE is unrest everywhere. The world seems moved to its centre by disturbing influences. There is no rest: all around us is like a seething pot, throwing up its scum. The outlook is ominous. The political barometer is quivering, and on all sides are indications of great and even organic change. There is an uneasiness felt, an anxiety, a low rumbling, a sort of undefined fear, amounting to dismay, as if some great catastrophe were at hand, an earthquake to shake the fabric of society.

We read of the distress and perplexity of nations: do we not at the present moment realise it? Commercial difficulties stare us in the face. Agriculture is depressed to a very low condition. The shipping interest is well nigh paralysed. Trade is low, and thousands are thrown out of employ. The labour market is glutted. A storm is brewing from the Emerald Isle—men's hearts failing them for fear of coming events.

Is there not a cause for all this disturbance, this unrest, this upheaving of the social and political ground? Is there not a call for national humiliation at the present time, a confession of our faults as a people, by reason of the sin and iniquity which prevail to such an alarming extent? National sins call for deep humiliation. In Leviticus xxvi. we have the cause and effect of the calamities which befell the Jewish nation. Idolatry was the curse which brought down the heavy judgments of the Almighty on the people, and the threatenings of still greater punishments were put forth should they persevere in their evil course.

The result is now a standing miracle. They are scattered among all nations for their disobedience to the Divine command. They have been smitten with sore and heavy judgments, with the blast and mildew, the pestilence and the sword, broken to pieces as a nation, and scattered to the four winds of heaven. And why? Because they repented not of their evil ways and doings, and did not humble themselves before the Lord, as the men of Nineveh did.

Let us look at the flood of infidelity which sweeps over our country, impure literature, Socialism, Neology, Agnosticism, drunkenness, false teaching in so many pulpits, Sabbath desecration, open profligacy, the awful increase of crimes, forgetfulness of God. Are we not as a nation verily guilty? We are exalted to heaven by reason of our privileges, which increase our responsibility. "If the light that is in you be darkness, how great is that darkness!" Past judgments should remind us that stronger and more severe chastisements may await us, unless we, as a nation, repent of our guilt.

What, then, shall we do, but return unto the Lord, with penitence and supplication, because of our great sinfulness in his sight, and entreat the Lord to turn away his anger from us, and restore us graciously to his favour, by pouring out the influence of his Spirit on all our churches and people? Nothing but the cry of repentance will avail for the strong arm of the Lord to help us in this our time of need; also to give wisdom and sound judgment, guidance and understanding to our rulers, that they may be wise to act at the present critical period in our history as becometh men entrusted with the charge of governing our nation rightly. Churches apart, families apart, individuals apart, crying to the Lord to appear for us in the greatness of his mercy: this is the urgent want of the solemn times in which we live. F. S. Gervis.

"BEATING UP THAT WAY."

By Dr. G. F. PENTECOST.

IT was the last Sunday but one in the Brooklyn Academy, and it was a day of rain and storm. There were few ladies present, but there was a large company of men. Seated in the front row, among others, were three men who paid closest attention to the sermon all the way through. Toward the close of our address we were impelled to make a direct appeal to one of these three men—the one who seemed the most interested. So turning to him we said—

"Young man, are you a Christian?"

Almost before we had the words out of our mouth, he sprang to his feet, answering in a clear, full voice—

"Yes, thank God, I am, and have been for the last thirteen months."

"Are you a sailor?" we asked, for there was something about him that suggested his calling.

"Yes," was the response; "and this," pointing to one of the men by his side, "is my first officer, and I am second officer of our ship."

"Is your first officer a Christian too?"

"Oh yes, thank God, he is for Christ."

Then pointing to the man on the other side, we said—

"And how about your other shipmate who is sitting by you, is he a Christian too?"

"No, not yet; but I think he is beating up that way."

All this was very dramatic, and as it was purely spontaneous, the effect was thrilling in the extreme. The prompt response of the young mate, the quaint language of the sea, and the naturalness and earnestness of the man, all tended to electrify the audience. Our next impulse was to appeal to the man who, in the language of the sailor, was "beating up that way." So we said—

"Come, shipmate, why not drop your anchor, and come to rest in the harbour of peace right here by accepting Christ?"

At this the sailor man, with eyes full of tears, shook his head, and said:—

"I am in a fog."

We are glad to report that at the after-meeting he saw the way, and came into peace through the Lord Jesus Christ. But we were greatly struck with the expression of the second officer when he said of the mate, "He is beating up that way." Anyone who knows anything about sailor language knows that "beating" is the process of sailing a ship against the wind. How many souls are beating up to port. It is needless labour, however; the sinner needs only to take Jesus on board, and immediately he will be at the land.

UNION HALL MISSION.

THIS Mission has five halls open every night of the week, all the year round. They are bright and cheerful, precious passages of Scripture ornament the walls, and the interiors are specially calculated to make the poorer classes feel at home. The services are varied each night, so as to meet the necessities of old and young, Christians and careless. The old, old Gospel is the one theme. Tricyle Bible carriage, hand Bible carriage, house to house visitation, and open-air meetings are in full work, summer and winter, being specially designed to reach those who do not enter the halls.

These halls are planted in the midst of thickly populated districts. Surrounded on every side by poverty and distress, they are in immense fields for labour. I feel certain that many but need to know the claims of the Mission in order to help it, by their prayers and their means. Any particulars will be gladly given by Mr. Robert Bilke (Superintendent), 18, Green Hill-park Villas, Harlesden, London, N.W.

BIBLE STUDIES.—3.

CHRIST looks for fruit. "He came and sought fruit" (Luke xiii. 6, 7). "He sent a servant . . . that they should give him of the fruit of the vineyard" (Luke xx. 10). "I went down into the garden of nuts, to see the fruits of the valley, and to see whether the vine flourished, and the pomegranates budded" (Cant. vi. 11).

(2) He sees the beginning of fruit. "The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines, with the tender grape, give a good smell" (Cant. ii. 13). The Master has more patience with the little ones learning their alphabet than the older scholars have.

(3) The believer's answer to Christ's inquiry. "Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits" (Cant. iv. 16).

(4) What is the fruit? "Love, joy, peace," &c. (Gal. v. 22; Eph. v. 9). Thanksgiving (Heb. xiii. 15). With ever-deepening life there will always be new fruit laid up for Christ (Cant. vii. 13).

(5) Source of fruit-bearing. "From Me is thy fruit found" (Hosea xiv. 8). (a) Abiding in Christ (John xv. 5). (b) Christ dwelling in us by the Spirit. "The fruit of the Spirit" (Gal. v. 22). "An habitation of God through the Spirit" (Eph. ii. 22). "To be strengthened with might by his Spirit . . . that Christ may dwell in your hearts" (Eph. iii. 16, 17). (c) In Ezekiel's vision the unfading trees on the river bank brought forth new fruit according to the months, because the refreshing waters issued out of the sanctuary (Ezek. xlvii. 12).

(6) Where fruit is found Christ takes means to increase it. "Every branch that beareth fruit, He purgeth it" (John xv. 2). The Husbandman Himself with loving hand undertakes this work.

(7) Fruit-bearing must be unto God, else it is vain. "Israel is an empty vine; he bringeth forth fruit unto himself" (Hosea x. 1).

"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit" (John xv. 8). "Unto the glory and praise of God" (Phil. i. 11).

(8) Christ chose us to bear fruit. "I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain" (John xv. 16).

(9) Hindrances to fruit-bearing. (a) Want of steadfast abiding in Christ (John xv. 4). (b) The little foxes (Cant. ii. 15).

A WORKER FOR JAPAN.

A MEETING was held on Tuesday, the 26th ultimo, at the residence of Miss Leycester, Wilton-crescent, to take leave of Miss Hamilton, going forth to Japan as a missionary of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East. Rev. A. Brooke Webb, rector of Lullingstone, who presided, referred to the fact of Miss Hamilton being the Jubilee missionary of the Committee, the liberality of two old friends of the Society on the occasion of its jubilee having provided the means for sending an additional worker to Japan. The farewell address was given by Rev. C. F. Warren, from Asaka, who afterwards commended Miss Hamilton in prayer to the blessing and protection of the Lord of the harvest. She sailed the following day in the Ballarat for Japan.

A WORLD'S DAY OF REST.—Mr. Luis Jackson, of Chicago, proposes the formation of a World's Day of Rest League. He claims, from a practical study of the subject, that human rapacity is becoming so great, that unless the working men of all denominations take measures to preserve a uniform day of rest they may lose it altogether. He has proposed to his Jewish brethren, on the broad claims of humanity, from prudential motives, and in the interest of Jewish artisans, that at a convention of representative Jews from all parts of the world to be held at Paris in the year 1900, the Jewish Sabbath be transferred to the National Day of Rest by authoritative edict.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

THE New Year's Devotional Meeting of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution was held at Exeter (Lower) Hall on Wednesday evening. Previous to the devotional meeting a large number of the friends of the Institution met together at the tea-table, thus affording a happy opportunity for fraternal intercourse. Mr. George Williams presided.

Mr. Thomas, the Secretary, reported that at the end of the year 177 young women were in the Homes and 24 in the Night Refuge. There had been 1292 applications for admission, and there were 620 temporarily lodged in the Night Refuge. Their great object ever was to win souls for Christ, and with that view there had been in the different Homes 728 Gospel services on the Lord's Day, and 608 in the week; 425 Bible-classes, chiefly conducted by ladies; 584 Educational classes, and 180 Temperance meetings; many pledges had been taken. They had deep cause for thankfulness for God's blessing in raising so many voluntary workers. He was glad to say that as regards finances all their wants had been supplied.

The Chairman said that the next joy to being saved ourselves was to save some one else; that was the very highest pleasure. Mr. Joseph Thomas, Mr. J. Allnutt, and other friends bore testimony to the true work that is done in the Homes. Fervent prayers were offered for God's blessing on the work, ere the very profitable meeting was brought to a close.

GLASGOW SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.

A CONVERSAZIONE in connection with the annual meeting of the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society was lately held in the Corporation Galleries. There was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen. The Earl of Aberdeen presided, and gave the opening address. We shall all feel, he said, that seamen as a class have a special and constant claim upon our friendship and our sympathy. I had the great advantage of making a tour of the various centres of work belonging to this Society. We first visited the chapel known as the Seamen's Chapel, close to the docks, on the north side of the river. It is admirably suited for the purpose, and it was most encouraging to notice the record of the attendance Sunday after Sunday of seamen. We then visited the Institute close by. The place was crowded. His lordship next described his visit to the Sailors' Home, and desired to add his testimony to the efficiency which seemed to characterise it. He also alluded to the South Side Bethel, of which he spoke in terms of the highest commendation. After referring to the work of the Royal Commission of Inquiry as to the security of life and property at sea, his lordship warmly advocated the proposal to erect a new Seaman's Institute at Broomielaw, and hoped that the appeal of the Society would meet with a hearty response from the friends of the sailor.

Mr. R. H. Hunter, Hon. Secretary, submitted the annual report, which stated:—

"The work has gone on very quietly but steadily, and with manifest tokens of deep spiritual blessing. More sailors have been reached and personally dealt with during the last twelve months than in any previous year. The numbers attending the Institute, at 146, Broomielaw, have been so large as to render the place quite too small, and it has therefore become necessary to acquire larger premises. The great depression in the shipping trade, as well as most other trades, made the directors very unwilling to undertake any new responsibility in the way of additional buildings; but the necessity has been forced upon them, and they have resolved to go forward, trusting the Lord to supply all their need."

Addresses on different phases of the work were delivered by the Lord Provost, Mr. Campbell of Tillichewan, Dr. Marshall Lang, Mr. John Burns of Castle Wemyss, Professor H. Drummond, and Dr. A. Wallace.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND AT CLAPHAM.

TRULY the little children are gathering round their loving Saviour! The work that began here on Sunday week, when about 1500 boys and girls from various churches assembled in the Conference Hall, has been growing and spreading every day since. Each afternoon there have been congregations of young people from the homes of the wealthy, schools of "Higher Education," with large contingents from orphanages, reformatories, &c. To these Mr. Hammond's addresses have been as sparks from the true fire of heaven. As the preacher and his helpers passed through the ranks, words cannot describe the rapidity of the formation of sections and groups. It was none other than God the Holy Spirit bringing down blessing in conviction of sin, and bearing witness to the cleansing blood.

A small creature in a blue Scotch bonnet, scarcely five years old, whispered that she always loved Jesus herself very much, but that her little brother only sometimes liked Him, and would on no account desire to be taken up in his arms. On referring to the brother indicated, he was found to be under the impression that death was involved in the embrace. But he immediately accepted the explanation that it was a present comfort; that Jesus was now taking care of little ones, and that He would lift up any children over the danger of falling into sin; if they cried out to Him, and told Him what they were afraid of, He would see them safe through.

There were hundreds not so far advanced, who were weeping sorely, and talking to those sitting amidst them. "I am sorry I did not give my heart to Jesus yesterday; I do to-day, indeed," said a dear little orphan, with sobs and broken words. Then she rested herself in the love of her loving Father in heaven, and was joyful! Two sisters and a brother surrounded a teacher in a warm appeal for help "to be saved." After some earnest talk and prayer the three rose up full of gladness, and began to tell their story to others. "How do you know you are saved?" was said to a little one. "Because I want to please Jesus. He died for me, and He loves me." And then tears were shed that confirmed the testimony.

Whole schools full of girls came with their teachers, who had been agonising for their souls, and they saw, with joyful surprise, one after another entering the kingdom. Parents have had the same happy experience. Two boys of about eleven and twelve, intelligent, handsome fellows, sat with troubled, grave faces. When spoken with they said, "We both give ourselves now to Jesus." One added, "We never did it before;" as if ashamed of their neglect. When asked their names, they pointed to their father, who was waiting among those praying for a blessing on the little ones.

But parents must not shift their burden over on Mr. Hammond. They have to do their own work, and some Christian fathers and mothers, it is to be feared, neglect it. "Tell them more about Jesus." Hymns are now a great help. Gracious assistance is given in every way. Ministers of all denominations are finding Mr. Hammond's Mission of unspeakable value.

AMANDA SMITH.—We have received (says Miss Mason in The House of Rest Monthly) a long and very interesting letter from Mrs. Amanda Smith. Her health is fairly established, and the little girl she has adopted has given signs of her conversion to God; and if spared, there is every prospect of her eventually becoming a true missionary amongst her own people. Mrs. Smith is desirous of possessing a mission hall, where she could gather the people together for preaching the Gospel, and for instruction in Bible truths, of which they are deplorably ignorant. She would be glad if some friend would send her The Christian regularly. Her address is, care of Mr. Gabriel Moore, Monrovia, Liberia, W. C. Africa.

CHRIST AT THE WELL.

WEARIED with his journey, thus the Saviour sat!
Ho, ye heavy-laden, think ye well of that:
He who knows thy labour, waiteth thee to tell
What of rest thou needest—sitting on the well.

Hide not thou thy sorrow; take thine every grief
To where Jesus waiteth, thee to give relief;
He who tasted sorrow, all thy grief will quell;
Surely thou shalt find Him, sitting on the well.

If thy soul hath thirsting, He hath thirsting too;
Greater than thy longing, is his thirst for you;
And, to satisfy thee, hath of love to tell,
Deep in its uprising—sitting on the well.

If thy soul have doubtings, these shall chase away,
As the mists that vanish 'neath the dawn of day;
Light that He shall give thee, will thy doubts dispel;
Teacher He of teachers, sitting on the well.

And thine empty pitcher, joy or truth to find,
That thou takest with thee, thou shalt leave behind;
Then on wingèd footsteps to thy kindred tell,
How a waiting Saviour sitteth on the well.

Messrs. MOODY & SANKEY in MONTREAL.

(BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

WE have, after much prayer and effort, been favoured with a visit from Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. Though far too short, it proved to be very blessed, and I doubt not owned of the Lord, not only in the conversion of sinners, but in awakening and stimulating God's people to more earnest service.

With the exception of one day spent here in 1880, en route to England, and a week last spring in Toronto, Canada has never been favoured with a visit from the renowned evangelist. Even now his coming was quite unpremeditated—his engagements in the States running far into the summer; his visit only became possible at the expense of a few days' breathing time which he had promised to spend with his family at the New Year, but which he so characteristically gave up to work for his Master.

Well, his Master did not fail him, as in every respect the effort here has been most encouraging. The meetings, fourteen in all (begun on Jan. 2, and ending on the 5th), were held in the St. James-street Methodist Church. Notwithstanding an incessant downpour of rain, on every occasion the seating and standing capacity of that large building was taxed to the uttermost. The support and presence of the evangelical city ministers was very general and gratifying. Rev. W. Haslam and Mr. J. E. K. Studd conducted overflow meetings, and extensive arrangements have been made to continue the work so auspiciously begun. Mr. Sankey's heartfelt rendering of the Gospel songs not only made the audiences thrill with pleasure, but were most helpful in conveying the truth to the minds of believer and unbeliever alike.

There can be no question of the existence of a very large dormant element in this city seeking after the true light, and only requiring a shaking of the dry bones to bring it out. It is hoped that Mr. Moody's terse, honest, and Scriptural preaching will show our ministers how to reach the hearts of the people by leaving their ecclesiasticism and intellectualism for the lecture-room, and coming back to the Bible view of the peril and paramount value of the human soul. Mr. Moody expressed himself much encouraged by the interest evinced; we are hopeful of having him and his esteemed colleague back for a three months' siege next season.

Montreal, January 12.

Y.W.C.A., INVERNESS.—At the annual meeting of this Association, held last week, Mrs. Black, the Hon. Secretary, reported a growing interest in the work among the young women of the town.

THE ONLY WAY to attain to a heavenly experience is by living a heavenly life. If you will for the love of Christ begin to do little heavenly acts of kindness, love, and charity, to exercise the heavenly graces of gentleness, truth, and patience, you will presently be rejoicing in a heavenly experience. The true "higher life" is always found in connection with "lowly service" for Christ.—Words and Weapons.

Notes and Comments.

OUR readers will have heard with much regret that the well-known lady missionary in India, Miss C. M. Tucker ("A.L.O.E."), was a few weeks since at the point of death. A recently received telegram happily announces that she is recovering.

There is a very remarkable paper in last month's Contemporary Review on the Huguenot peasantry of the Cevennes. At the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes the pastors and upper classes of the Protestants of France were driven out of the kingdom. But thousands of the poor could not flee. On these Huguenot peasantry persecution fell with relentless fury. The horrors of the time cannot be described. Mr. Richard Heath, the writer of the article, submits evidence of supernatural visitations vouchsafed to these wanderers and outcasts. They heard songs of angelic hosts, as they conceived, and celestial music in the air. A sort of prophetic fire fell upon many, especially the young, who exhorted to fidelity. The article will amply repay perusal.

Scripture is sometimes quoted in justification of modern dancing. It should be known that Scripture lends no countenance to promiscuous dancing, which was the mark of a corrupt idolatry under the Jewish dispensation. Dean Payne Smith, in "The Speaker's Commentary," on Jer. xxxi. 15, says that dancing was confined to women, except in a religious ceremony, when men danced by themselves. In the text indicated it is the rejoicing of young men and old men that is promised, not their dancing.

It has been affirmed that the word sheol means nothing more than "the grave." But from The Edinburgh Review, just published, we find that there was a most significant meaning atttached to the word. In an article on Phœnician Antiquities, we learn that Schéôl refers to the mouth of the pit, or the yawning shaft which led to the black depths of subterranean chambers for the dead. The figure wrapped up in the word was full of meaning.

Mr. Chesson, the Secretary to the Aborigines' Protection Society, has addressed a powerful letter to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with reference to a proclamation of the Queen, of October last, signed by Sir Hercules Robinson, which legalises the unrestricted sale of intoxicating drinks to all chiefs and councillors in the Transkeian territories of Cape Colony, and which authorises the magistrates to issue permits to any native to purchase spirits. Mr. Chesson points out that, according to the evidence of the acting Premier, Mr. Gordon Sprigg, the very existence of the Caffre race is affected by the sale of spirituous liquors. The natives of other districts into which drink had been introduced have appealed for protection against the ravages of intemperance.

Strange to say, though this unhappy proclamation was not officially published in the Caffre language, the natives soon became aware of its provisions, and held a great meeting to make a solemn protest against the Government "forcing strong drink upon an unwilling people." Local testimony of a very striking and painful kind was given as to the plentiful crop of crime, the demoralisation and the gradual extermination of the people, which had followed in the wake of spirituous liquors wherever they had been introduced among other tribes. Mr. Chesson, speaking in the name of his Committee, urges that free trade in drink will invariably lead to rebellion and war, and will, therefore, sooner or later, involve England in grave responsibilities. The Committee are assured, he says, that it will be difficult for the natives to resist the belief that there is a deliberate intention to ruin them for the sake of paltry present gain, with the prospect of the reversion of their fertile lands at no distant date.

The key to this lamentable state of things seems to be in that "paltry present gain" which offers so irresistible a temptation to many Englishmen. The bodies and souls of our own people at home have so long been sacrificed to the trade in drink, when a little righteous legislation would have saved them, that it is perhaps too much to expect that official sympathy should be shown towards the protesting Caffres. These unfortunate people have yet to learn that in the science of nineteenth century government the fluctuations of the revenue are deemed of more moment than the pulsation of human hearts. When shall we have statesmen who can look at these questions from a higher standpoint than that of "paltry present gain," and able to recognise the fact, illustrated by the decline and fall of other mighty nations, that true prosperity in the national, as in the individual life, is only to be found by seeking first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness?

Lady Caroline Leigh has called attention to an error in the Educational Code, by which, as she states, great opportunities for good are lost, and the future mothers and housewives of England leave school with only a smattering of useful knowledge, to be soon forgotten. Instead of the repetition of poetry and other similar subjects, Lady Leigh insists upon it that greater prominence should be given to the useful arts, such as needlework, to which, under the present code, only four hours of the school-girl's week are devoted. Surely, a change for the better in this respect, affecting the future of about a million girls each year, would not be without a marked result upon human life in large towns and villages. In these days of scanty wages it would be of great importance to a girl to be able to cut out and make her own clothes; and if to this practical knowledge were added that of simple cookery, which might be taught in the excellent way lately suggested in these pages by Miss Ellice Hopkins, we should, perhaps, have fewer girls idling about our streets a ready prey to the tempter.

A singularly painful testimony to the accuracy of views lately expressed in these columns as to the close connection between "wages and morals" comes to us from a Midland town, with a large female population engaged in labour of various kinds. It is not in London alone that starvation wages create immorality. The testimony to which we refer is given by clergymen who conducted mission services last Advent. They state that most of the lost ones who were rescued had taken to their sinful life "because they could not get work, or because they could not live on their earnings." There is a "frightful sameness" about their sad stories: "I cannot live on three shillings a week, and that is all I get by work," was the plaintive cry. "Driven to it by want" is the epitaph which the Mission preachers would be prepared to write over the graves of many of these poor creatures, at whom Society is only too ready to cast stones, as though they were depraved by choice.

Surely in the light which has recently been thrown upon this enforced vice, there is no longer room for that pharisaical spirit which has too long characterised our treatment of the fallen. Since we have been forced to recognise the painful fact that the sin which shames our national life may ebb and flow with the fluctuations of wages and the depression and improvement of trade, we may surely infuse more of the spirit and compassion of Jesus into our remedial schemes, and consider this sad and painful question as rightly "a problem for the heart as well as the brain." Each of us is in some way responsible for that economic pressure which forces so many of our unhappy sisters into the stream of sin and suffering and death.

Rev. J. G. Paton, of the New Hebrides Mission, at a welcome meeting given to him in Melbourne, December 18, on returning from England, was presented with a purse of 175 sovereigns.

> I have been reading the article "Poverty: Clean and Squalid," by Archibald Brown, and I think it most telling. It should be reprinted in all the daily papers, where it would meet the eye of those who do not read THE CHRISTIAN. Prominence should be given to the portion entitled "Clean Poverty," where he speaks of business firms getting rid of old hands; for, under the pressure of bad trade, this is going on just now at a cruel rate. At the same time that faithful old servants are being discharged into almost hopeless poverty, the principals are living in affluence, not to say luxury, spending more perhaps on cigars, wines, and dinner parties than all the wages saved by these terrible retrenchments. How can such business men expect prosperity! Must not action of this kind work together with the widespread and shameful vices of our country, in bringing judgment upon us as a people? The most painful feature of the whole thing is that the offenders are to such a large extent "Christian" firms. I know of some sad cases of old servants receiving notice from one of the largest houses in B——. I am watching the development, and I fancy I see the reaping time coming.

Our correspondent, we fear, might have added that some of these offenders figure largely as generous givers to philanthropic or religious objects. If so, what a sacrilegious connection between the form of holy charity and the bare reality of heartless selfishness! One such action on the part of an avowed Christian is enough to make many atheists.

We do not forget the heavy and increasing pressure of these bad times. We know that in some cases retrenchment, and consequent discharge of tried servants, is really necessary. But we urge that good men should only acknowledge that necessity as a last resort. We submit that both the Church and the world naturally expect this of Christian business men: that they should make an honest attempt to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them. If our Christianity is only a comfortable delusion it will, of course, be quite natural for the employer to look out for himself, and to do only what pays. But if we believe in the love of Christ, it should be a small thing—a common and natural thing—for a Christian man of wealth to reduce his personal expenses in order to keep trusty old servants and their families from starvation and despair.

The Christian.

"These expositions of, or rather lessons from, the Parables, have been written since A. L. O. E. went to India as a missionary. NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC COUGH AND INCIPIENT PHTHISIS.—CASE of Mr. J. G. HODGINS, 47, Nelson-st., Tralee.

When this patient commenced with my treatment he was invalided at Bournemouth. He had severe chronic cough, with yellow and green expectoration. He had lost much flesh. He had obtained the best advice that hitherto had come within his reach, but from which (as he says in a recent letter), "I never got a bit of good."

I cannot give the date of his commencement, as he was supplied with medicine at various times through a Mr. Freeman, who largely used and recommended it; but it was in the early part of 1885.

On referring to the correspondence, I see in a letter of his, dated May 18, he says:—"I am glad to say I have got so well as to leave Bournemouth and get home again. Your medicine has done me a very great amount of good."

In July he says:—"The cough and expectoration is a mere nothing now. My weight has gone up from ten stones and half a pound to ten stones and twelve and a half pounds—heavier than I ever was in my life."

In August he says:—"You will be glad to hear I have no cough and expectoration now. I intend continuing your medicine though for some time to come."

October 20 he writes:—"I am thankful to say I am quite well now." He confirms this by his local doctor's opinion. A trifling pain under the shoulder (the only divergence from a state of perfect health) was referred to some slight dyspepsia only, by the same authority.

December 16 he writes: "You will be pleased to hear that I continue well."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

A LIBERAL ALLOWANCE ON QUANTITIES FOR DISTRIBUTION.

Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES said:—

"Every one in that meeting who had not yet read Mrs. BUTLER's book on REBECCA JARRETT should read it without delay. It was the best book that had yet been produced in the course of this controversy. (Cheers.) It exposed the facts, and explained them, as no other book that he had read. It had put Rebecca Jarrett's conduct in a light in which no newspaper had been able to put it. (Cheers.) Mrs. Butler had not lost her faith in Rebecca Jarrett; and her opinion was worth more on such a question than the opinions of all the lawyers and all the journalists in the United Kingdom." (Cheers.)

Mr. W. T. STEAD said:—

"When Mr. HUGH PRICE HUGHES was speaking, and all this crowded hall rang with a loud reverberation of your cheers, I heard a sound that you did not hear. A mile from this place my accustomed ear heard the sharp clangour of the prison bell sounding the hour of repose in that felon's cell at Millbank. A mist passed before my eyes, in which all this cheering throng was lost; and through the mist I saw in one of those barred and bolted cells, which lead from either side of the stony corridor, a lonely, solitary form: and as she laid down on her plank-bed for her night's rest, thanking God that one more day of her sentence had passed, I saw my victim—REBECCA JARRETT." (Sympathetic murmurs.)

"Watchword for the Church of Christ: Millions for missions; missions for millions!"

Rev. W. H. Aitken is now on his way back to England from the United States, if he has not already reached this country. He commences a mission in South Lambeth (Rev. Allen Edwards, Jun.) on February 20.

Pastor Frank White, of Talbot Tabernacle, and Mrs. White, expect to sail from New York on the 6th inst. in the City of Berlin. Will our readers remember them in prayer, that a safe and favourable voyage may be granted, and that they may return to their native shores in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel. Letters may be addressed to Mr. White, at 10, Chepstow Villas, Notting-hill, W.

We have received a communication, signed by Canon C. K. Robinson, Master of St. Catherine's College, Cambridge, and several other gentlemen well known in that town, endorsing the truth of the statements made in a recent issue as to the boycotting and persecution of Mr. J. P. Fison. Canon Robinson, after an acquaintance of many years, testifies to Mr. Fison's high character, and says he is eminently worthy of support in the Gospel Temperance work he has undertaken, and which has been so greatly hindered by the action referred to in our statement.

"A Country Subscriber" writes to us, asking most earnest attention to the question of the conversion of children while they are still in the Sunday-schools. He reminds us that while many of the children of the land attend Sunday-school, very few are known to decide for Christ. He also quotes the statement of a minister, that those children and youths who pass through Sunday-schools unconverted are specially apt to become sceptical and averse to the Gospel in after life. May not this dearth of conversions among children arise from lack of faith in the probability, or even in the possibility, of the conversion of children of tender age? We need to be aroused to a nobler confidence in the adaptability of the Gospel to all ages and conditions; yes, and to a nobler confidence, too, in the omnipotence of God the Holy Ghost, and to his tender and special love for the little ones.

We venture on two practical suggestions. First, to all who have to do with young folk. Let us make their conversion to God in the near future an aim for which we earnestly work and pray, and which we really expect to win. In doing this, let us carefully avoid all such pressure and entreaty as would curtail their freedom, or check the natural outflow of youthful energy. If we have only sufficient faith in the wisdom, might, and love of the Blessed Spirit, we shall be kept from such mistakes. We shall be made wise to win the children naturally. We shall not be feverish and unwise in our anxiety for results. Our second suggestion is to ministers. Why should the children not have a place in the public worship of God's house? We know several ministers who speak to the children from the pulpit in the middle of the morning service. The result is most beneficial. We know of one who speaks to them in this way just before the third hymn is sung, and then invites all who cannot sit quiet during the sermon to go home. Most of the children go out while the hymn is being sung. They go away with their portion, leaving their elders in quiet to enjoy theirs.

"Fear not." There is something very suggestive in the frequent repetition of this injunction. We hear this Divine encouragement to quietness in every stage of the sacred history. God's "Fear not's" stud the pages of Bible story like forget-me-nots by a meadow stream. They stand out, too, in delightful contrast with similar encouragements spoken by others. "Don't be afraid," is often spoken by one who, if he told all the truth, would rather say, "If I were in your place I should be afraid." Not seldom it is said simply because there is nothing else to be said, when it has more of the sound and meaning of despair than of hope. Not so God's "Fear not." When He uses the word it is always grandly substantial; there is a solid reason behind it. Take a concordance, and you will see that when God says "Fear not," He usually gives some strong reason for happy confidence: e.g., "Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield;" or, "Fear thou not, for I am with thee."

These lines may be read by some to whom the encouragement, "Fear not," would be only an exasperating mockery if spoken by some neighbour or friend. Troubles—perhaps agonising troubles—are falling thick and fast around them. Before some of these human wisdom is dumb, and can suggest no comfort. But the "Fear not" spoken to us comes from our heavenly Father with all the force of utter soberness and fullest comprehension. To all his children the Great Father says, "Fear not." There is perfect reasonableness in the word as He gives it, for behind it stands that other word, "Your Father knoweth that ye have need." Are we heeding God's "Fear not?" It is well, in the day of trouble, to have praying faith; it is better, far better, to have resting faith. This resting faith, the sure earnest of Divine comfort and deliverance, comes to the soul that sits still in his darkness, and gives open ear to the "Fear not" whispered by the Great Father.

The following extract from The North Devon Journal is a very pleasing and practical commentary on the remarks we made last week respecting the enormous sum spent on the London Lord Mayor's Banquet in November:—

> The Mayor of Barnstaple has adopted a very praiseworthy course in dispensing with the customary mayoral banquet, and instituting in place thereof a series of weekly dinners to the poor of the town. The notion that the chief magistrate of a borough should signalise his accession to office by calling together his well-to-do friends and neighbours, to feast and exchange complimentary references, is one with which we have no sympathy. To dispense hospitality with a free hand amongst the poor of the town is quite another thing, and the practice which has been inaugurated by Mr. Lauder we hope to see followed by his successors in office. At this season, when the severity of the weather has stopped the employment of so large a number of outdoor labourers, any contribution to their scanty means of subsistence for themselves and families is especially welcome.

We hope the excellent example of the Mayor of Barnstaple will be emulated not only by his successors in office in that town, but by Mayors and Lord Mayors elsewhere.

The second week in February (Feb. 7—14) will be observed as usual as the Week of Prayer for Young Women. At the commencement of the spring season, when so many young women flock to our great cities in search of employment, surely we need to make special prayer and special effort on their behalf. Meetings will be held every evening at most of the London Y.W.C.A. Institutes, when all will be welcome. A list can be obtained from the Secretary, 16a and 17, Old Cavendish-street. This Week of Prayer for Young Women is observed all over the country.

The Rock appears this "week under new management," Rev. E. Johnston having relinquished its editorial oversight. His successor, while determined to uphold the distinctive ecclesiastical views of the Established Church, will aim at maintaining and developing the spiritual tone of the paper. He makes the following kind reference to this journal:—

> The Christian, in which the devotional and spiritual element largely predominates, has a far larger circulation than any Church paper. We have reason to believe that at least half its readers are members of our own Church, and cannot agree with some of the views expressed therein. They, however, gladly waive any difference of opinion on ecclesiastical questions, so that they may derive the benefit of the spiritual element of the paper. We congratulate our contemporary on having been one of the first to take the initiative in introducing more spiritual life into our literature.

Whether our brother journalist is correct in assuming that the half of our readers are Episcopalians we have no reliable means of knowing. We rejoice to have among our friends many earnest-minded men and women from all the Protestant communities. Of course we have our own convictions as to ecclesiastical arrangements and church governments, but we regard these as matters of secondary import, and have never, so far as we are aware, intruded them on our readers. Our constant aim is, and has ever been, to foster the life of God in all who range themselves under the Christian banner, without reference to sects or human landmarks of any sort. In this endeavour we are thankful to have the hearty co-operation of "Churchmen" and "Nonconformists" alike.

OPEN AIR MISSION.

On January 25, the Library of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, was crowded to hear an address on "the Consecration of Isaiah," by Professor Elmslie, of the Presbyterian College, Bloomsbury. The occasion was the quarterly meeting of the Open Air Mission, the audience was composed of open-air preachers, and the Chairman was Mr. John MacGregor.

The comparatively youthful appearance of the speaker was contrary to traditional notions of the occupants of Professorial chairs, but the choice language and high spiritual tone of the speaker soon made the hearers lose sight of him in the wonderful theme he had chosen for his address. He first read a paraphrase, or exact translation, of Isaiah vi., and then, laying down his notebook, entered upon a description of Isaiah as one who denounced priestcraft, hypocrisy, and oppression. Yet none called him a statesman or a politician, but a prophet. To prepare him for his office this vision was vouchsafed. The sight of Jehovah as Supreme King, Sovereign and Lord, high and exalted, produced a crushing sense of unworthiness and sin. Then came the remedy, God's love touching and purifying his being, and the result was a glad readiness to be sent on any errand for the Lord.

WESTON - SUPER - MARE.—An interesting meeting was lately held at the Y.M.C.A. here to welcome Mr. Rayner, the new secretary. Mr. W. Hind-Smith bore testimony to the success that had followed Mr. Rayner's labours at the branches in Swansea, Ramsgate, and Ipswich.

MR. STEAD.—The Bible presented to Mr. Stead at the Exeter Hall meeting, reported in our last issue, was the gift of a few private friends, and not of the Y.M.C.A. as such. We observe with pleasure, in one of our Australian contemporaries, that meetings sympathising with Mr. Stead, and protesting against his imprisonment, have been held in New South Wales.

MISSION WORK IN COPENHAGEN.

DEAR SIR,—I have the pleasure of giving you some details of mission work in Copenhagen during the past year. We have lately commenced meetings for cabmen and their families. Although not a great many attend, we have been much encouraged in this work, and have felt that the Lord's blessing has rested upon it. During the year we have held about 130 indoor meetings, and 300 in the open air, and many have been saved through the mercy of God.

Last summer, with the permission of the police authorities, we held meetings on the old ramparts of Copenhagen, and many hundreds both old and young people, chiefly such as never come to church, attended. We were much helped by Rev. Lic. Fenger, who is indeed the poor people's friend.

We have also been permitted by the Commander-in-Chief to hold meetings at the barracks in Copenhagen, and at the encampment in the fields; the soldiers have flocked about us in hundreds to hear the word of salvation in Christ. Several meetings held on board the training-ship in the Royal Dockyard were attended by almost the whole of the crew.

Our work last year was greatly helped by the kindness of the Open-air Mission in London, who printed for us Danish hymns, on large linen sheets, so as to be read by hundreds at once; the people now join in the singing much better than they did before.

We continue our visits to the public-houses and lodging-houses, and the Lord has greatly blessed our efforts in this branch by leading many men from these houses to our meetings, where the Gospel has been proclaimed to them; as a result, drunkards and wife-beaters are now living decently with the peace of God in their hearts.

The Lord has indeed sent me a good faithful friend in Mr. Rasmus Clausen, who is giving the whole of his time to the work. We have also had the occasional assistance of Count A. Moltke and his nephew in the midnight mission. We are now ten or twelve workers in our mission, but we need at least 100 to carry on the work in Copenhagen. We have for some time taken up night-mission work in the streets, and have met with much success. Extracts are appended of reports given at a meeting held in connection with the subject.

At present I am staying with my friend Mr. Walter Morris, of Hitchin, for the benefit of my health, which has suffered from overwork. Mr. Morris is a member of the Society of Friends, and has for a long time helped me in carrying on my work.—Yours very sincerely,

Wm. Wright, of 7, Enighedsvei, Copenhagen.
Birch Field, Verulam-road, Hitchin.

Extract from Report.

Mr. Wm. Wright and Mr. Clausen described how they had during the past year united to their original Court Yard Mission work an attempt to oppose immorality by visiting those streets where it is specially carried on. Here they warn the men, and urge the women to forsake their evil life, and to save their souls by seeking the mercy of God in Christ Jesus.

They time their visits according to the habits of the different classes of society: where soldiers and sailors are found these missionaries go from 7 to 9 p.m; in other parts, frequented by the better to do, they work from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. They meet men of all ages, from the youth of 20 to the aged men of 70 years, with one foot in the grave; men of all classes, from those of noble birth, with decorations of honour on their breasts, down to the simple artizan.

The workers usually go in couples, one working from each end of the street, and so mighty is the word of God that nearly all who hear it turn away from their intention. The oldest sinners are the most difficult to dissuade, though even of these not a few are prevented, at least for the time.

Young men have sometimes expressed their surprise at the rebukes given them; it never occurred to them there could be anything wrong in that which was authorised by law.

Sometimes, indeed, it happens that a man who has been induced to go away, has returned again; but on one occasion, when the missionary met one coming back, it was only to press his hand and thank him with tears for having warned him and spoken the word of God to him, which he should never forget.

By complaining to the police, the missionaries could have persons punished who assault them, which is often done; but nothing would be gained, and they prefer to bear all patiently rather than bring these unhappy creatures into further trouble. The "bullies" who associate with them are also often enraged at the missionaries' efforts, and have occasionally fallen upon them with violence and caused blood to flow. The ordinary policemen, whose protection was sought, were unwilling to render it, but on application at headquarters they have had two officers appointed for their protection, and since this has been done have worked undisturbed

They have often heard the women complain that so long as the missionaries patrolled their street they might as well close their houses. It is therefore evident that if there were sufficient workers, so that no one need be out more than one night in the week in this arduous service, they could hinder all visiting of such houses. They earnestly requested, therefore, that the members of the society would go and observe the work, and then take a share in it, in order to save souls from destruction.

Messrs. Wright and Clausen alluded further to the relation of the poor women towards their work. These were often glad of their words of warning and advice their tracts, and their news that God had not cast them away in their wretchedness, when they would turn to Him. Three women in one street had forsaken their evil life, and were won back to society; the owner of a house in the same street decided to give up that business, although it brought him in 18s. a day, and that he would not touch a farthing more from such a source.

Many could be saved if there were some place where they could gather them and speak the Word of God to them; a home where they could stay for a time and learn how to earn an honest living. Hitherto society has too much assisted in their destruction, both by police registration and in other ways; specially would they instance the public dancing rooms, where many an honest but inexperienced girl has been led to her fall Would it not be possible to get hold of one of these dancing rooms, and change it to a meeting house, where the word of God would be preached to the fallen? And could there not be a receiving-house provided, open all night, where such could be brought for a time as were willing to be saved from their life of sin, until they were placed in a more permanent home? These questions the missionaries laid earnestly on the hearts of the Society's members; and as they met a warm response, the Court Yard Mission was desired to call a future meeting for their further consideration, and setting such a receiving-house on foot.

A VETERAN EVANGELIST.

A LARGE company of friends met at the Tremont Temple, Boston, on January 5, to celebrate the golden wedding of Rev. Dr. A. B. Earle, who has been at work in pastoral and evangelistic work for the last fifty-five years. Mr. and Mrs. Earle were present, and received the heartiest congratulations and prayerful good wishes of those assembled, as well as greetings by letter from many friends in America and in this country.

Interesting details of Mr. Earle's career were given by one of the ministers present, and the following page from his diary was read:—"Fifty-five years ago I preached my first sermon in Truxton, N.Y. During these years I have preached 20,850 times. This is 775 times more than one sermon a day for fifty-five years; also, in this time, I have held 15,500 prayer meetings. To hold these meetings I have travelled 340,000 miles without an accident of importance. My health has been firm nearly all this time, so that I have preached two, three, four, and even five times a day, and travelled nights, if necessary, six and eight months together, year after year. I have held meetings in three of the British provinces, and all the States except Florida and Colorado. Twenty-two denominations have joined heartily in these meetings. I have found jewels for Christ's crown among them all. As a fruit of these meetings, I think 160,000 persons have united with the different churches, and I think 200 or 300 of these converts have entered the ministry."

Among the speakers of the evening was Rev. Joseph Cook; he expressed great indebtedness to Mr. Earle, whose lectures he attended as a student, and from whom he had received much evangelistic inspiration.

WORTHING.—The annual tea in connection with the Ragged School here was held on Wednesday week. A very enjoyable and profitable evening was spent. The school is supported by voluntary subscriptions; the treasurer is Miss Terry, 38, South-street, Worthing.

GRACECHURCH-STREET Y.M.C.A.—The New Year's reception of the members belonging to this branch was held last week at the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, and was attended by a large number of young men. The branch having outgrown the limited accommodation at its disposal, there is a desire on the part of the committee to move into larger premises in Lime-street. Towards this object a sum of £1000 has been promised to cover three years' rent. Mr. J. Herbert Tritton, in welcoming the members, expressed a hope that the movement would take more root among City men proper. He denied that they were robbing the churches of young men, but, on the contrary, were in reality giving them back to the churches. If this fact were more generally known the Associations would be better supported. Among other friends present were Mr. and Mrs. John Sands, who gave the reception; Mr. Leite Rozas, and Mr. N. R. Hughman, the energetic secretary.

THE GOSPEL FOR ARABIA.—2.

DEAR SIR,—In my former letter on this subject, I pointed out the manner in which the Bedouin tribes of Northern Arabia might be reached with the Gospel. The more settled populations of El Hasa and Oman, on the Persian Gulf, also present a favourable field for evangelisation. They are all Mahomedan, but not so bigoted and intolerant as elsewhere. Palgrave says of them, "The character of the inhabitants is little predisposed to exclusiveness and asperity. Wahabeeism exists, indeed, but only among the few who form the dominant and hated class. Mahomedanism itself, though varnished over most of the surface, is scarce skin-deep, and numbers who hate Islam, no less in its ordinary than in its Wahabee form, are devoid of even this superficial coating."

There is a good deal of intercourse by sea with British India, and merchants and traders from India may be found in some of the sea-port towns. El Hasa is nominally under the Turkish Government, but Oman is independent. Muscat is the capital and the seat of a British resident. It is in constant communication with Bombay, and a port of call for the British India Navigation Company's steamers. A good English school would probably be welcomed here. The climate is very hot on the coast, but there are high mountains not far distant where the temperature is less. The people generally seem to be one of the most hopeful of the Arab races. Muscat would probably be the best mission centre in the first instance.

On the South Coast, Aden, a British possession, offers a most important centre for missionary enterprise; the Church Missionary Society are desirous of commencing work there, and a gentleman of independent means is also preparing to establish a mission there, and is already on the spot.

The Somali tribes, who are to be found along a length of 500 miles of the opposite coast of the Gulf of Aden, are readily accessible from that place; and, indeed, two or three of their principle towns, such as Berbereh and Zeyla, are now in British occupation. There is no reason why a mission should not be begun amongst them.

The South-Western part of Arabia, called Yemen, is mostly a high, mountainous country, with quite a temperate climate, and presents a most inviting field for missionary effort. Its capital, Sanaa, is 3000 feet above the sea, and has a population of 20,000.

Along the eastern coast of the Red Sea there are numerous small ports where intercourse might be had with the people, by means partly of the native coasting ships, and partly by steamers which call at Jedda (population 30,000), the port of Mecca. In Arabia there are ten millions of people without the Gospel! Who will go to these hitherto totally neglected tribes? I shall be happy to send my pamphlet on the subject to anyone desiring further information.

F. T. Haig, Major-General.

MANY A PROMISE is written in sympathetic ink, that we cannot read till the fire of trouble brings out the characters.

THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION is doing a good work by visiting all the vessels passing Gravesend and Tilbury, and by holding farewell services on outward-bound steamers. Packets of literature are placed in all the berths, and Testaments are freely distributed. Those sad at parting with friends are urged to take with them the "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother." Work is also carried on amongst the navvies working at the new Tilbury Docks. There is great distress just now, as work is scarce during the severe weather, and while the men partake of the soup provided by the Mission, an opportunity is afforded to preach the Gospel to them. Help is much needed. The secretary is Rev. H. Bloomer, 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

ATWORTH.—A successful mission has been carried on for three weeks in this village by Mr. John Elliott. A good work has been done among the young, numbers of whom have professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

MAJOR COLE has had a good work in Jersey City, and is now engaged in similar work in the Twenty-third Street Tabernacle, New York, where already there have been many cases of deep interest and promises of great blessing.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—In connection with the Semi-Jubilee of this Society, over one hundred ministers of nine denominations have agreed to preach sermons, within the bounds of the Glasgow Presbyteries, in the present month.

INVERNESS.—Hon. Miss Waldegrave, of London, and Mrs. Stewart, of Logie, have conducted a series of meetings for ladies here. Special efforts were successfully made to spiritually interest many of the Royal Naval Reserve.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Mr. James Wharton has held Gospel meetings in the central church here, and great interest has been manifested in the good work, especially among the young. This congregation is made up of the élite of the coloured people of New Orleans, and this work of God among them will result in great blessing.

DR. GRATTAN GUINNESS has been holding an evangelistic mission in the Alfred Hall, Ballarat, Australia. There was an attendance of about 1000 persons at the opening meeting. The lecturer dealt ably with his subject, "Our infidel leaders, and what becomes of them." Dr. Guinness spoke with great earnestness and power, and produced a profound impression upon his auditors.

SCRIPTURE READERS.—The annual tea meeting for the readers (and their wives) of the Church of England Scripture Readers' Association took place on Tuesday evening, January 26, in the dining hall of King's College, Strand. The Association employs about one hundred and thirty readers in a large number of poor and populous parishes in London and the suburbs.

WILLIAM TAYLOR, THE NAVVY EVANGELIST.—The friends of this successful working-man preacher will regret to hear that he is compelled by medical orders to desist from preaching for some weeks. In connection with the Evangelisation Society he has been doing the work of an evangelist for about twenty years, and has been blessed by God to the conversion of many throughout the United Kingdom.

WHITEHAVEN SAILORS' REST.—At the Whitehaven Protestant Hall on Wednesday, Jan. 20, a public tea and meeting was held in connection with the above Rest. Mr. H. J. Whiteside (chairman) said the Rest had proved a great blessing. Many conversions have been the result of the meetings held, and much good has been done among the young. The place is too small to accommodate the work carried on, and help will be gladly received by Mr. J. Davis, Secretary, Duke-street, Whitehaven.

PETERHEAD.—A series of Gospel meetings have been conducted here by Mr. T. E. Marsh. It was apparent from the first that God had a blessing for us, and as the interest deepened the numbers increased. The Gospel of God was preached in the power of the Spirit. At every meeting numbers of inquirers remained for prayer and conversation. Many were led into the light and liberty of the Gospel. The noonday gatherings for prayer and searching the Scriptures have also been seasons of great blessing. W. S.

GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.—The Gospel schooner Mystery has arrived safely in the West of England, after having encountered very severe weather. The vessel will undergo repairs at Plymouth, where it will be useful among the fishermen assembled there for the mackerel catching. In March the Mystery will again sail for work on the French coast. Bibles, Gospel-books, bags, &c., and help for the refitting of both his mission vessels and their boats, will be gladly received by Mr. Henry Cook, Stoke-road, Gosport.

MANCHESTER.—The annual social gathering of the Y.M.C.A., held last week, was largely attended. The various attractions provided by the Committee were much appreciated. Mr. Newett, the secretary, stated that nearly 1000 members and associates had been enrolled during the past year.

OBITUARY.

RICHARD ALLEN, DUBLIN.

THIS well-known Friend departed this life at Brooklawn, Blackrock, co. Dublin, on January 19, at the age of eighty-three. He gave his early life to business and philanthropy, being a leading worker in the anti-slavery, anti-opium, temperance, and peace movements, besides many kindred objects. He took a great interest in the spread of the Gospel in Palestine and Syria; indeed, of late years, his interest in all efforts to spread the knowledge of God's love in Christ was his leading aim; in many parts of his own country he and his wife held Gospel meetings. In 1883 he visited America, and was present at the yearly meetings of the Society of Friends, in Indiana and Baltimore. He also spent a month in the Southern States, visiting Le Moyne Institute, at Memphis; Southland College, near Helena, Arkansas; and in Tennessee, Maryville College and Fisk University; with other institutions for the coloured people. He was much interested in the work carried on at the Christian Union-buildings, Dublin, and greatly enjoyed the annual conventions.

MISS SMITHIES.

This lady, the sister of the late Mr. T. B. Smithies, of The British Workman, died on Thursday morning last at 46, Tollington-park, N. She was for many years a confirmed invalid; though she suffered intensely from physical pain and weakness, her brave spirit bore her up through it all, and she was a very marked example of patient endurance and resignation in the midst of trial. She was wont to say in times of unusual bodily weakness that she seemed like a boat being impelled by the waves towards the shore; though she was again and again drawn back on the sea of suffering and pain she anticipated the time when some great wave would safely land her on the heavenly side. Her longing has now been realised, and she has joined "the loved ones gone before." She took a deep interest in the many good works in which her late brother and mother were so actively engaged, and for a considerable period Mr. Smithies entrusted to her the editorial arrangement of The Infants' Magazine. On Tuesday last her mortal remains were laid to rest in Abney-park Cemetery.

MISSIONARY TRAINING COLLEGE,

Puerto, Sta. Maria (Spain).

THIS institution, begun two years ago, for the purpose of training a native pastorate for Spain, has had a fair amount of success. Partly on account of the cholera in Cadiz, and partly through the ill-health of Rev. Wm. Moore, who presides over it, it was not opened this session till a few days ago. It is believed that seven students will be in attendance. Many of them are very poor. In some cases, they pay a small sum monthly towards the expense of their board and training, as much as they can afford in other cases, nothing can be expected from them. The course sketched out extends over seven sessions. This seems a long time; but it is not too long, considering all that has to be taught them: their education is usually in a very imperfect state when they are received.

Mr. Moore is in Egypt at present, seeking restoration to health, but hopes shortly to return to Spain. In the meantime three of the Andalusian pastors take each two days a week at the College, and for three hours a day give instruction in the various subjects upon which the students are engaged. There is nothing more needed at this moment in Spain than a pious, well-trained native pastorate. Will our readers pray for God's blessing on this effort to provide it; also for Mr. Moore's speedy recovery?

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.—After careful inquiry it appears that English is spoken by about ninety million persons; German by about seventy-five million; Spanish by fifty-five million, and French by forty-five million.—Warheitszeuge.

THE JEWS.—A drawing-room meeting was held on a recent afternoon at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Stanham, 34. York-place, Portman-square, on behalf of the Barbican Mission to the Jews. There was a large and interested gathering. Revs. Nevile Sherbrooke and L. Stanham took part in the happy proceedings, warmly commending Mr. Warschawski's work among this ancient people.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

MRS. TALMAGE, the wife of the Brooklyn preacher, lectures every Sunday to a class of 300 women and men.

MR. W. A. SOUTHWELL (late of Cardiff), the new general secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Melbourne, has received a warm welcome from the friends in that city.

PARIS.—Miss Booth, of the Salvation Army, accompanied by eight young girls, visited several of the Paris theatres on Christmas Eve and Christmas evening, selling En Avant, and calling out, "Prepare to meet thy God."

GENEVA.—There is a need felt here that the Church of God should be aroused to more vigorous life; Christians of all denominations have, therefore, agreed to hold a series of meetings from January 29 to February 3.—Journal Religieux.

CHICAGO.—It is estimated that the Third Presbyterian Church in Chicago, of which Dr. A. E. Kittredge is the pastor, sustains the largest weekly prayer meeting in America. The lecture-room will seat one thousand people, and it is usually full.

WEST AFRICA.—The two "Missioners" for West Africa, Rev. S. W. Darwin Fox (with Mrs. Fox) and Rev. F. W. Dodd, arrived at Sierra Leone on November 23, and held preparatory services and conferences there. They then went on to Lagos, where they were to hold a "Mission" in December, returning to Sierra Leone for January. —C. M. Intelligencer.

SEAMEN AT ALEXANDRIA.—Miss Calder, of the Church of Scotland Mission, Alexandria, writes with respect to the Seamen's Bethel in that port:—"Many of the men tell me it is impossible to have any idea of the great blessing and comfort to have the 'Bethel' to come to. We should be glad to receive old magazines or papers for the sailors; sometimes we are in great straits for them."

SAN PAULO, BRAZIL.—In this province a priest recently snatched a New Testament from the hands of a lady and burned it; and one of the colporteurs of the American Bible Society had a box of Scriptures weighing one hundred pounds forcibly taken from him and burned. The authorities would give him no redress, saying that the government would not protect heretics.—Morning Star.

HOME OF HOPE, BOMBAY.—Nine years ago a lady opened this Home for the erring. It has been blessed of the Lord in winning numbers back to a life of purity. It is now made over wholly to the sister of the founder. Both were converts of William Taylor, in his Bombay campaign, fourteen years ago. Address all communications to Mrs. Dora M. Gladwin, Home of Hope, Grant-road, Bombay.

THE MASSACHUSETTS REFORMATORY, one year old on December 20, began the year with about one hundred men, and closed with 622; it has among the 300 men in its evening schools, not only those pursuing the common branches, but students in algebra, French, mechanical and architectural drawing. Other agencies are a weekly prayer-meeting, a Y.M.C.A., a Debating Society, a Literary and Scientific Circle, and a Literary and Scientific Club.

AMERICAN INDIANS.—At a convention of Y.M.C.A.'s of Minnesota and Dakota in St. Paul, December 4 and 5, three Indians were present representing Indian associations in Dakota. They addressed the convention in their own language, the Rev. A. S. Riggs acting as interpreter. Mr. Riggs believes that in evangelising the Indians lies the real solution of the Indian problem, and the time for this work is now. There are 2000 church members among the Sioux and Dakotas.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, FEB. 7.—LEVITICUS XXV.

As the weekly Sabbath was to be the rest for man and beast "unto the Lord," so the Sabbatical year, every seven years, was to be a rest for the land "unto the Lord," and the year of Jubilee, at the end of seven weeks of years, constituted another species of Sabbath rest and restoration for the poor, who had alienated their possessions. These two latter Sabbatical institutions, the Sabbatical year, and the year of Jubilee, form the subject of this chapter.

"The Sabbatical year, and the year of Jubilee, belong to that great Sabbatical system which runs through the religious observances of the law."—Sp. Com.

Each of these Sabbaths had its own spiritual lesson. The weekly Sabbath, commemorating, as it did, God's rest after his great creation work, directed faith to rest in the expectation of another work—that of redemption—to be wrought by God; and faith now rests in the finished work of Christ, which the day of the Lord's resurrection recalls to mind as not only finished, but accepted; so that "he that is entered into his rest (i.e., the Lord Jesus) hath Himself also rested from his works, as God did from his" (Heb. iv. 10, R.V.). This rest of faith is what the believer enters upon in justification.

The spiritual teaching of the Sabbatical year seems to point to sanctification by faith. Every seventh year they were to do nothing to the land, because God would Himself do that which was needed in the sixth year. "I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years" (ver. 21). "He that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit" (John xv. 5). "From me is thy fruit found" (Hosea xiv. 8).

The spiritual lesson of the year of Jubilee pointed onwards to "the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. i. 14). "Ye shall return every man unto his possession" (ver. 10); "the hired servant . . . he shall go out in the year of Jubilee" (ver. 54). The liberty and restoration to alienated possessions then enjoyed was based upon atonement by the trumpet of the Jubilee being sounded on the Day of Atonement. Thus Christ Jesus made unto us "righteousness, sanctification, and redemption" were the three lessons respectively taught by the three great Sabbatical institutions.

MONDAY, FEB. 8.—LEVITICUS XXVI.

3.—If ye walk in my statutes and keep my commandments, &c.—The blessings promised in these opening verses (3—13) to obedience were seldom possessed by Israel, because of their conditional character. The "if" which precedes the "then" (ver. 4) made the fulfilment of the promise depend on an obedience rarely, if ever, rendered.

4.—The trees of the field shall yield their fruit.—This promise throws light on Habakkuk iii. 17, for it shows that the state there described, when the fig-tree, vines, and olive had all failed, must have been the result of disobedience. How striking, in the light of this, appears the power of faith to rise above all failure—like the hind bounding to its "high places"—and "rejoice in the Lord," and "joy in the God of salvation."

14.—But if ye will not hearken unto Me.—"Notwithstanding the solemn and appalling pictures placed before their eyes in verses 14—33 of this chapter, they forsook the Lord and served other gods, and thus brought upon themselves the sore judgments threatened in this section, the bare record of which is sufficient to make the ears tingle. Under the heavy weight of these judgments they are suffering at this very hour. Scattered and peeled, wasted and outcast, they are the monuments of Jehovah's inflexible truth and justice. They read aloud to all the nations of the earth a most impressive lesson on the subject of the moral government of God,—a lesson which it would be profitable for these nations to study deeply,—yea, and a lesson which it would be salutary for our hearts to ponder likewise."—C. H. M.

TUESDAY, FEB. 9.—LEVITICUS XXVII.

"The position which this chapter holds after the formal conclusion (xxvi. 46) suggests that it is of a supplementary character. There seems, however, no reason to doubt its Mosaic origin."—Sp. Com.

"The directions concerning vows follow the express termination of the Sinaitic law-giving as an appendix to it, because vows formed no integral part of the covenant laws, but were a free-will expression of piety common to almost all nations, and belonged to the modes of worship current in all religions, which were not demanded, and might be omitted altogether, and which really lay outside the law, though it was necessary to bring them into harmony with the demands of the law upon Israel. Making a vow, therefore, or dedicating anything to the Lord by vowing, was not commanded, but was presupposed as a manifestation of reverence for God sanctified by ancient tradition, and was simply regulated according to the principle laid down in Deut. xxiii. 22—24, that it was not a sin to refrain from vowing, but that every vow, when once it had been made, was to be conscientiously and inviolably kept (comp. Prov. xx. 25; Eccles. v. 3—5), and the neglect to keep it to be atoned for with a sin-offering (chap. v. 4). This chapter treats only of ordinary vowing, and gives directions for redeeming the thing vowed, in which it is presupposed that everything vowed to the Lord would fall to his sanctuary as corban (an offering, Mark vii. 11), and, therefore, that when it was redeemed the money would also be paid to his sanctuary."—Keil.

8.—According to his ability that vowed shall the priest value him.—"If it be a question of man's undertaking to meet the claims of righteousness, then he must meet them. But if, on the other hand, a man feels himself wholly unable to meet those claims, he has only to fall back upon grace, which will take him up just as he is. Moses is the representative of the claims of Divine righteousness. The priest is the exponent of the provisions of Divine grace. The poor man who was unable to stand before Moses, fell back into the arms of the priest."—C. H. M.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 10.—NUMBERS I.

"The title commonly given to this book (Numbers) is evidently suggested by the two numberings of the people recorded in it in chapters i. and xxvi. It narrates the history of the Israelites during their sojourn in the wilderness, from the completion of the lawgiving of Sinai to their mustering in the plains of Moab for actual entry into the land of promise. Its contents may be divided into four parts: (1) Preparations for the break-up of the encampment at Sinai, and the marching on Canaan (i.—x. 10); (2) the march from Sinai to the borders of Canaan, and repulse by the Canaanites x. 11—xiv. 45); (3) a notice of various occurrences and enactments belonging, most probably to the thirty-eight years of penal wandering in the desert xv. 1—xix. 22); (4) the history of the last year spent in the wilderness, the fortieth after the exodus (xxi.—xxxvi. 13). The incidents are generally given in chronological order, except in the third part. The five chapters comprised in this part appear to deal with a long period, from which only isolated episodes are given, and of these the dates can only be conjectured."—Sp. Com.

49.—Only thou shalt not number the tribe of Levi.—"The Levites were appointed to the charge of the tabernacle, and were therefore not entered on the general muster-rolls. Hence when a census of this tribe takes place (iii. 15, xxvi. 62) all the males are counted from a month old and upward, and not, as in the other tribes, those only who were of age for service in the field. Their zeal against the worshippers of the golden calf (Exod. xxxii. 26—29) gave them a distinct position, and led to their receiving as their reward the dignity to which they are now first expressly named, though reference to their future office appears previously in Lev. xxv. 32.—Ibid.

THURSDAY, FEB. 11.—NUMBERS II.

2.—By his own standard, with the ensign of their fathers' house.—"The twelve tribes were to encamp, each one by his standard, by the signs of their fathers' houses, opposite to the Tabernacle (at some distance) round about, and according to the more precise directions given afterwards in such order, that on every side of the Tabernacle three tribes were encamped side by side, and united under one banner, so that the twelve tribes formed four large camps, or divisions of an army. The word 'standard' (banner or flag) denotes primarily the larger ensign possessed by every division composed of three tribes, which was also the banner of the tribe at the head of each division. The 'ensigns' were the smaller flags or banners which were carried at the head of the different tribes and subdivisions of the tribes (fathers' houses). Neither the Mosaic law, nor the Old Testament generally give us any intimation as to the form or character of the standard. According to Rabbinical tradition, the standard of Judah bore the figure of a lion, that of Reuben the likeness of a man or a man's head, that of Ephraim the figure of an ox, and that of Dan the figure of an eagle; so that the four living creatures united in the cherubic forms described by Ezekiel were represented upon these four standards."—Keil.

Although it is true that there is no direct Scripture statement as to these 'standards,' the Jewish tradition above mentioned is confirmed in two instances; that of Judah by Gen. xlix. 9 (comp. Rev. v. 5), and that of Ephraim by Deut. xxxiii. 17.

FRIDAY, FEB. 12.—NUMBERS III.

1.—These also are the generations of Aaron and Moses.—"The 'generations' now given, though entitled those of Aaron and Moses (Aaron standing first as the elder brother) turn out really to be those of Aaron only. The term 'generations' does not point to birth and origin so much as to downward history and development. The personal dignity of Moses, though it gave him rank as at the head of his tribe, was not hereditary. He had no successor in his office but the distant prophet like unto himself (Deut. xviii. 18). Aaron, however, was, as this chapter shows, the ancestor of a regular succession of priests."—Sp. Com.

13.—Because all the firstborn are mine; for on the day that I smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt, I hallowed unto Me all the firstborn in Israel."—The substitution of the Levites for the firstborn seems intended to bring out the truth, that those who had the charge and service of holy things in Israel must be a redeemed people to entitle them to such a privilege. The firstborn were such, in virtue of their being sheltered by the blood, when the firstborn in Egypt were destroyed. By putting the Levites, by exchange, in their place, they virtually were regarded as a people redeemed by blood, and thus consecrated to the Lord.

46.—Two hundred and threescore and thirteen of the firstborn of the children of Israel, which are more than the Levites.—In making the exchange, it was found that there were 273 more firstborn than Levites. These were redeemed at the rate of five shekels apiece, and thereby were freed from the special kind of service to which the Lord called the Levites alone.

SATURDAY, FEB. 13.—NUMBERS IV.

This chapter treats of the rules of service and the numbering of the Levites qualified for service. The three families of the three sons of Levi, Kohath, Gershon, and Merari, are assigned their respective duties in relation to the moving of the tabernacle.

4.—"About the most holy things."—The Kohathites took precedence because their service had respect to "the most holy things," that is, the contents of the holy and most holy place. But while given the privilege of bearing these holy things, they did not themselves attempt to take them down or put them up. That was the exclusive prerogative of the priesthood. Of the Kohathites it was said (ver. 15): "They shall not touch any holy thing, lest they die;" but, on the other hand, "Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden" (ver. 19).

24.—"This is the service of the families of the Gershonites."—The most sacred vessels having been entrusted to the Kohathites, to the Gershonites was committed the carrying of the curtains and hangings of the Tabernacle, but their service was strictly under the direction of Aaron and his sons (see ver. 27).

33.—"This is the service of the families of the sons of Merari."—The boards, the bars, the pillars, the sockets, were their charge, with the pins, the cords, with all their instruments (ver. 31).

48.—"Even of those that were numbered of them, were eight thousand and five hundred and fourscore."—"This numbering exhibits of males between thirty and fifty years of age: Family of Kohath, 2750 (ver. 36); family of Gershon, 2630 (ver. 40); family of Merari, 3200 (ver. 44); in all, 8580."—Sp. Com.

THE COVENANT OF PEACE.

EZEKIEL xxxiv. 25, xxxvii. 26.

WHY should I strive to sound the depths
Of thy dear Love Divine,
When I do know that Jesus died,
And therefore I am thine.

Why should I pine to pierce the cloud
That hides the distant land,
When I do know that Thou dost hold
In thine my trembling hand.

Why should I wish to wrest from Thee
The secrets of thy will,
When I do know that Thou art Love,
And Thou hast said, "Be still."

But if at times my heart be stirred
To ask from Thee a sign,
Then whisper Lord, "All things are yours
For ye are Christ's and mine."

JAMES BOWKER.

PURE LITERATURE in NEW ZEALAND.

THE manager of the New Zealand Bible, Tract, and Book Society, writing from Dunedin on December 4, says:—

Our work, from small beginnings, has, under God's blessing, become one of colonial importance. We are seeking to saturate the community with the Word of God, and all the best helps for Christian workers, and to create a taste for such reading by bringing a regular supply within the reach of all. We have a colporteur with a two-horse van, who for the last ten years has visited all the more out-of-the-way places, diggings, &c., within a radius of some 150 miles from Dunedin.

Another agent goes by rail throughout the Olap and Southland districts, visiting every station, and at the principal points opening a temporary shop, from a few days to two or three weeks. A third agent goes by sea to the various ports, opening a shop for a week, or, perhaps two, at the port, and then visiting the stations up and down the railway lines radiating therefrom. He started this season with as much as £450 worth of stock, and will cover all the North Island, except Wellington City and neighhourhood, and the province of Auckland. The latter province is fairly well supplied by the local S.S. Union, and we have not seen it well to interfere with others, who are aiming at the same objects as ourselves.

In Wellington we have this year opened a stationery depôt, finding that there was little or nothing done by the trade, and that there was quite a destitution of spiritual food. We were very heartily welcomed by the Christian element there, and we already feel assured that we have not made a mistake, in that case, in departing from our general rule of working with one central depôt, and a number of travelling agencies, only.

Our other man, Mr. John Bain, a devoted old Highlander, has taken up the west coast, taking the risk himself, being content with the poorest subsistence, that he may thus serve Christ. He penetrates the roughest gullies on the diggings with his knapsack, and having no better means of transit than any ordinary cart, which he hires when he wants to move his headquarters.

We thus cover about two-thirds of New Zealand with a network of agencies, visiting each town, village and hamlet annually, as nearly as possible to the day, so we are looked for regularly at the same time.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A "Deaf and Dumb Temperance Army" has been formed.

One-third of the Hull police force are said to be total abstainers.

Dr. B. W. Richardson has accepted an invitation to visit America.

The Leeds Women's Christian Temperance Union has had a quietly successful year.

The American Women's Christian Temperance Union now numbers about 200,000 members.

A Women's Christian Temperance Union has been formed in Tasmania, and promises success.

It is intended to seek an extension of the compulsory powers granted under the Habitual Drunkards Act.

Over 200 Temperance sermons were delivered in connection with the Baptist Temperance Sunday, January 24.

Dakota, the New American State, has decided to make prohibition a fundamental article in its constitution.

The United Presbyterian Church, Barrhead, after trial, have agreed to the use of unfermented wine for sacramental purposes.

In the State of Mississippi there are signs of a great Temperance revival. A Local Option Bill is shortly to be brought before the Legislature.

Friday, January 8, was observed throughout the United States as a day of prayer for the abolition of the opium and liquor traffic, and of other immoral trades.

The Union Signal says, that at a Washington State dinner Miss Cleveland had all the wine-glasses removed from round her plate, and every lady at the table did likewise.

In Chicago, many drink-saloons of a low type keep open all night in defiance of law. Col. Ebersfold, Supt., says the police force are so "hampered by political influences" they cannot stop these abuses.

The American Church Temperance Society is promoting a High Licence Bill for New York State. Prohibitionists think it "not a Temperance but a revenue measure," and mean to "fight it to the death."

A Baptist deacon, at St. Clair, Pa. (U.S.), took an active part in compelling publicans to close on Sundays as required by law. For this and like action he has had his house blown up with dynamite.

Lieut. Taunt, U.S. Navy, reporting to his Government on the Congo Free State, says that temperate habits enabled him to maintain uninterrupted health during the whole time of his exploration.

An address of Kansas Baptist Churches says :—"In four years the saloon has been driven out of nearly 300 towns and cities in the State. We have 75 counties without a saloon, and in only three cities is the law openly violated."

Mr. Matthew Burnett has been paying a visit to New Zealand. In December he intended to return to Tasmania or Australia to join his family for a short time, and then to resume his labours in New Zealand on the West Coast in February.

An American librarian has found a Temperance volume, issued in 1751, thirty-four years before Dr. Rush's pamphlet. It was entitled "A Warning to Dram Drinkers," and the author was a Scotchman, James Burgh, a cousin of Robertson, the historian.

In the county of Oxford, Ontario, the Canada Temperance Act has been in force since the 1st of May last; the Mayor of Woodstock, the county town, states that "the passage of the Act has stopped nineteen-twentieths of the drinking in Woodstock."

Mayor Hardy, of Lincoln, Neb., has made a great many enemies by his strong stand in favour of Temperance. One of them left a coffin at his door as a warning. The Mayor promptly sold the coffin for 13 dollars, and gave the money to a Temperance Society.

The annual soirée in connection with the Christmas and New Year's collections associated with the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union took place last week at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. The object of the collections are the general promotion of Temperance principles among the young, and the aiding of the Temperance Hospital. During the evening a number of prizes were distributed to collectors.

In connection with the American Protestant Episcopal Church has been formed a new Temperance organisation, called the "Knights of Temperance," and composed of young men. The pledge is one of total abstinence, but also against "words and deeds, indecent and profane."

A meeting of Post-office officials was held at the City Temple last week in connection with the City of London Abstainers' Union. Addresses inculcating abstinence were given by Mr. S. A. Blackwood (Secretary to the Post-office), Rev. H. Price Hughes, Lady J. Manners and Mr. H. Varley.

Temperance work in New Zealand is being prosecuted with vigour. At Auckland the Temperance Hall is filled every Saturday evening. A Temperance meeting, after the ordinary Sunday evening service, has been introduced. A new Christian and Temperance paper, The Leader, has been started.

The first meeting for the year in connection with the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association, was held on Wednesday, Jan. 13. Earnest and united prayer was offered, and several excellent addresses were delivered. These meetings are held the first Wednesday in every month for women, at the Y.M.C.A.

At the quarterly meeting of the Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety, a communication was read on "Inebriety in Austria" from the Chevalier de Proskow-Marskorff, President of a similar society for Austria. There was also a paper by Dr. Peddie, on "The Habitual Drunkards Act," which raised an important discussion.

A point was well made by Dr. Goodell, of St. Louis, in a Temperance speech, in which, when illustrating the power of rum to degrade and the power of Temperance to elevate, he said: "Whenever we come down town among the saloons and convert a man to Christianity, he straightway moves up on the hill amongst the churches."

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others. The applications for admission are painfully urgent. FUNDS ARE GREATLY NEEDED. WM. HORNIBROOK, Secretary.

Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."

Sword and Trowel.

"A beautiful little volume, printed in red and black, with numerous engravings. Will be found both interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy. One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday School Rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."—Christian Treasury.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily-written and prettily-illustrated work."

THE ATHEIST REBUKED (With Full-page Engraving).

". . . . . I noticed suddenly a skiff, containing a single man, shoot out from the opposite shore, and prepare to cross. Just as he had attained the middle of the stream, one of his oars broke; and the other was jerked from his grasp. I shall never forget the look of agony which convulsed his face when he saw that all his supports were gone, and that the boat was rushing down towards the fatal cataract. At first, loud calls for help awoke the mountain echoes for miles around."—Extract.

BELIEVING, BUT NOT UNDERSTANDING.

A CHILD'S FAITH, A Poem.

"Mother, dear mother, will God not heed,
If we just go tell Him what 't is we need?"
With a wondering look the mother replied,
"If it is for our good, it will be supplied."

But the baby voice still questioned on—
"Will it be for our good if our home is gone
May I just go and ask, if it is God's will,
That He would give us a shelter still?"

THE GUEST AT MIDNIGHT (With Illustration).

By A. L. O. E.

"Numbers of God's needy servants can tell how, when nothing seemed left to them but prayer, help unexpectedly came. Many have been raised from sick-beds by earnest, persevering prayer. And in thousands of cases have prayers for others been answered. Mothers, pleading for years for the souls of sinful sons, have rejoiced over them at last. The writer herself can tell of prayer for a relative, continued after hope had almost died within her, being answered after about fifteen years. The fruit which had been long in ripening fell at last; and her heart bounded with joy and thanksgiving."—Extract.

JAMES SCOTT: A Biography (With Portrait).

"Few have a keener eye for, or a more vivid appreciation of, a 'fit man,' than D. L. Moody; and he promptly indicated James Scott as one admirably adapted for the care and conduct of the work of the new Association. The heads of the movement in Glasgow agreed with Mr. Moody's suggestion; and in James Scott they found a prudent, prayerful, single-minded worker, who had special aptitude for superintending and guiding the various meetings. His capacity for organization quickly developed. Frank and lively, cheerful and happy, he exhibited rare skill and tact for the detail of his work."—Extract.

BISHOP WILLIAM TAYLOR.

SAID John Wesley: "I look upon all the world as my parish;" and so, evidently, does William Taylor. On the eve of one of his departures from London to Australia, a gentleman said to him: "Mr. Taylor, what is your address now?" "I am sojourning on the globe at present, but don't know how soon I shall be leaving," was the reply. And such words were not unseemly in the mouth of a man through whose living voice the word of salvation has come to many hundreds of souls in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australasia. "His distinct and plain Gospel utterances, logically addressed to the common sense and consciences of his hearers, have been heard and heeded in nearly every important town and village of all the British colonies in the world."

Bishop Taylor's ancestors on both sides were early settlers in the American colonies. He was born in May, 1821, and is now, therefore, in his 65th year. In 1842 he entered the ministry of the American Methodist Episcopal Church. Believing that the best way to reach the masses was to go to them, he at once commenced his street-preaching in several American cities, and gave convincing proof of special adaptation and gift for that department of Christian effort. The success of his work at home pointed him out as a suitable man for preaching the Gospel to the thousands who were at that time crowding to the shores of the Pacific in search for gold. In 1849 he was sent as a missionary to California, where he laboured for seven years. His well-known book, "Seven Years' Street Preaching in San Francisco," furnishes a graphic account of his labours in "the land of gold and crime," labours in which the Lord was with his servant and gave him good success. The following independent testimony, in an unsolicited letter to Mr. Taylor from the Hon. Wilson Flint, Senator in the California State Legislature, and dated San Francisco, September, 1856, will be read with interest :—

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliot & Fry.)

It was on a Sunday morning in December, 1849, when landing from the Panama steamer, I wended my way with the throng to Portsmouth-square, this being, at that time, the great resort of the denizens of the rising metropolis. Three sides of the square were mostly occupied by buildings which served the double purpose of hotels and gambling-houses, the latter calling being at that time regarded as a very reputable profession. On the fourth and upper side of the square was an adobe (sunburnt brick) building, from the steps of which you were discoursing from the text, "The way of transgressors is hard." It was a scene I shall never forget. On all sides of you were gambling-houses, each with its band of music in full blast. Crowds were going in and out; fortunes were being made and lost; terrible imprecations and blasphemies rose amid the horrid wail; and it seemed to me that Pandemonium was let loose.

Above all this I heard you utter the following prophetic sentence, which has since been fully realised: "The power of Satan seems in the ascendancy wherever I cast my eye; but, sure as there is a God in heaven, we will turn the tables upon the Evil One, and where now my voice meets naught but scoffs and jeers, with unwavering faith in my Divine Master I hope to labour on to the time when these dens of iniquity around me shall be swept away." Six years have sped on, and what a wondrous change! Portsmouth-square now of a Sunday morning is thronged with women and children wending their way to the numerous churches in the surrounding localities. A great metropolis spreads out on every side, and civilisation and Christianity go hand in hand to humanise the race.

We have just referred to the fact that Bishop Taylor is an author: and thereby hangs a tale, which will be best told in his own words :—

"The panic and utter depreciation of values in 1855, that swamped California and shook all the commercial nations of the earth, together with a fire that burnt out my church property, left me under an intolerable burden of debt, for which, on behalf of the Church, in my sincere but unwise generosity, I had become personally responsible. Knowing the difficulty of collecting funds for a burnt-up undertaking, I determined not to ask or receive donations, but to make the money and settle with all concerned by writing and selling books. I meantime entered into a distinct agreement with God to go on fulfilling the Gospel ministry He had entrusted to me the same as before, without the slightest compromise with the book business. Through all the intervening years, I have stuck conscientiously to the principle of refusing offered gifts of money for my personal benefit or that of my family, with the qualified exceptions which I will name."

[We have not space, nor is it necessary, to give particulars of these.] "My preaching, dispensed day and night, six days per week, was without money or price; and out of the profits of my books I paid my own travelling expenses and supported my family."

These books have had an aggregate circulation of more than two hundred thousand copies, and have been used in the conversion of many souls. Chief amongst them are the following: "California Life Illustrated," "The Model Preacher," "Reconciliation; or, How to be Saved," "Infancy and Manhood of Christian Life," "The Election of Grace," "Four Years' Campaign in India," "Ten Years of Self-supporting Missions in India," and "Pauline Methods of Missionary Work."

We give this long list with a view to encouraging and facilitating the study of one of the most remarkable lives of modern times. During the last hundred years, at sundry times and in divers manners, God has been very emphatically speaking to us concerning the stupendous work of "preaching the Gospel to every creature," and "discipling all the nations." And no message do we esteem more worthy of thoughtful attention than that contained in the life and labours of William Taylor. For not only has he been a most successful evangelist, but, as the founder of self-supporting missions, he has also opened up new paths into the jungle of superstition and heathenism. Much has been accomplished on the old lines; but, with the financial strain visible in so many directions, and the cry of "retrenchment" sounding forth in some of our missionary camps, we do well to scan the whole horizon, to welcome any messenger of help and suggestion that our Great Commander may have sent forth.

After an evangelistic tour in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, Mr. Taylor, in 1870, by special request of the American missionaries, visited India. As the result of his preaching in Bombay and other places, a large number of English-speaking persons were converted, and these he was led to organise into "Fellowship Bands." The bands increasing, he decided to establish a branch of the American Methodist Episcopal Church, in direct relationship with the home organisation, "without the intermediate sponsorship of a missionary society." This was largely made possible by the fact that, from the first he purposed that the work in India should be self-supporting, friends at home being merely asked to supply passage-money to convey the workers to their field of labour. The ulterior aim was to make the English-speaking congregation of Europeans and Eurasians, supporting their own pastor, a means of acting, directly and indirectly, upon the surrounding mass of heathenism. The work spread to Southern India, and a South India Conference was the outcome. In all, more than fifty pastors have been sent out, all of whom, with their families, are supported by the people to whom they minister.

Some years later, in 1877, William Taylor felt himself called to establish similar self-supporting missions in South America. A very interesting record of his pioneer experiences in this work is to be found in his book, "Our South American Cousins." Discouraged by the authorities, and obliged to travel steerage through want of funds, he took passage to Callao, the principal port of Peru, and from thence proceeded to visit all the more important places on the west coast of South America. He sometimes lived on seventeen cents a-day, and by his unselfish devotion won the confidence and sympathy of even men of the world. He returned home with pledges that enabled him to send out at once a number of ministers and teachers to commence work in important centres. At present there are in connection with his self-supporting missions in Central and South America forty-five workers, who preach, labour in Sunday-schools, and teach over 800 young people in day-schools. In the capital of Chili, there is a male and female college attended by 240 students.

It was while assisting with his own hands in the erection of a church and schoolhouse at Coquimbo, Chili, that William Taylor, entirely without his knowledge, was elected to represent the South India Conference at the General Conference of the American Episcopal Church, held at Philadelphia, in May, 1884. At that Conference a coloured man, the delegate from Liberia, pleaded for the appointment of a bishop for Africa. His forefathers were compelled as slaves to come from Africa to America, and he would get even with them by compelling at least one white man to live in Africa. The request was granted, and a number of persons were put in nomination. The prospect of a life of homeless toil in the wilds of Africa, with untold hardships and privations, was too uninviting to awaken much competition. One after another the nominees withdrew their names, and William Taylor alone was left. Amid great excitement this noble man was elected to the uncoveted bishopric by a two-thirds vote of the whole Conference. To present him for ordination he chose the Eurasian representative from India, one of his own converts, and the coloured delegate from Africa, whose pleading had been so happily successful. It is not hard to believe that the scene was most impressive. "Such a trinity of persons, of three different races, and from three different continents, presented a picture of moral grandeur that has never been surpassed in the history of the Church, and it drew tears from many eyes."

The new Bishop at once faced his work with all the ardour and enthusiasm of a young man. "I would rather go to Africa among the heathen," said he, "than to heaven to live with the angels. They can get along without me. The Lord was forty years drilling Moses to lead a host out of Africa, and He has been drilling me for forty years to lead a host into Africa." Within eight months of his appointment, he planned the African Mission, and received, fitted out, and sent on their way, with provisions and stores for one year at least, the largest number of missionaries ever known to leave any Christian country at one time; and all this without an appeal being made to any church or individual for funds.

The missionary party, consisting of forty-three men, women, and children—one of the original forty-four had been left at Mayumba, some hundreds of miles further up the coast, to found a station there—landed at St. Paul de Loanda, the chief port of Angola, on March 18, 1885. They were, with one exception, to use the Bishop's own words, "in perfect health, and in glorious good cheer." They remained in Loanda for some time to get acclimatised, and to make preparations for advancing into the interior. One young brother died there; another, with three ladies, had to relinquish the work on account of ill-health; and several retired from the mission. The rest were in due time dotted down at five stations, extending some 370 miles into the interior, to the eastern border of the province of Angola. The line is to be extended, God willing, year by year, to the centre of the Dark Continent and onward, as fresh recruits shall arrive. In this first round in his new diocese Bishop Taylor walked 600 miles, sixty-four years of age though he be!

But what about self-support in such a field as this, where there are no English-speaking colonies to form bases of operations? Let the Bishop state his own case:—

"The foundation principle of self-support is the principle of value for value, in all exchanges of equivalents of every kind. In its application to the spread of the Gospel, it manifests itself by two methods: first, by the pioneer founder of self-supporting missions in regions where his glad tidings have, through the ignorance or prejudice of the people, no appreciable value in the market, and hence command no equivalent, not even to support the messenger. In that case the missionary supports himself, either by his own funds in hand, or by building tents, as did Paul and Barnabas. This we call principle No. 1. But the missionaries who are called to minister to organised churches are supported by the people they serve—value for value. 'They that preach the Gospel shall live by the Gospel.' This we call principle No 2."

Applying these principles to Africa, in each of the five stations already opened, schools have been commenced that yield a measure of support to the teachers on principle No. 2. And under principle No. 1 an industrial department is to be connected with each of these schools, in which "every productive employment at all suited to the country will be embraced, and constitute the legitimate work of the teachers so engaged." The barbarous millions of Africa live in the main from hand to mouth, and are hence a migratory people. To educate and Christianise them to an extent at all commensurate with the vast work to be done, the missionaries must, as quickly as possible, settle them. To settle them they must create local attractions and attachments—Christian homes, good farms, good orchards, good houses, good schools, houses of worship, the knowledge of God and of salvation in Jesus Christ. So it would seem that the principle of self-support, and the nature of the work to be done, alike justify the existence of an industrial department.

Having settled his first party, Bishop Taylor returned to Europe for a visit in October last. It is his purpose, God willing, to lead a missionary expedition up the Congo and Kasai into the Tushelange country during this year. The following account of a recent interview with the King of the Belgians, in connection with this new effort, gives an interesting glimpse of this courageous man:—

"I went to see Leopold II. in regard to my contemplated expedition up the Congo and the Kasai into the Tushelange country. It is my custom on going into a country to plant missions, to make myself and my purpose known at headquarters. When I went to Chili I called on the President, and informed him what I called for, and secured his goodwill. When I went to Brazil I in like manner called on the Emperor, Don Pedro, and had a cordial reception. So recently in Lisbon I visited the King of Portugal, and reported my work in Angola, and gave him a general account of my missions in India and South America.

"By official routine it would have taken our minister ten days to have secured me an audience with the Belgian King; but, having no time to wait for the tape routine, I walked straight to the palace, and in half an hour got the arrangement for an early meeting. The King met me at the door, extending his hand with a hearty welcome, and conducted me to a good seat, and we chatted forty minutes. King Leopold expresses great pleasure in the prospect of my planting missions in the Congo Free State, and will gladly co-operate with me in this great work by all means at his command."

With regard to the cost of this work in Africa, Bishop Taylor estimates that £250 for tools, machinery, and buildings, will suffice to place each station on a basis of permanent self-support.

If only in a line, we cannot forbear to mention the Bishop's noble wife, who, for the sake of Christ's work amongst the millions of Africa, has not hesitated to willingly make the large and real sacrifice required on her part.

We close with a quotation that reveals something of the inner life of the man whose career we have endeavoured thus briefly to sketch. It is taken from a paper in which the Bishop reviews his first seven months of labour in Africa:—

"Our party landed here (Loanda) the 19th of March—a little less now than seven months ago. Oh, how much we have lived in seven months! What a time of sifting, separating, chastening, developing! God kept us in quarantine for months before He would allow us to advance, and then we walked softly, as in the immediate presence of the King.

"I have been accustomed to walk with God for forty-four years without a break. Sometimes I have had a special manifestation to my spirit of the Son of God, when it was my pleasure to perceive his distinct personality, and sit in his presence and admire and adore Him, and in melting love sympathise with Him in his stupendous undertaking of bringing our lost race back to God, and feel the wish in my heart—'O that I could multiply myself into a thousand, and give a thousand years to help Jesus!' At other times, I have had a special manifestation of the personal Holy Ghost and the amazing 'love of the Spirit' for a perishing world; in adoring love and sympathy I have put myself entirely at his disposal, to illuminate and lead me according to his own infinite wisdom and love.

"But ever since I took charge of this expedition to Africa, with no less appreciation and admiration of the personal Jesus and the personal Holy Sanctifier, I have walked all these months in the manifestation of the personal presence of God the Father, with such enlarged perceptions of his wisdom, his love, his patience and forbearance, his infinite desire to adjust the human conditions essential to the fulfilment of his covenant pledge to the Redeemer—'to give Him the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession.' I sit in his presence, and more than ever before weep in adoring love. His special providences over me and my charge have been continuous and most distinctly discernible. My prayers, for the most part, are made up of thanksgiving for his innumerable, immeasurable mercies, and expressions of undoubting trust for the timely fulfilment, in detail, of all that He had engaged to do; and especially that I may see and do his will, and in no way defeat or mar any good that God would otherwise bring to pass as immutable certainty."

QUENCH NOT THE SPIRIT.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.*

My words are for those who are dissatisfied with themselves and are longing for the fulness of blessing treasured up for us in the Lord Jesus Christ. I believe the Lord often enlarges souls as men enlarge their premises—by pulling down before building up. Oftentimes He gives them a deeper foundation, because He wants to raise up a larger structure; so, to-night, it may be that the word will pull us down. It may be that God wants to speak to us words that will greatly discourage and perhaps even drive us to despair. Well, dear friends, let us listen to his voice.

The words that I have chosen, I hope at his prompting, are in 1 Thess. v. 19, "Quench not the Spirit." We are familiar with the words as a warning to the unconverted. The unconverted may be warned by them, but they were not spoken to the unconverted. If you turn to the beginning of the Epistle you will find to whom it is addressed: it is meant for the Church, for the old steady-going Christians amongst us.

How does it begin? "Paul unto the Church which is in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ." If ever there was the promise to run well, it was in the case of the people who began as well as these did: "We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers; remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father." These were converted people: "For our Gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake." And, then, as he comes near to the end of his letter he writes these solemn words, "Quench not the Spirit." They were spoken not to the world but to the Church. I want that to go quietly settling down in our hearts. The awful responsibility is yours and mine, of quenching the Holy Spirit.

Will you add to this another thought—that the most terrible words in this book are addressed to the Church. I can find you passages that thunder as God never thunders to the unconverted. When the Lord Jesus Christ came, who were the people to whom He spake the words of the most hopeless condemnation? He had pity for the outcast; He prayed for the harlots; He welcomed the prodigals; He prayed for his murderers. But there were some to whom He could only speak words of black and hopeless condemnation. They were the members of the Church, the religious people, the tremendously religious. They were religious all day long; they were religious in everything; they would not eat a meal but their religion came into it—religion in their washing, religion in their dressing, religion in their looks, and in everything. Yet these were the people of whom He speaks those terrible words that it would be well for us to look over.

I turn my eyes to see what He said in the olden times, and I see the terrible words that He spake to people who came to worship, who came to prayer, who came to offer incense and sacrifice; and yet God says, "I cannot bear it: I will turn my eyes away from it." What was the secret of it all? This—it was religion that did not make people religious. The great curse of our land to-day is Christianity that does not make people Christlike — Christianity that saves people from hell, but does not save them from sin. It would be better for us to give up the whole affair than to make men think ill of the Lord Jesus Christ. Oh! there is no hell to me like the hell of feeling that I have crucified afresh the Son of God, and put Him to an open shame.

Now let us think here, as Christian men and women, of the awful responsibility that rests upon us. No man will have such an account to give for anything as a Christian will have to give for knowing Christ. There is no genius which God ever gave to any man for which He will hold him so responsible as He holds you and me responsible for the great fact of knowing Christ. Oh, the tremendous responsibility of being a Christian! God has shown to us his great love in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ, laid it up for us, made it reach to us; what have we to answer to Him for knowing that? God has shown to us the utter loathesomeness of sin by his Holy Spirit; He has given to us in his Word blessed visions and promises of what He wants to do for us; think what it is that He holds us accountable for in these respects.

Then, think again. God has put into your hands and mine the awful responsibility, especially of communion with the Lord Jesus Christ. Other people only know Him at second-hand; they know Him through us. Will you add to all that these two thoughts: God holds us responsible, not for what we are, but for what we might be. Alongside of our whole life God sees by the side of this poor, dwarfed and shrivelled Christianity the full stature of the man in Christ Jesus. He holds us responsible, not for what we have, but for what we might have. He holds us responsible, not for what we do, but for what we might have done. Christ has opened to us the kingdom of heaven. Think of it; we beggars, hungry, ill-clad, who might be princes by his grace—kings and priests unto God.

All these things scorch us, wither us, consume us. They are real with God. They may to us be passing thoughts, lighter than vanity and emptier than the air, but these are the things that God holds so dear that to bring them about He has given to us his only begotten Son. These are the things for which every man who professes to be a Christian is responsible. Then think how all that goes on: oh! the compound interest of those arrears. Now it comes home with searching power to us: we are the people who may quench the Spirit, and I am afraid—indeed, I am sure—we do.

Now, shall we go on to notice what the Holy Spirit of God has come to do for us. Turn to Ephesians i. 13, "In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation:" that is to say, you heard about Jesus and you trusted in the word of his truth. You trusted in Him and it became to you the power of God unto salvation: "In whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." They were converted: they believed in the Lord Jesus Christ and their sins were forgiven. Because of this Paul is beginning to pray for them. The great peril is that we end instead of beginning there. In one of his great prayers he does not pray that their sins may be forgiven; he writes to them because they are forgiven. In a word, he says this: "Now, then, you are brought into the family of God, and I am going to pray for you, and I pray that God will give you his Holy Spirit, and that you may see what you have got in Christ." That is the starting point—not the finishing point. If I stop there, I have religion without Christ, religion that saves me from punishment by and by, but not the religion that makes me a Christly man.

* The first of three addresses at Exeter Hall on the Deepening of the Spiritual Life; we purpose to give them in successive issues.

Now, says Paul, "I want you to go on from this point." Oh! brothers, how is this? I know not how to speak of my own ministry. It does seem as if we were such poor, dim, dull-eyed Christians, that when one truth is thrust before us we put others into the background. We say that as soon as people are saved it is all done, and then they may drift along; but Paul says it is only just beginning. Here, he says, is where we quench the Spirit. As soon as the child is born of God the Spirit comes and begins to open up responsibilities in Christ, but we look, we sigh, and we pass them by. I believe there is a notion that holiness is a sort of first-class carriage to heaven; you can get there third-class, of course, though it is not very comfortable, but it is only the greatly privileged people who care to go in the holiness carriage. Still, the forgiveness carriage would take you there. Would to God that we could show such that there is only one way to heaven.

Unto what have you believed in the Lord Jesus Christ? "With the heart man believeth"—"unto escape from hell?" No. "Unto getting to heaven?" No. "Unto feeling happy?" No. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." If your faith does not lead you into that, your faith is dead. "Unto righteousness;" that is, rightness, right doing, right thinking. With the heart man believeth unto mastery over his temper; unto brotherliness, humility, lowness, meekness, uprightness in all his dealings, whether it pays or whether it does not. Oh! for such a Christianity as that. If we have not in our midst a power that makes us Christly men and Christly women, then let us turn our churches and chapels into lunatic asylums; let us bury the whole thing. For it is dead, and the sooner it is buried the better.

Now comes our awful responsibility that God has given to everyone by his Holy Spirit. Let me ask, most anxiously, How do we quench the Spirit? Paul's words suggest to us a way that may startle us, as it startled me when I first saw them. Turn again to the text, and see what is the next word: "Quench not the Spirit. Despise not." I thought: What can Paul have in his mind here?—"despise not." Surely these converted people are not in any danger of despising. If you will turn to chap. iv., you will see a text that curiously runs along the same lines, "for we are called of God unto holiness." What is the next word, "He, therefore, that despiseth." What is this? Is there something in the heart that despises holiness? Well, I think so. I have often watched the effect amongst a number of Christian people when the subject is broached: What do you think of the higher life, or Christian perfection, or the doctrine of sanctification, or of holiness, or whatever you like to call it? I have seen such a sneer, and such scorn: "Oh, I do not believe in perfection." Now there is no surer way of putting out a fire than by pouring water on it. And there is no surer way of quenching the Spirit than by flinging scorn upon his work.

You do not believe in perfection? Well, do you believe in imperfection? Your neighbour is a Christian; he tells you a lie. Oh! you believe Christians ought to be particular, but you do not believe in perfection. Where are you going to draw the line? Here is a Christian who kills someone. A Christian, of course, ought to mind what he is about, but still you do not believe in perfection. Here is a man who cheats in his business, and he is a professing Christian. Oh! you say, you know that, but you do not believe in perfection. If a man is a Christian the world says he ought to be this, that, and the other, and the world makes no allowance. God's Book makes no allowance. I believe in perfection when I look at the Lord Jesus Christ. He would not make an imperfect grass-blade, much less an imperfect Christian.

I do not, however, want this to be a theological address. You say you do not believe in perfection; but will you to-night come to the Lord Jesus Christ and say, "I do not believe Thou canst save me from all sin, but wilt Thou save me as far as Thou canst, and when Thou canst get no further I will wait." Beware of this scorn—the scorn that comes from the professor. So-and-so sets himself up to be holy, and look what he is. See what an unlovely fellow he is; how many things he does that are slipshod and slovenly. If some people have brought dishonour upon the blessed Lord Jesus Christ—denying Him, misrepresenting Him—do you not think He would like to have a few of us whom He might set forth as specimens of His handiwork? I can conceive of the Lord looking down and longing for nothing so much as to say: "Soul, I should like to show the world, through thee, what I can do for a poor soul." I do not care how much you believe, for it is not an intellectual matter; but I pray God to take this despising and this scorning out of us. I never argue about these things: I dare not. I feel as if they were too sacred, and too tender, to be so roughly handled. All the bloom and beauty are gone from them by those gross touches of ours; but I do pray that God would keep you from this despising, this scorning, that puts out the Spirit.

SOUTHSEA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.

THE second brief narrative of facts connected with this Mission, has been issued by Mr. John Denning (Inglis-road, Havelock-park, Southsea). Efforts are being made to build a new Gospel Hall, toward which about £250 are promised. A sale of work is to take place on February 24, and another in August. The tent work for the past year has been carried on with signs of blessing, and the Bible-carriage continues to spread the Gospel message; 1200 copies of God's Word were sold in Landport Market-place in one day.

Mr. Denning continues to look to God, through his stewards, to meet the expenses of this Mission; his testimony, after nineteen years, is that "He has never failed me."

"FORWARD."—Such is the title of a little report, by Mrs. M. S. Osborne, of the Soldiers' Home and Sailors' Rest, South Africa. The new Home was opened last year, and now provides reading-room, refreshment bar, &c. Miss Murray, daughter of the well-known author of "Abide in Christ," conducts a women's meeting weekly. Sunday evening services are crowded. One soldier writes: "I would have been in a drunkard's grave now if God had not led me to that meeting." The "Rest" was erected by the Harbour Commissioners, and placed in the hands of Mrs. Osborne, now residing at 12, Camden Hill-road, Upper Norwood, from whom this booklet may be obtained.

THE WORLD FOR CHRIST.

By REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

ADDRESSES AT THE LEICESTER MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

WHAT is to be done with this Continent of Europe that is moored alongside of us—so close that we can get into the heart of it from London in a few hours? Many of these near neighbours of ours, even the Protestants, when they are converted say they never heard the saving Gospel before. They are hearing the Gospel now as it were for the first time; they gladly accept Christ, and are set at liberty. But what an awful thing it is for us men and women living in this island to-day. We can get to them now with far greater facility than our forefathers. They need the Gospel, and, as I say, multitudes of them have never heard it. In some parts of the Continent, even the Protestants are going in a body into a sort of infidelity—forsaking the churches they have been going to for twenty years, and saying they do not intend to go any more.

Our subject is specially the Continent of Europe, but let us think for a moment of the Jews. We do not need to go to their land to find them; we have multitudes of them in our own East of London. A few years ago, when a house was opened in Ratcliff Highway for gathering the foreigners, many of the German Jews came in with the others. It was not more than eighteen months before twenty-four of them professed to have been converted, and showed the earnestness of their purpose by being baptized.

We have foreigners in almost all our large towns, and they have come here that we may give to them the Gospel, but they do not get it from us because we have a difficulty in speaking their language. I know that in Liverpool there are scores of men from the heart of Europe, Bulgarians, Slavonians, Bohemians, and so forth. These men, in the providence of God, have not been found out by the Protestant Christians, but they have themselves found out some of the Christians, who have got the Scriptures for them in their own tongue. They live in colonies by themselves, and they cannot all read; but the one or two that can read will gather the others, who will sit around and hear about Christ in those languages which sound to us almost like barbarous tongues.

But now as to the Continent. I can bear witness to what Colonel Clibborn has said about French Switzerland—how all these men and women come out in multitudes to hear the Gospel of Christ. Though mostly Protestants—I refer to the Canton of Geneva—many tell you when they are converted that it is the first time they heard the Gospel in that fashion. There are many of us in Leicester and other towns in England who are going annually to the Continent for our pleasure and for our health. Oh, that we would make a business of our Lord's business! He says if we are Christians we must make a business of his business. The Greek Church and the Catholics are full of tradition. The Churches of England and Scotland are full of traditions. We had a tradition about forty years ago that no one was to preach unless he was paid for it—unless he was a clergyman or a city missionary. This was one of the cruel traditions of the devil. When Christ met with tradition you know how He would tear it up, saying they made void the law of God by their tradition. We imagine too much that in the early times of the Church, the Gospel was spread only by the apostles, or those who were specially set apart by them. Eh! but we misread the Bible if we have that idea. That is another cruel tradition. For one apostle who preached the Gospel, there were hundreds who preached the Gospel without being apostles—simple laymen, and laywomen if I may use the expression. It was thus, perhaps, more than by the preaching of those regularly set apart in the early times, as recorded in the New Testament, that the Gospel spread. We find that at the time of the murder of Stephen there were at least 10,000—five thousand men and five thousand women—besides apostles, who were preachers of the Gospel. All these thousands were scattered abroad, because Saul had become such a rank persecutor; and what did they do? They left the apostles at Jerusalem, but we read that "they went everywhere preaching the Gospel." It is not public preaching merely that is meant; they spread the message of the Gospel. If a man or woman could speak to only one or two at a time they spake to that one; or if it was to a thousand, they spake to that thousand; but they went everywhere spreading the Gospel. There came no less than ten bloody and fiery persecutions under the Roman emperors, who tried to suppress the Gospel as the authorities have tried to suppress Colonel Clibborn and his friends in Switzerland. As you have heard how it has been with him, so it was in the early days of the cruel emperors of Rome—the Gospel was only spread the more

What have we got now? We have the scattering without the persecution. What have we been doing all these centuries since we came out of the darkness of Popery and got this Book printed in the vulgar tongue? It is a right thing that some should be supported and paid for the preaching of the Gospel, as Paul sometimes was; but it is also a right thing that the multitude should go and do it unpaid, as Paul himself often was, when he worked with his ten fingers for his own support and that of those depending on him. For one man who is paid, we want at least one hundred who are unpaid; and until England comes to that point we cannot expect much to be done either for the Continent, or for China or India or Africa. In the Christian churches of England and Scotland we want the mighty power of the Holy Ghost to come on archbishops, bishops, clergymen, and presbyters, and on us laymen and laywomen, to throw us all down and get us on our faces in the dust. We are in a land of privilege and wealth; many of us are rolling in luxury, and we have gone for generations and spent it on the Continent, but we have left the Continent very much as we found it. I have found in many places that our American brethren are before us. Away in the East of Europe the English missionaries are very few, but we find the Americans are there.

I say, let us get on our faces in the dust, and let us see what the Lord will do. It is not for us to point the finger at anyone unless we point it into our own hearts, and say, "God help us, and wash us, and make us whiter than the snow; give us a clean heart, and save us from blood-guiltiness." Months ago I pleaded for Scotland and England, that a day might be set apart in which we should humble ourselves on our faces from one end of the land to the other. We have received the Gospel from foreigners, and now we can print the New Testament and sell it for a penny. As we have received this Gospel from foreigners—from Jews—how can we refuse to give it back again? Men and brethren, let it be a time of weeping with us, and of bringing us down to the dust. I am persuaded that the Living God is going to call the people, perhaps some of his holiest saints, out of China and India and Africa, who will spread his word. The hour is come when they shall hear his voice and shall arise. But what of us in this land of blood-guiltiness, of wealth and luxury, of drunkenness and fornication, and sodomy and self-abuse—a land lifted up to heaven with its privileges, but a land that has cursed itself with unmentionable crimes? Many of the churches are well nigh deserted. In London you will find that out of every hundred working men only two are to be found in Established Church, or Nonconformist chapel, or Salvation Army barracks. Is it not time to get on our faces before God, and say to the Lord of the harvest, "Send forth labourers; for the harvest is great and the labourers are few"? When we pray that, do not let us expect the labourers to come only from England, but take a wider range. Look to Christ to raise up African labourers for Africa, Indians for India, Chinese for China.

He will hear your prayer and give you the mind of Christ, who, when He saw the multitude, was moved with compassion for them. The disciples said, "Bid them depart;" but He was the Compassionate One. If we are members of Christ, let the same spirit that was in Jesus be in us: "They need not depart." Why? Because Christ was with them. He is the very same Jesus now, and He is with us here. We have all resources in Him, and He says to us, "Give ye them to eat." Who of us is willing to obey? If we are in Christ, all the riches of heaven are ours, and He will give us the labourers, both men and women. Whether they come from Leicester or elsewhere, it matters not: God can raise up Chinese like mushrooms, and Africans and Jews, to go and preach to their fellows. And then we shall be getting just to where the early disciples were—helpless in ourselves, with no power. But all power is in the living God. Let us bring the whole body of Christ, all his members in America, in England, and all over the world, and lay them at the feet of Jesus and say: "Lord, lift them up; give them to yield their hearts entirely to Thee, both ministers and people." Do not let us be such miserable mean beggars, as to come to God and ask for the forgiveness of sins, and then creep and crawl into heaven—not asking the Lord to come and be King within us. Let Him but rule in our hearts and fill us with the Holy Ghost and joy and power; then our ship will go right into heaven with every sail set, and Jesus standing there will be ready to receive us. Let us, I entreat you, bring the whole family of God's redeemed and lay them at the feet of Jesus; then all the world over there shall be blessing.

In the evening of the first day of Conference Mr. Radcliffe gave another brief address. Referring to some remarks by Mr. Henry Varley, about young mechanics going to foreign lands as self-supporting missionaries, he said:—

A little while ago I was addressing a meeting of railway Christian men in London. I put it to these men that they might throw up their present situations and be ready to go out and spread the Gospel in heathen countries, supporting themselves by their own work. A good part of those in the meeting expressed their readiness to go, though they were met in the presence of their overlookers. Some of them came to speak to me afterwards, and said they were not only ready to go, but out of their savings they would pay their expenses to a heathen land.

The very A B C of the Gospel is that when you have received it yourself you are to spread the light. But in our churches—I point to myself as well as to others—we are as men crippled in the legs, maimed and unable to walk. Why, people are almost ready to quote, as if it were a text of Scripture, the saying that "Charity begins at home." And they cap that by saying that the early disciples were instructed to begin at Jerusalem, and of course that was beginning at home. Jerusalem was not their home; they were nearly all Galileans. Why were they to start at Jerusalem? Because there Christ had been crucified and had risen again, being seen of five hundred brethren at one time. If they had started in Arabia for instance they would not have had the evidence to confirm their message. But there, at Jerusalem, were the witnesses of our Lord's crucifixion and resurrection. Besides it was at Jerusalem that the crowds of men and women had congregated, speaking many different tongues—gathered from all the then known world. When the Spirit fell at Pentecost, and thousands of these were converted, they scattered to their several homes and carried the Gospel with them. That is what the churches in this land have not done. The orders that Christ gave to the early Church were "March! March! March!" But our churches in England and Scotland and Germany have not obeyed these orders all the centuries since the Reformation.

I have long thought that this depression of trade is God's judgment on us for our faithlessness. We are suffering from it all round. What else can we expect, when we have been keeping the Gospel here in this selfish manner? As if Christ Himself, with his bleeding body, were now beseeching you, I beseech you, let this abomination in our churches be ended. Do let us think of Christ's Africans and Indians and Chinese. It is not long since I was in Russia, and we had a meeting of those who had been converted. This one and that one was standing up and testifying to their conversion through the preaching. The message came to me that the police had come. I was so happy that I replied: "The Lord has come, and set these souls at liberty." My comrade there, a Russian, Colonel Paschkoff, was shortly afterwards exiled for thus spreading the Gospel, and is exiled now. Another friend is still exiled; but the work goes on. When the door was closed in St. Petersburg, we went to another part of Russia, and there the Lord opened doors and opened the hearts of the people. I was unwell and could hardly preach for a violent cough; but, before I could leave my apartment, the "priest" sent word to my interpreter that I could preach in his church. This was the great parish church; there was only the one church in the town, and the people came to it from a region twenty miles in diameter. I preached in this State church where they were not accustomed to the Gospel message, but I found the people were hungry to hear it. Yet I did not find a single Scotchman or Englishman spreading the Gospel, as I travelled through that country. The people are begging for the Bread of Life, and we do not give it to them. "Lovest thou Me?" "Feed my sheep." Brother, dost thou love Him? We do not want to have any cant; but, if thou dost love Him, say so; then hear his request: "Feed my sheep." Sister, dost thou love Him? We do not want simply the word of the mouth, but the love of the heart. Then, "Feed my sheep." They are hungry; oh, feed them. The reason we are not ready to obey is because we are not totally and completely surrendered to the Lord Jesus. Let us receive Him, not merely as one who forgives our sins, but let us receive Him into our hearts as King. Then we shall become his bond servants and find his service to be perfect freedom, and joy in the Holy Ghost. We cannot know what freedom and joy are until we become bond servants of the Lord Jesus Christ.

GOSPEL PURITY ASSOCIATION.

THE first annual business meeting of this Association was held on the afternoon of Wednesday week, at Exeter Hall. Mr. Robert Scott presided. In the absence, through illness, of Mr. J. B. Wookey, general secretary, Mr. Maurice Gregory organising secretary, gave a verbal account of the work of the past year. Nearly four hundred meetings have been addressed by the various speakers in connection with the Society, in all parts of England and the South of Scotland, the audiences numbering from six thousand downwards. The financial report, which was read, contained an item in the list of contributions of £104 12s. from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN.

Mrs. Bradley, secretary of the Women's Union, gave an account of this branch of the work. She has given many addresses to Sunday-school teachers and others during the past year, especially dwelling upon the need of distinctive moral training among the young.

Mr. Coote, secretary of the National Vigilance Association, and Miss Mason, of the Kilburn House of Rest, having spoken on behalf of the movement, Mr. Alfred S. Dyer moved, and Mr. George Gillett seconded, a proposal ratifying the constitution of the Society. Addresses in support were given by Mr. Oscar Owers and Mrs. Heywood Smith, and the proposal was cordially agreed to. A general feeling of thankfulness was manifested by every speaker for the great work already accomplished by the Society, and hopes were expressed that it might be able to accomplish a still greater work in the cause of social and individual purity in the future.

A history of the year's work will be found in a valuable little publication prepared by the committee, entitled, "The Purity Crusade: its Conflicts and Triumphs," about to be published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, and Messrs. Dyer Brothers, price 6d.

For the Young.

TOMMIE AND THE BUTTONS.

"TOMMIE!" The little fellow thus called to attention was wriggling on his chair, and laying heavy blows on his neighbour, a meek, fair-haired boy.

"Tommie!"

"It ain't me, it's him; he's got my hymn-book. Give it up, I say!" So said Tommie, while two very bright black eyes looked up with a half-roguish expression to his teacher.

Tommie was a pretty boy, full of fun and mischief, and as naughty as a naughty boy can be.

"Tommie, don't let me have to speak to you again," said the teacher, very solemnly; and then she went on to give out another hymn to the roomful of boys and girls who came week by week to sing hymns and learn about the Lord Jesus Christ.

But Tommie would not be good; so after the class he and his teacher had a long talk together, and the boy went away with downcast eyes and a promise to be good, but also with the determination of not being "a good boy." He despised good boys.

Next week the children's meeting was held again, and in came Tommie, whistling loudly, and making a great noise while he took his seat. During the week the teacher had made a snug pair of cuffs for Tommie, and these were given to him after another exhortation to try and attend to the hymns sung and words spoken. Here was a perplexity for Tommie! He did not know what to do now! He would not be quiet and attentive, but he could not come and behave badly with those pretty cuffs on. So he solved the difficulty by staying away. Message after message was sent after him, but still he did not come back.

At last he did return. "Give us that seat, youngster," said Tommie, "'tis mine;" and then he went on to laugh and talk in a very bad manner indeed.

"Tommie," said his teacher one evening, "there will be no Holiday House for you during the summer, I fear."

"I've come lots of Thursdays, teacher."

"Yes, but tell me honestly, do you deserve to go down?"

"Well!" and Tommie fidgeted nervously with his hat, "I've not been very good, teacher. I can't help it, somehow."

Tommie came repeatedly, sometimes he was good, but, too often, he behaved very badly indeed. All the children in Tommie's class had gone down to Holiday House, and Tommie was very sad.

"Mayn't I go, teacher?"

"What am I to do, Tommie?"

"Let me go, teacher."

"I will try you again, Tommie, and I will let you go if you will let me," said the teacher.

And Tommie did let his teacher. One bright September afternoon he and more than a dozen other children travelled down to Chilworth station, and after a pleasant walk down a country lane, and across a heather-covered hill and through a deep pine forest, and then Tommie found himself standing outside a pretty old farm-house.

Was Tommie happy? Happy, yes! almost too happy to speak. He had perfect freedom and endless delights.

One evening the children were talking together and listening to words from the Bible, which the matron explained—words of welcome to Jesus Christ; words of comfort and help for the needy; words of forgiveness for the sinful.

Our listener heeded those words, and they sank deeply into his heart. One by one his sins stood out before him, those idle, foolish thoughts and words, those wicked deeds. Would the Lord Jesus receive Tommie? Was there a welcome and forgiveness for him? He was assured that there was. "This Man receiveth sinners." And Tommie in his heart of hearts went to Jesus Christ, and heard those gracious words of forgiveness spoken to him.

Tommie returned to a very sad and wretched home. His parents were quarrelsome people who did not love the Lord Jesus, and when their little son told them of the free forgiveness he had received, they only laughed and jeered at him, and said they hoped he'd keep it up.

Back Tommie came to the class, no longer the troublesome boy, but ready to sing pleasantly and listen attentively, and help instead of hinder those around him. He would come up repeatedly at the close of the meeting for a warm shake hands and "good-night" with his teacher. He made his teacher very glad.

About this time a brother of Tommie's fell ill, and during his illness his mother thought very seriously over her past life, and one day she knelt with the Mission nurse to plead for God's forgiveness through Jesus Christ. This proved to be a great joy to her and to us.

One evening lately Tommie did not come to the class, so the next week, just before the class, his teacher went to pay him a visit. You would not have liked to go down that dark street I am sure. A knock at the door brought a rough-looking man to open it.

"Can I go upstairs and see your wife and Tommie?" asked the teacher.

"Yes; go on up," said the man.

So the teacher passed through an open, dirty courtyard, and then through a hole in the wall, up a very dark winding staircase. She hardly knew where she was going.

"Go straight on," shouted the man, and she went straight on.

"May I come in?" said the teacher, knocking at a door.

"Yes, do," said a pleasant voice inside.

How shall I describe the room to you? In the middle stood Tommie and his mother, his face shining from a recent application of soap and water, and the mother was in the very act of pinning a collar round his neck. Near him stood Susie, his little sister, already dressed, hymn-book in hand, ready for the children's meeting. Two smaller and very dirty children were playing in a corner of the room with a headless doll. Close beside them, on the wash-stand, sat Pussy, taking a general survey of the room, while a light brown rabbit, who had just escaped from its hutch near the window, was jumping about by way of diversion.

"Take a seat," said Mrs. ——, dusting a chair; "I'm glad to see you."

"How is Charlie now?" inquired the teacher.

"Charlie? oh, he's better now, a deal better; it's Tommie I'm anxious about."

The visitor's heart sank while she said, "What about Tommie?"

"Oh! Tommie's a good boy enough," said his mother, putting another pin in his collar; "only he is so up to the buttons, there, I don't know what to do with him."

"Up to the buttons?" inquired the teacher; "what do you mean?"

"Why, the buttons," said Mrs.——.

"I am afraid I don't understand," said the teacher, feeling very ignorant indeed.

"Why, it's a game the boys play, and Tom is so up to it. There of an evening he's out a-playing at them buttons along of a lot of rough boys, and I do get so afeard for Tommie, in case he should go with they. And of a night I go a scouring the streets for Tommie, and my eyes all a blinded with tears, thinkin' and thinkin', Where is Tommie?"

Oh! the teacher was sorry, and the poor boy looked so miserable and unhappy that she could not speak to him, but very soon he went off with his teacher and little Susie to the class. Down the dark stairs, and out into the dark streets, and then Tommie slipped his hand into his teacher's, and held it very tight.

"Oh! Tommie, I hoped that you were going to live for the Lord Jesus," said the teacher. "I hoped you were a real Christian."

"No; I am not," said Tommy, very sadly. "I am sure I can't be."

"You need not think He has given you up, Tommie. He never would do that. Once we really come to Him, He will never let us perish."

Tommie only sighed, and walked slowly on.

Then they arrived at the door of the London Medical Mission*, and were soon upstairs in a bright large room. A pleasant hour was spent in singing hymns, and hearing more of the love and power of the Lord Jesus Christ. Then the Mission nurse and Tommie had a long talk together, and he promised her to give up the companionship of the wild boys who had led him astray. You would have felt sorry for Tommy if you had seen him that night. There he stood listening, while one and another tried to comfort him, and all the time he was looking so sorry, and heartless, and helpless.

Then he went back to his wretched home in the dark street.

Do help Tommie, and the hundreds of boys and girls who are trying to follow Jesus Christ, amid fierce temptations. You can help them. "Helping . . . by prayer." S. E. S.

FEMALE EMIGRATION.

SIR,—Free papers are now offered for domestic servants to Western Australia. The Crown agents for that colony are providing an experienced matron to take charge of the travellers. For the first party, which will leave England this month, completely free passages are granted; the young women are not even asked to pay for their own ship kit, and are allowed third-class rail fare to port of embarkation. These great advantages are offered only to women of thoroughly respectable character who can show their capacity for service by a written recommendation from a bonâ fide employer. All emigrants will be temporarily received on landing into an Emigrants' Home, and allowed to remain there whilst making their engagements for suitable employment; advice and assistance are given by Government officials. Free rail or steam passages will be provided to the residences of employers.

Such an opportunity for going, without any personal cost, to a country which is only waiting to be peopled, will probable commend itself, if only they can hear of it, to many who suffer from the depression which prevails among all classes in England, which causes women's work to be so very poorly paid, and who do not mind a little roughness at first starting for the sake of securing a reasonable prospect of making eventually a comfortable home in a prosperous country.

Yours faithfully, E. Joyce.
St. John's Croft, Winchester.

A memorial on behalf of the Servants' Home, Brisbane, signed by many practical workers in connection with female emigration throughout this country has been issued. Since the movement has commenced here, intelligence has been received that a Training Home has been opened at Brisbane, to which the Queensland Government has given assistance.

The permanent character of this new Institution is especially satisfactory to the supporters of the work. As the building can at present only accommodate a few inmates, we request the co-operation of the British public, for the purpose of erecting one more equal to the needs of the present emergency. We earnestly request the support of your kind readers.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

IN a letter to the New York Independent dated January 16, a correspondent gives a sketch of the recent meetings held by these evangelists at Cleveland. He says :—

Cleveland has a devoted body of Christian ministers and of lay Christians. In the preparations for the recent convention of three days, commencing on Tuesday, January 12, and continuing through Friday, January 15, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were surrounded bv a arge devoted band of praying people. The move for a convention originated in the Union ministers' meeting, and it has been very completely a union effort. If the co-operation of ome denominations has been less noticeable, his is to be said, that all were satisfied. The hearty co-operation of the Y.M.C.A., under the ead of its efficient secretary, was of great value n reaching and enlisting young men. Another avouring condition of incalculable importance was the work of Francis Murphy, which had een carried on with great zeal for the previous hree months.

The convention or mission was held in the Music Hall, which is one of the largest halls in America, and admirably complete in its appointments. It seats 5000 persons. The session opened on Sunday evening with a general sermon addressed to Christians, which I have now heard hree times, but I was as much interested as when first heard it. Mr. Moody preached an hour ; no ne wearied. All hung upon his lips. Again I looked instinctively to the roof, as he told the tory of the man born again at Capernaum. It was o graphic and homely ; his deliverance of the matter was so genuine. The churches of Cleveland were stirred that night. There was no nquiry meeting. But many went home inquirng. There were great searchings of heart.

The meetings of Wednesday were of such xtraordinary interest that it was decided that ay to continue the convention through Friday (the original plan was to close with Thursday). On Wednesday afternoon, the first inquiry meeting was held. The same building was illed. Two inquiry meetings a day were held n Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. On Thursday afternoon 120 persons rose in the ongregation to request prayer. The meetings f Wednesday and Thursday evenings at the hall were for men. There were meetings for women at the same time in the First Presbyerian Church. The spectacle of the hall, with he floor and two great galleries and platform packed with 4500 men by count, was such a ne as I never saw before : one to be remembered for ever. These evening services were of great power. It is ten years since I have heard Mr. Moody preach. His growth in exegetical accuracy, in energy, and in spiritual power is greater than I would have believed possible. The force of his mental movement within his peculiar range is beyond anything I ever heard. It is overwhelming. The characteristic of this movement is not natural, but spiritual force. The inquiry meeting of Wednesday evening was ull. Scores of men committed themselves on he Lord's side.

On Thursday evening the meeting opened with an opportunity for men who had accepted Christ on that evening to rise and say so. And over fifty stood and said : "I accept Christ." They were of all classes. Many were Catholics. Not only were there many Catholics in the udiences, they were in the aftermeetings, and gave as good tokens as any present, of sound, ntelligent conversion. Priests obtained tickets o the meetings. On Friday evening twenty nquirers went out into one anteroom, and thirty nto another ; and the number in the main room id not seem sensibly diminished. This meetng did not close until after eleven o'clock.

Thus ended this remarkable series of meetings, eaving the grave question to be met : "How hall they be followed up?" It is hoped that he united churches will make, at once, a thorough canvass of the city. A series of union evangelistic meetings may be held. It has been suggested that the way is open for a work of several weeks in the autumn. At present there is a hopeful outlook for a general revival in Cleveland. May it be soon. And may it extend through all the region of Northern Ohio. For such a work, deep and thorough, will alone settle the labour question, the Sunday question, and all the ethical questions so pressing for solution in our great cities, East and West.

In one of its long and excellent reports of the meetings, the Cleveland Leader refers to the strong cohort of singers assisting in the work. Mr. Sankey, of course, was the central figure, but he had the very efficient aid of Mr. and Mrs. Clark Willson, and Mr. Excell, of Chicago.

CHICAGO.

Rev. Dr. Kittredge, of this city, sends a long account, dated January 23, of the visit of the evangelists to Chicago, in the course of which he says :—

Mr. Moody is always welcomed back to his own city, and his case is surely an exception to the general rule, that a prophet is not without honour, save in his own country. Nowhere do larger crowds greet him than here throng the buildings where he is advertised to speak ; and the churches of all evangelical denominations join in endorsing his work with sympathy and prayer. The return of Mr. Moody to Chicago was hailed with joy by our churches. The work began last Sabbath in the Chicago Avenue Church, which has always been known as "Moody's Church" ; for here he commenced his labours as a young man, gathering in the neglected and outcast, when few appreciated his unselfish zeal ; when, in the great fire of 1871, this people lost their church home, it was through the efforts of Mr. Moody that the money was secured for the erection of this capacious and beautiful structure. Since that time he has watched over its interests, has kept in constant correspondence with its officers, and been to this people like a father, even selecting their present beloved pastor, Rev. Charles F. Goss, and persuading him to accept the position.

All of the meetings, with two exceptions, were held in the Chicago Avenue Church, Mr. Moody resisting all the efforts made to induce him to preach in other parts of the city. The two exceptions were an address before the Presbyterian pastors and officers of the church connected with the Chicago Presbytery, and a talk on City Evangelisation, at Farwell Hall, on Friday. An all-day service had been arranged for last Monday, in the First Presbyterian Church, the object being to pray for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. After a good deal of persuasion, Mr. Moody consented to speak during the last hour. There were few dry eyes in the house, as he pressed home, with great earnestness and pathos, the joy and privilege of winning souls to Christ. The success of the meetings in the Chicago Avenue Church has been wonderful, when it is remembered that there was no long and thorough preparation for them, as in 1876, by the churches, and comparatively little advertising. Though the weather has been bitter cold and stormy, the immense building has been completely filled at every service ; and usually even the aisles have been crowded in spite of the city law, which forbids the placing of a single chair in the aisles of any church or hall. At the women's meetings, every class has been represented ; silks and calicoes have mingled as never before in the house of God, and every face was lighted up with an intense interest.

There have been glorious results of the work of one week, and a peculiar feature has been that the men's meetings have been, if anything, more solemn than the women's, and Mr. Moody stated on Thursday that he had found it easier to reach the men, easier to persuade them to accept Christ.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

The proposed tour of the evangelists through the southern portion of the United States is awakening very great interest. At Mr. Moody's request, Rev. G. A. Hall, of the Y.M.C.A., visited the cities included in his plan, and at each place held conferences with pastors and laymen, explaining the evangelists' wishes, and aiding in preparing for the meetings. It has been a great privilege, writes Mr. Hall, because of the hearty and unanimous approval with which the plans were received. The only complaint was that the evangelists can spend so little time at each place. The following towns are to be visited :—

Knoxville, Tenn.	January 26—28
Chattanooga, Tenn.	January 29—31
Nashville, Tenn.	February 2—4
Memphis, Tenn.	February 5—7
New Orleans, La.	February 9—19
Texas	February 21—March 7
Mobile, Ala.	March 10—12
Selma, Ala	March 14—17
Jacksonville, Flo.	March 19—22
Charleston, S C.	March 24—28
Columbia, S.C.	March 29—31
Atlanta, Ga	April 2—6
Norfolk, Va	April 8—11
Lynchburg, Va.	April 13—16
University of Virginia	April 17, 18

I had the privilege, adds Mr. Hall, of being with Mr. Aitken in some of his meetings at New Orleans, and was greatly delighted with the blessed fruits of his labours. He had large audiences, and I learned of some facts which showed the Lord was indeed honouring the word as spoken by this messenger.

THE MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

THE annual devotional meeting of the friends and workers in connection with the Midnight Meeting Movement and the Rescue of the Fallen, was held at the Homes of Hope, Regent-square, on Monday week. The meeting was numerously attended, increased interest being manifested in the work of female reclamation now being carried on in the Metropolis as well as many of our large cities and commercial centres. Mr. Drysdale, of the Midnight Meeting Movement Committee, presided.

Mr. Christien, organising secretary, said the time had fully come when the condition of our streets and cities called for further extension of the work of female reclamation. In addition to this vast Metropolis, the Midnight Meeting Movement had now seventy towns in which their operations were being carried on. These districts should be visited annually, not to mention that many other towns and large commercial centres now required the aid of this mission, in order that the inhabitants might be induced to take an interest in the reclamation of young women and girls living in the thraldom of sin. That, however, could not be accomplished unless increased income enabled the committee to appoint additional workers.

The work was greatly hindered during the summer months, and the good already accomplished, at times allowed, in some measure, to fall into abeyance through want of united and continuous effort. It is very desirable that the good work commenced in these towns should be consolidated. Mr. Christien cited several towns where a second and even third visit from the agent of the Mission had succeeded in arousing the energies of the inhabitants and inducing them to make renewed efforts for the rescue of the unhappy victims of vice and suffering.

A spirit of deep devotion, as well as earnestness and anxiety for the future, characterised the meeting generally, the various workers manifesting the greatest desire to do all that Christian men and women could accomplish, by the support and counsel of the Lord, to rid this Christian land of the foul spot of vice and criminality which, unhappily, too plainly exists in our midst.

STEWART MEMORIAL MISSION.—This mission was established seventeen years ago, by the late Dr. A. P. Stewart, in North-street, Sloane-street, S.W. Recently the Committee resolved to enlarge the hall ; this has been done at a cost of about £100, and it is now in every way more fitted to be a centre of evangelistic effort. To inaugurate this enlargement a social meeting was held on Tuesday week, when addresses were given by Mr. D. Matheson, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, and other friends.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE AT LEICESTER.

FOLLOWING in the wake of the Manchester Conference, which we fully reported some weeks since, Leicester had a two-days' Conference on Foreign Missions last week. The meetings were held on Tuesday and Wednesday, at Rev. F. B. Meyer's spacious and beautiful Melbourne Hall. Mr. Meyer and Rev. W. Float, of Market Harboro' were the leading local spirits in these gatherings, and succeeded in obtaining the attendance and speech of many well-known workers, whose addresses deeply interested the audiences of the two days.

At the first meeting, on Tuesday morning, several interesting addresses were given, including one by Miss Annie Macpherson, on the missionary training of the young; we hope to give it in an early issue.

At the meeting on Tuesday afternoon, Mr. JAMES A. ADLER, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, spoke of the progress of Gospel work among the sons of Abraham in the East of London and on the Continent. It is now desired to enlarge the scope of the work on the Continent, where the needs are very great. In connection with this, Mr. Adler drew attention to Mr. Salkinson's translation of the New Testament, copies of which are to be distributed as far as the finances will allow. Respecting the work in London, Mr. Adler said the dispensary in Whitechapel has proved a marvellous agency in gathering Jews to hear the Gospel. There are to-day, he said, 100,000 converted Jews. In a recent conversation with the Chief Rabbi, that functionary had admitted to him that many were embracing the Gospel.

"Gospel Work in Spain" was the theme of a short address by Mr. J. CECIL HOYLE. He urged that the churches in England should reverse their plans; instead of foreign mission work being reserved for special occasions and special efforts, it ought to be placed in the forefront of the aims, plans and purposes of all the churches. He made a strenuous appeal to young Christians to give their lives to this work. As one who had himself laboured in the mission-field, he could promise far greater personal blessing to those who did so, than if they stayed at home. Referring to Spain he said it was there that the legitimate fruit of the Romish system could be fully seen. The judgments of God have lately fallen on that nation in remarkable succession, on account of its national apostacy and its terrible persecution of Christians. The death of the late King was a great blow to the nation, as he was disposed to grant full liberty for all Gospel work. The cholera decimated the population in many places. Before that there were the earthquakes, and before that revolutions, a plague of locusts, and floods. Yet proud Spain will not hear the rod or Him who hath appointed it. There is scarcely a native Christian in Spain who has not in some way suffered for the Gospel's sake; it seems to be the one object of the priests to get hold of copies of the Scriptures and fling them into the mire. Yet the Gospel has taken considerable hold throughout the country, though the scattered workers are much isolated. There is ample scope for many more workers and there are no difficulties there, according to Mr. Hoyle, from sectarian feeling or division; all the workers feel that the one faith and the one Lord is the great bond of union between them.

Colonel CLIBBORN described the work of the Salvation Army in France and Switzerland. He had come post haste from the South of France to be present at the Conference, in response to the chairman's call. It is salvation that we want to send all round the globe. He sometimes thought that salvation was like smallpox; you must have it yourself before you can give it to others. Many professors seem to have undergone a sort of vaccination which is just sufficient to prevent them from getting the real thing. During its three years' Continental history, the Army has doubled its working power each year. There are now fifty-four stations in France and Switzerland in connection with the Army where regular Gospel services are held. It has to contend with much infidelity. An infidel once said to him that the nearest he could get to belief might be thus expressed: "O God, if you exist, save my soul, if I have one." The Major proceeded to tell of some of the Gospel trophies met with in the work. All over France and Switzerland they had seen the devil, as it were, flinging people upon their spears. God had made the work of man to praise Him in a very wonderful way. Everybody would recollect the violent persecution that marked the inception of the work in Switzerland; but even it had been overruled for good. The very day that Miss Booth was expelled from Geneva seventy-two Genevese mothers sent a letter to her, praising God that some in connection with each of their families had been saved. Eleven officers have been violently expelled from Switzerland, and eight decrees put forth against them; twenty-three imprisonments have been inflicted; and six of their halls have been destroyed. They have lately opened up two valleys in one of the Cantons, and the work is progressing apace.

The addresses by Mr. REGINALD RADCLIFFE, at this and the subsequent meeting, are reported with some fulness in other columns.

At a large meeting in the evening one of the aldermen of the town presided. He said that one of his sons had devoted himself to missionary work, and he should rejoice if others of them followed the same high and noble calling. If the spiritual energy that manifested itself in the days of the early disciples had been continued, what a different world this would be to-day. Worldliness and ceremonialism fell on the churches and clouded the fair prospect. Thank God that in this century there has been a largely increased interest in the evangelisation of the heathen. England has been greatly blessed in the scale of nations; might it not be that she and America have been designated as the messengers of the Cross to the world. Leicester had given one of her sons to the mission-field [Adam McCall], and he had fallen a martyr in the holy cause; let her send out others to stand in the front of the battle.

The first missionary delegate to speak was Rev. H. C. PHELPS, who read a statement of the work of the South American Missionary Society, which was started fifty years ago by Captain Allen Gardiner. There are now twenty-five missionary stations on the Continent in connection with the Society. Its operations embrace Gospel work among the heathen, the Roman Catholics, and the British merchants and seamen. Of these merchants and traders there are many, and if it be true, as reported, that gold has been found in Terra del Fuego, there will be many more. The Fuegeans were once looked on as a hopeless race, so degraded were they. But the influences of the Gospel have been so great that a complete transformation has taken place among this wild and lawless people. The Argentine Government has lately given orders that the work of the Mission should have every official assistance. Mr. Phelps urged that a greater interest in the needs of heathen lands should find expression in more generous gifts to the support of the missionary cause.

Mr. R. BURN (of the Aldersgate-street Y M.C.A.) referred to the many opportunities enjoyed at the noon prayer-meeting there of hearing the reports of workers from all parts of the great world-wide field. One memorable occasion was when Mons. Coillard and his wife were commended to God before going forth to the sandy deserts of the Zambesi, where they are now "toiling on," seeking to deliver the Gospel message to these African tribes. Mr. Burn related some touching facts showing the heart-hunger and thirst of the Chinese for the Gospel; and made an earnest appeal to his young hearers to devote life, and all its powers, to the glorious work of being ambassadors for Christ to those living in darkness and the shadow of death.

Colonel CLIBBORN furnished some further information as to the work of the Salvation Army. He said that none of the officers in France had any salary; they were glad to be provided with the barest subsistence. They hoped soon to make the French work self-supporting. God greatly blessed the circulation of the French War Cry on the Parisian boulevards. Lately there has been a new development in the visitation of the cafés where so many of the people spend their evenings. The women cadets who carried on this work had great freedom in pursuing it, and met with much success.

In a rousing address, Mr. HENRY VARLEY urged that the prevailing commercial depression might be attributed to the unfaithfulness of this nation to its trust as the depository of Gospel light for the dark regions of the earth. He contended that, if the sums wasted in licentiousness and intemperance year by year were saved for legitimate ends, the people would scarcely be able to bear their prosperity. With many of the other speakers he besought young men and maidens to thrust aside all selfish and unworthy views of life, and give themselves to the blessed work of carrying the Gospel of salvation to those lands where it is not known.

SECOND DAY.

At the Wednesday morning meeting, Miss JENNINGS, Baptist Zenana Missions, gave a very interesting account of Zenana work in Calcutta. She spoke of the great influence of the ignorant heathen women over their intelligent educated husbands; hence the importance of getting hold of the women. Another great need is Zenana schools for teaching the children. The difficulty of women confessing Christ through fear of the husbands is very great, producing many secret Christians. Widows cannot believe that Jesus died for them, being widows, especially if they have no sons. Out of the 125,000,000 women of India, there are 21,000,000 widows.

Rev. JAMES SMITH (late of Delhi) said he went out to India in 1840, and after working three or four years became disheartened. He remembered working for five years without seeing a single convert, and another five years and only two or three inquirers. Succeeding years, however, changed the aspect of affairs, and many were gathered in. Speaking of the open doors there are now for preaching the Gospel in English, he said a Christian barrister in Calcutta and another gentleman are in the habit of going out regularly into one of the public squares and preaching to crowds of natives in the English tongue. A few years ago this could not have been done. The same thing is true of Madras, Bombay and other large centres. Carey began this education, and now there are three million natives being educated in Government schools, and perhaps ten millions who can read the Bible.

The subject of India was followed by a very interesting address on Burmah, by Mr. HENRY SOLTAU, who, by means of a large map, sought to impress upon his hearers the vast extent, as a mission field, of Upper Burmah, now opened up through British occupation. There is great need of labourers to enter into these open doors. Rev. W. BUSHELL, of the American Baptist Missionary Society, who has been labouring in lower Burmah, also detailed many particulars of the work of the Society since 1814, the year following that in which Judson went to Burmah. The Karens had received the Gospel, as the Burmans had not; for, oppressed and robbed by the Burmans, they were eagerly looking for a Saviour. He then gave details of a most remarkable journey to the East of the Shan States, where in two months he baptized sixty or seventy natives. The Society has now 485 churches amongst them, numbering from half a dozen to three or four hundred, with 522 native preachers, and 25,607 church members. Last year 1924 were baptized.

In the afternoon the subject of North Africa was introduced by Mr. E. H. GLENNY, who, dressed in Kabyle costume, and with a large map, opened up the needs of this neglected region. Following him, Rev. S. H. DAVIS, of Samoa (L.M.S.), spoke of the conquests of the Gospel in the islands of the sea.

At the evening meeting in the large hall, which was numerously attended, the subject of China was to the front. The China Inland Mission was represented by Mr. B. Broomhall, Mr. and Mrs. Piggott, and Mrs. Hudson Taylor. The needs of this interesting people, and the faithfulness of God in connection with the work among them, were touchingly set forth.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe gave the closing word of the Conference. Amid breathless silence he entreated his hearers to receive Christ in all his fulness. Being desirous of affording an opportunity to any whose hearts God had touched of offering themselves for the Lord's work in any part of the world to which He might call them, a meeting was held at the close of the China meeting in the adjoining schools. It was addressed by Mr. Meyer and Mr. Broomhall, after which an appeal was made for any thus offering themselves to rise, when fifteen young persons of both sexes, twelve of whom are members of Mr. Meyer's congregation, stood up.

Additional meetings were held each evening at different chapels of the town, and a considerable impetus will, we trust, be given by this Conference to mission work throughout the world. The presence of the Lord was very manifest throughout the meetings, and unto Him shall be the glory.

Mr. Leonard Shaw, of Manchester, was at the meeting for prayer previous to the evening gathering, and stated, as a result of the recent Manchester meetings, that six workers are going out to various mission fields.

DEAR SIR,—I wish to bear witness to the unusual blessing which has attended the recent Missionary Conference, held in the Melbourne Hall, Leicester. It has been marked by a oneness of feeling, and earnestness of purpose, and a sense of the Divine presence, which have been quite remarkable. Missionaries from a distance have expressed their thankfulness for quickened tone, and a movement has been inaugurated in the town, which will give an impetus to the missionary societies of every name.

On the day following the Conference a meeting was held of those who were prominently identified with it, under the direction of Mr. Radcliffe. It was resolved that we would take this opportunity of urging on our fellow-believers throughout England the desirability of convening similar conferences. Why should not every great town in the kingdom have one of its own? My friend, Rev. William Float, Foxton, Leicestershire, who has kindly acted as secretary, would be happy to give information.

It occurred to us also that it would be wise if the Y.M.C.A. could arrange throughout its vast network for the holding of missionary prayer-meetings, in which all believers could meet at weekly or monthly intervals to plead the cause of Christ's heathen, irrespective of denomination or name. Lastly, after long deliberation we felt that something should be done to facilitate the going out of Christian mechanics to all parts of the world. The world can never be evangelised by trained missionaries, though, of course, they are indispensible. But their labours might be supplemented and greatly aided, if for every trained missionary there were one hundred God-fearing men, who, whilst maintaining themselves by their hands, were engaged in evangelising the heathen.

This problem is not an easy one, but we thought that something might be done towards its solution by the establishment of a Christian Mechanics' Association, established on the same lines as the Y.M.C.A., having branches in every part of the United Kingdom, and correspondents all over the world. Its chief aim would be missionary in character, and its purpose would be twofold: First, to put Christian working men, who were leaving this country, in communication with fellow-Christians in any part of the world to which they were going, so that by co-operation they might quicken each other's spiritual life, and do more good together than they could alone. Secondly, to direct those who wished to go out for Christ's sake to the countries where his work needed them, and where they would find suitable employment.

We did not feel able to give effect to this latter suggestion, but we thought that if you would be good enough to publish it in your columns, it might become a seed-germ in the minds and hearts of some of your readers.

Yours truly,

Leicester, Feb. 5. F. B. MEYER.

BIBLE STUDIES.—4.

"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."—MAT. xviii. 3.

ADMISSION to the kingdom. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John iii. 3, 5). "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name" (John i. 12). "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus" (Gal. iii. 26).

(2) Means of growth. "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby" (1 Pet. ii. 2). But we are not meant to remain babes, and should not, if we were half as eager for the Word as the babe is for its milk (1 Cor. iii. 1—3; Heb. v. 12—14).

(3) The Father's tender love for his children. "Can a woman forget her sucking child? . . . yea, she may forget, yet will I not forget thee" (Isa. xlix. 15). "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you" (Isa. lxvi. 13). His heart yearns over the naughty and wayward children (Hos. xi. 1, 3, 8).

(4) The child's confidence in the Father's care. It is not anxious about food and clothing, it expects both. "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things" (Mat. vi. 25—34).

(5) The Father's character in the child. "Even a child is known by his doings" (Prov. xx. 11). "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil; whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother" (1 John iii. 10). "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children" (Eph. v. 1).

(6) The child's education. "I will instruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go; I will guide thee with mine eye" (Ps. xxxii. 8; Ex. iv. 12, 15; Ps. xxv. 8, 9). "What son is he whom the father chasteneth not?" "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." "No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward" (Heb. xii. 6, 7, 11).

(7) A child cannot bear much at a time. The tender Lord teaches "precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little, and there a little" (Isa. xxviii. 10). "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now" (John xvi. 12). We need the Lord as our Wisdom in dealing with babes in Christ; we so often expect them to grow up all at once.

(8) The child's gladness. The songs of the children in the temple were sweet to Jesus (Matt. xxi. 15—16). "The kingdom of God is . . . joy in the Holy Ghost (Rom. xiv. 17). "The fruit of the Spirit is . . . joy" (Gal. v. 22). "Let all those that seek Thee rejoice and be glad in Thee" (Ps. lxx. 4).

"Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Pet. iii. 18). "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. iv. 13).

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—At the last quarterly meeting of the Mission Committee, Miss Martha Spearing, formerly associated with the Congo Mission of the American Baptist Missionary Union, was accepted for work in connection with the Congo Mission of the English Baptist Missionary Society; she will leave for Africa at an early date, with a view to assist Mrs. Grenfell at Stanley Pool in the conduct of her girls' school at that station. At the same meeting the committee accepted the offers for mission work in China of Mr. E. C. Nickalls, of Bristol Baptist College, and Mr. Moir Duncan, of Glasgow University. The offer of Miss Lila J. Dawbarn, of Liverpool, for mission work in China, has also been accepted. Miss Dawbarn proposes to meet, from her own resources, the expense of passage and maintenance, thus relieving the Society of all pecuniary responsibility

THE CHRIST LIFE.

(Vide THE CHRISTIAN for January 28.)

HOW can I be a Christ?
  A sent one—sent of God,—
Anointed with the sacred oil,
  And consecrate by blood.

Not as a sacrifice,
  Or offering made from sin;
One only Christ can thus prevail
  To make the conscience clean.

The Holy Son of God
  The winepress trod alone;
No son of man can bear a part
  In that which doth atone.

But Christ in me may live,
  His Spirit govern mine,
That so his image seen in me,
  May through me brightly shine.

His tears o'er sinners shed,
  His love for wandering men,
May my whole soul with zeal constrain
  To bring them back again.

As He went forth among
  The suffering and the sad,
So may I bear his name abroad,
  And make the mourner glad.

As He compassion showed,
  And kindly warnings gave,
So may I look on erring souls,
  And seek the lost to save.

From Pharisaic pride
  And selfish envy free,
With meek and lowly heart to all,
  So I a Christ may be.

O Christ now santify
  My spirit, body, soul,
Until thy blessed character
  Is stamped upon the whole.

YOUNG MEN AT FINSBURY-PARK.

THE seventh annual meeting of the Finsbury-park Y.M.C.A. was held last Thursday, Mr. George Williams presiding. The report, read by Mr. Orchard, secretary, was full of encouraging facts as to the progress of the work. Four hundred and twenty-five members and associates have been added during the year. The formation of a Ladies' Committee has introduced the element of home comfort into the Institution, and is producing a refining influence.

Mr. Armitage announced that a bazaar is intended to be held in April, when it is hoped the debt of £1000 will be cleared off.

The Chairman made one of his genial speeches. Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, in strongly commending the objects of the Association, said the young men were beset with danger on every hand and the help of such an Institution was invaluable.

Rev. W. G. Beardmore showed that the true idea of manhood was realised in Jesus Christ. Rev. T. Eynon Davies, of Finchley, said young men should avoid all places and kinds of amusements where they could not take their sisters with them.

LEEDS RAILWAY MISSION.—Annual teas, given by the workers who send Gospel papers and letters monthly, were lately held in St. John's schools, New Wortley, when many testified to having received blessing by means of this Mission. There are several hundred of railway officials not yet supplied. Mrs. Cambie, 21, Aberdeen Park-road, Highbury, London, N., will forward any number of names, with full particulars.

HOME FOR GOVERNESSES, PARIS.—I can speak from personal knowledge of the kindness and comfort by which our countrywomen are surrounded—how the sick ones are nursed and a doctor provided at Miss Pryde's Home, 23, Avenue du Bois de Boulogne. A home-feeling prevails, which is much appreciated by these girls, in a foreign country, who have to earn their living. We are very grateful to ladies such as Miss Pryde and Miss Leigh for providing such happy homes for Englishwomen in Paris.

Notes and Comments.

A THANKSGIVING meeting will be held in Willis's Rooms (26, King-street, St. James's), on Friday, February 19, at 7 p.m., to welcome Rev. W. Hay Aitken on his return from America. The Earl of Aberdeen will preside.

In our desire to stimulate the earnestness and zeal of the churches on behalf of foreign missions, we have given considerable space to a notice of the Missionary Conference at Leicester last week, and Mr. Radcliffe's rousing addresses. We trust the letter by Rev. F. B. Meyer will evoke a hearty and general response. Let all the churches but trim their sails to the favouring breeze of awakened solicitude for "God's heathen" at home and abroad, and we may see a great scattering of consecrated workers to all lands.

With deep sorrow we have to announce the decease, on Thursday last, after seven days' illness, of Rev. W. E. Boardman, at his residence in Highbury Park. The interment took place at Highgate Cemetery on Monday. In our next issue we hope to give a sketch of the valued life and labours of our departed friend.

The following circular has been issued by the friends of Dr. Heywood Smith. It will tell its own story, and we heartily commend its object to the Christian public generally :—

> Dear Sir,—The high position that Dr. Heywood Smith has long held in the medical profession, especially in the treatment of those painful diseases to which women are liable, will no doubt be well known to you. You will probably also be aware that owing to the severe censure which was passed upon him by Mr. Justice Lopes, on account of his hearty co-operation with Mr. Stead, in endeavouring to improve the state of the Criminal Law, and to protect the virtue of young females, he has been deprived of his appointments by two hospitals, of which he has been for seventeen years physician.
> Several friends who sympathise with the work that Mr. Stead and his associates accomplished, although they do not commit themselves to an approval of all the means taken, and who consider the treatment to which Dr. Heywood Smith has been subjected as unjustifiable, are desirous of expressing this feeling in a practical manner. They suggest that a Home should be established in London, under the entire control of Dr. Heywood Smith, where the best surgical and medical assistance may be obtained by ladies who do not possess sufficient means to obtain first-class treatment at their own houses, and yet from their social position are unable to avail themselves of the ordinary hospitals. Perhaps no greater boon than this can be conferred upon a most suffering class; and if you are willing to contribute, the undersigned will much esteem your promise of assistance. Please reply to the Hon. Secretaries.

Mr. Joseph Cook's eight Monday Lectures this year, which began in Tremont Temple, Boston, on the 1st inst., will be on the general subject of "Vital Orthodoxy at Home and Abroad." Among the specific topics are the following: — "What is Saving Faith?" "Man's Part in Conversion." "God's Part in Conversion." "Christ the Way, the Truth, and the Life." "The Unity of the Faith of Evangelical Christendom in Regard to the Means of Salvation." "Agreements of the Foremost Evangelists of all Ages." "Methods of the most Successful Preachers." "The Church Needed by the Times." There will be a symposium on the question, "What saves men, and why?" There will also be preludes and interludes, as heretofore. In announcing the publication of the lectures in its columns, The (New York) Independent expresses the belief that the present course will be by far the most interesting and valuable of all that have been delivered since the Lectureship began ten years ago.

Mr. William Saunders, M.P., in a letter to The Reading Mercury, has called attention to the brutal and debasing sport of stag-hunting. He states that the train by which he was travelling very recently was stopped near Hungerford because the staghounds were crossing the line, and he saw a magnificent stag standing at bay in a pond surrounded by huntsmen on horseback, who were trying to dislodge the animal even by means of a noose thrown over its neck. Mr. Saunders says :—

> As the train passed on the poor beast was dancing over the grass with tottering and almost exhausted steps, with the certainty that in a few minutes, while still alive, its quivering flesh would be torn from its graceful limbs by the trained and remorseless enemies of its kind. I shall never forget that stag, in the centre of the pond, surrounded by the heads of county families engaged in adding to its terror, and carefully planning how their own delight and the torture of the poor brute could be prolonged in order that they might have a better appetite for the evening dinner.

Upon this sorry sight Mr. Saunders bases some arguments into which we need not follow him, but there can be only one opinion with regard to the cruel and inhuman pastime. We cordially agree with the opinion of a working man spectator, who said—

> Men who will take pleasure in the torture of a dumb animal will be brutal towards their own kind, and will be unjust to men or women for their own profit or pleasure.

Now that we have a Wild Birds Protection Act, and other measures of an equally humane kind, some of our Members of Parliament might do good service to all who love God's creatures by bringing in a measure to prohibit a sport which is as unmanly as it is disgusting. "The beasts of the field cry also unto Thee."

Mrs. Reaney did not get all the concessions she wanted for the tramcar men at the meeting of shareholders last week, but she scored a success, nevertheless; the directors have promised seriously to entertain the question of reducing the hours of labour. In a brief letter to the daily papers Mrs. Reaney writes :—

> God sparing me, I shall watch with an unfailing and critical vigilance the development of the reforms indicated by the chairman's amendment to my resolution. Nothing less, however, than the practical adoption of the spirit of that resolution will induce me to relax my efforts on behalf of the tramcar men.

Mr. William Noble continues to find a hearty and abundant entrance into American communities in his Gospel Temperance work. A recent report from Bristol, Connecticut, tells of the deep impression caused by his visit to that place.

We learn with much regret that "Bonar Hall," one of the buildings used in connection with Mr. Moody's Seminary for Young Ladies at Northfield, was burnt down last month. It was a wooden building, adapted from a farmhouse. The fire caught from some evergreen decorations which came in contact with a lamp. The building accommodated thirty girls, and was well insured. The furniture and effects of the occupants were saved.

Mrs. Josephine Butler wishes her friends to know that she is obliged to go to the South of Europe for her health, and that of Canon Butler. Her secretary, Mlle. Humbert, will also be out of England. She trusts, therefore, that it will be understood that letters addressed to Winchester cannot possibly receive an immediate reply.

It seems remarkably like righteous retribution that after years of shameful neglect the labourer has become a mighty power in the State. Whatever may be said with regard to the now hackneyed phrase, "three acres and a cow," something will have to be done, and that right speedily, to check the exodus of the agricultural labourers from the country into our large towns, already overcrowded by myriads who have to live from hand to mouth, and many of whom are literally forced by starvation into dishonesty and crime. This depopulation of the villages is of vital moment from whatever point of view we may regard it, but when we look at it from that of the effect upon the city labour market, and from that of the housing of the poor, it assumes gigantic proportions. Every day we leave the problem unsolved the more difficult will a solution be. In the meantime we are sending abroad for that which might be grown or produced at our doors, while our people are starving, and migrating to the city slums in search of a crust and a cellar.

In Ireland the condition of the labourer is day by day becoming worse; crowds of them attend at the meetings of Boards of Guardians in various parts of the country and demand bread for their starving wives and children. It is no exaggeration to say that in districts such as Gweedore and Achill the peasantry are within measurable distance of famine. The famine diseases have already appeared; the supply of potatoes is rapidly becoming exhausted, as is also the Indian meal, upon thin stirabout made of which many people have been subsisting, the only accompanying luxury being a little seaweed. It is surely too much to expect these suffering people to remain patient weeks and months whilst politicians are discussing philosophical methods of government. There has been much wrong-doing in the sister island, but the wrong-doers are not of these, and, even if they were, there is the Divine command, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him: if he thirst, give him drink." Christ's words, "Give ye them to eat," are full of meaning to-day to statesmen as to people in less influential positions.

A "Constant Reader" of The Christian, living in London, having read Mr. W. T. Stead's remarks on the Christ Life, given in a recent issue, has written, anonymously, a deeply touching letter to Mr. Stead, who has kindly forwarded it to us for perusal. The writer, a young woman of twenty-three, tells a most pathetic tale. Through the illness of the bread-winner of the family, she says they had to occupy part of a house, another part of which they discovered too late was being devoted to vile purposes. This has brought financial ruin upon them, with much sorrow and sickness. The father is now dead, and the mother is dependent on the writer and her two sisters, she herself being at times an invalid.

Thus far the story is one that could, we suppose, be duplicated many, many times in this maelstrom of humanity, which seems so pitilessly to swallow up the young and innocent, while the wicked flourish like a green

"These expositions of, or rather lessons from, the Parables, have been written since A. L. O. E. went to India as a missionary. They were intended to aid in bringing Hindus and Mohammedans to the faith of Christ, and are written from an Oriental point of view. Nevertheless, English readers will enjoy and may profit by them. All will rejoice to receive a fresh work from the hands of so old a favourite as A. L. O. E."
The Record.

"The get-up of this volume is beautiful in every sense. Every parable is illustrated to the eye as well as to the heart, and we have seen no more perfect specimen of a gift book for this season."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"From Messrs. Morgan & Scott we have a most attractively-got-up and strikingly-illustrated volume, by that most justly-popular writer for young people, A. L. O. E., called Pearls of Wisdom from the Parables of Christ."—Christian Miscellany.

"These Pearls are gathered from the Parables of Christ, and very gracefully arranged by this practised hand. The contents of this pretty volume were first addressed to natives of India, among whom A. L. O. E. has recently been labouring."—Bradford Observer.

"These are 'Pearls' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books; and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work. We wish it the wide circulation it well deserves."—Christian Treasury.

THE WORK OF AN EVANGELIST.

A Review of Fifty Years' Labour.

Being a Record of the Work and Ministry of

Rev. A. B. EARLE, D.D.

Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth boards, 1s.

In The Christian, last week, under the title "A Veteran Evangelist," an account is given of the celebration of the golden wedding of Rev. Dr. A. B. Earle, who has been a successful Gospel preacher in America for the last fifty-five years.

"It is stated that Mr. Earle has delivered a larger number of Addresses and Sermons than any man living. It has been estimated that he has preached about twenty thousand times."
Extract from Introduction.

"I have never, I think, seen any human being so pliable to the Spirit's guidance as this man of God. His naturally imperious will seems all gone, and, as is always the case in full consecration and faith, he is made by grace the strongest upon the weakest side of his natural character."—Bringing in Sheaves.

"A very interesting work. . . . We have here much in little. The views of this aged worker are worthy of serious consideration. The secret of his power seems to have been in his entire surrender to his Master, and in the sabbath rest of his soul."—The King's Highway.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

CONSUMPTION.
CASE of Mrs. NASH, of MITCHAM.

This case was first referred to me about sixteen months ago (in the autumn of 1884). Her illness had followed upon several severe attacks of congestion of the lungs; next came a settled cough, mattery expectoration, spitting of blood, stitches in the sides, difficult respiration, &c. She had been sent to Ventnor Hospital prior to this, Dr. C. having declared her right lung to be diseased.

Improvement was very slight in the first and second months, but in three months (and that was in winter time) her husband writes:—"Her cough is nearly gone; her breathing much better. She raises little now, and feels better altogether. She continues your prescription for liniment, as there is still some pain."

Each month a favourable progress was reported, and her husband writing me, December 18, 1885, says:—"I am pleased to tell you my wife has enjoyed good health since she discontinued your balsam (several months before this). She was under your treatment twelve months. I think it was the means of saving her life."

A friend of the patient, Miss C. Campbell, who was at Ventnor at the same time, says:—"I have been staying with Mrs. Nash (of Tramway-terrace, Beddington Corner, Mitcham). I could not have thought it possible for one so ill as she was to recover."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

bay-tree. But a worse thing has yet to be told. The writer asserts that, in the days of their family prosperity, she was an active worker in a Sunday-school, but when the dark days of adversity came they found no human sympathy from their fellow Christians :—

> We have been going in and out of a certain place of worship, on and off, for three years, and I can truthfully say that we have never received a single shake of the hand or a word of loving sympathy though we have been seen in mourning. Oh, wicked London! I sometimes think the professing Christians will have to answer for a lot of its wickedness when they are called up higher.

No wonder the writer, in her distress and weakness, has come to look upon our conventional Christianity as a frigid, insincere, and hollow pretence, when it does not even prompt to the cheap and easy manifestation of human sympathy, not to speak of succour. No more painful or pitiful illustration could be had of the need for Mr. Stead's appeal to Christians to "Be Christs" in all the tender ministrations of brotherly and sisterly love, both by word and deed. While less than this cannot be said, we feel certain, at the same time, that there are many Christian congregations in London against whom such a charge could not be brought. Would that all were conscious of the privilege that lies so close to their hands.

Will the writer of the letter to which we have referred, who signs herself "K," kindly send to us in confidence her full name and address?

A lady correspondent sends to us the following note :—

> I wish to thank you for all that appears in The Christian relative to Mr. Stead and the Social Purity cause. I can just place it where my daughters will take it up to read; the help to me as a mother of young girls is immense. May God bless your every effort in the cause of Purity.

While we regard this note as a justification of the course we have been constrained to adopt in connection with this subject, we should still be sorry if, through mistaken delicacy, parents shrank from the faithful discharge of their clear duty, in themselves warning their children of the evils that exist, and against which they must inevitably have to fight.

Miss Ellice Hopkins requests us to state that the articles on "The Present Moral Crisis," which lately appeared in our columns, have been kindly brought out in book form by Messrs. Dyer Bros., as her regular publishers, Messrs. Hatchards, object to the mention in them of Mr. Stead's name in connection with the Criminal Law Amendment Act, though he was largely instrumental in passing it. We cordially second her request that our readers will help in its circulation. The price of the little book is 2d., but fifty copies may be obtained at half-price.

A careful reading of Professor Huxley's article on "Mr. Gladstone and Genesis," in this month's Nineteenth Century, does not lead to the conclusion that it is "calm in spirit, and discriminating as to the real question as issue." It rather reminds us of the remark of a scientist, who was recently the President of a Section of the British Association, that fighting with the Professor was like fighting with a man covered with fishhooks. The explanations and qualifications of Mr. Gladstone's second paper, which ought specially to have been met, are scarcely touched upon.

A very relevant example of the Professor's disingenuousnsss is in his criticism of Mr. Gladstone's remark that Genesis i. was less a lecture than a sermon; upon which it is argued that by this is intended that a sermon is not to be taken seriously, but may be a myth. Clearly a lecture goes into precise details, whereas a sermon, while founded upon truth, is for moral impression, and Mr. Gladstone meant no reflection on the sincerity of the pulpit.

The valuable part of the article is the doubt which it throws on the Nebular hypothesis, and its unambiguous statement that "a scientific investigator is wholly incompetent to say anything at all about the first origin of the material universe," and that all he knows is the chain of natural causes and effects. This position also gives the value to Professor Henry Drummond's paper, which follows that of Mr. Huxley. As the representative of a younger school of scientists, Mr. Drummond seem to us to admit too much, but his conclusion hits the gist of the controversy—"Genesis links nature and man with their Maker." If this is its sublime intention we may be sure that God's method of operation will more and more appear as the ages progress.

MANCHESTER CITY MISSION.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, on the evening of Wednesday, February 3. Usually, such meetings consist of the presentation of the Report, and speeches from prominent ministers and laymen as to the necessity and value of such an agency. Not so, however, on this occasion. It was determined to move out of the old rut of annual meetings, and attempt something of a different kind. God has been giving a mighty blessing to Manchester, and it was only fitting that there should be a meeting for praise, in which should be blended the thanksgivings of the workers and supporters of the Mission with those of the hundreds blessed through their efforts.

Accordingly, the floor of the Free Trade Hall was occupied by those who had received spiritual good during the past year from the several mission districts. The galleries were occupied by the workers, auxiliaries, and general public, the platform by the subscribers and friends. In this way the supporters of the Mission were brought face to face with those for whom their prayers had been answered. Not only did the platform speak to the galleries, but for once the galleries spoke to the platform.

In twenty minutes from the opening of the doors the spacious hall was crammed from floor to ceiling, and, in less than half an hour after, the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. was also full. It was a grand and moving sight. Before us sat hundreds of happy people, young and old, rejoicing in the knowledge of salvation. Scattered amongst them were the devoted and zealous men and women who have dedicated their lives to the work of the Home Mission, whilst hundreds of Christians, from all parts of the City, thronged to welcome them, and bid them God-speed to the end of the pilgrimage and warfare.

No speaker was allowed more than five minutes. After half an hour's music from the Sacred Song Association, the business portion of the meeting was got through. The Abstract of Report, read by Mr. John Thomson, occupied four minutes, and contained these facts: 81 missionaries in active service, over 16,000 meetings held, over 1,800,000 attendances at meetings, over 500,000 tracts distributed, 52 meetings for fallen women held, 219 such women rescued. Mr. E. Crewdson, the Treasurer, briefly gave the financial statement, showing an increase in the receipts for all departments of the work of nearly double the amount of the previous year. The beloved and aged Chairman, Mr. John Napier, gave his five-minute word of hearty welcome from the meeting to the hundreds of working people before him. The resolutions, three in number, were proposed, seconded, and carried, in another ten minutes, and the second stage of proceedings was entered upon, namely, short speeches from Mr. MacGill, the Secretary-Mr. Langley, the Superintendent of Missionaries, Mr. Watson, of Liverpool, and myself, with a verse of a hymn between each, sung by the whole audience. Praise to God for the hundreds of conversions, and encouragements to prayer for greater things, were the burdens of these addresses. In thirty-five minutes the third part of the programme was commenced, which consisted of testimonies from the carters, railway-men, brewery-men, canal-men, ragged schools, and country fairs, of the marvellous blessing given. It was the most thrilling and cheering part of the meeting. From the galleries these saved men testified to the grace of God in their salvation from sin, drunkenness, and vice. Tears of joy came to many eyes. Notes of praise burst forth from hundreds of rejoicing hearts, and the faces of many of the veterans of the City Mission shone with a heavenly light. It was good to hear how this and that man had been used of God to awaken conviction of sin, and lead those lost ones to the Saviour. Our eyes beheld the facts of the Mission, and our ears heard the testimonies of these redeemed ones.

Last, but not least, came the testimonies from the Churches, when certain ministers rose, and spoke of blessed quickenings among their congregations, accessions to their Churches, increase of aggressive effort, through the influence and example of the members of the City Mission. It was nearly ten o'clock when the great audience rose to sing the Doxology and receive the Benediction.

It had been my privilege to spend ten days preceding this meeting with Mr. MacGill, and to take part in a variety of mission meetings. Everywhere I found a devotedness, prayerfulness, and expectancy of blessing that I have seen in no other similar body of men. I inquired the cause of all this, and was told how the band of missionaries and deaconnesses had been called together by Mr. MacGill and Mr. Langley, and had been kept waiting on God for a renewal of power and a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit for their work. Not content with the mere routine of the Mission, they thirsted for souls, and God has given them their desires. Every week, from some quarter of the work, have come glad tidings of blessing. I have been with them into the vilest dens of iniquity in Manchester: at the midnight meetings for the poor fallen ones; at the ordinary evangelistic meeting; at the special weekly meetings for strengthening and feeding the souls of the missionaries themselves; and I have seen the hand of God working amongst them powerfully.

Most wonderfully has God honoured the faith and courage of the men who are now leading this Mission, and one's heart longs for such renewal of power and blessing to be poured out on all the town and city missions throughout the land. The dull, monotonous routine that too often characterises such work needs breaking through, and fresh hope and vigour infused into the hearts of the missionaries. There seems a great future before Manchester, that may ultimately affect the spiritual welfare of the whole of the north of England.

The powerful influence of the recent Missionary Conference held here is still felt, and I have met several fine young men who have given themselves to the Lord for the foreign mission field whenever He shall call them to go forth. Meanwhile, they are busying themselves in the home mission work, and being trained in a variety of ways. G. Soltau.

THE DONEGAL INDUSTRIAL FUND.

DEAR SIR,—Your kindly notice in The Christian of our effort to give the Irish people work has brought me so many inquiries from sympathisers that I would ask your permission to give a further account of the scheme that is in operation.

It is difficult for English people to realise the extreme poverty of the Irish peasants. True, we have in London, and in all our great cities, numbers of persons living in a chronic state of destitution, or numbers again who fall temporarily into great want through loss of work; but these unfortunate persons are intermixed with others in better circumstances. Their needs can be relieved by the wealthier inhabitants of the same city, or at least by the Poor Law authorities; and there is a large body of clergy, district visitors, Poor Law inspectors, and benevolent persons who make it their duty to bring forward cases of want, and to help those who fall by the way. But in parts of Ireland, such as the south-west of Donegal, destitution reigns supreme, and there is no one to help. Everybody is poor—poor to the verge of starvation. The only persons who have money draw their rents from the poverty-stricken tenants, but live away from the reach of the cry of their distress. Mile after mile of the ocean-girt, bog-laden land one passes through, seeing nothing, as far as the eye can reach, but low-roofed huts set down among the tiny plots of reclaimed soil, which pass by the name of "farms." Here the whole family toil to make a bare subsistence, and are content, strangely content, we think, if they can but make it, and keep together; for family affection is one of the strongest passions of the Irish race, and a motive power of which we English in ruling them have not taken note.

These Donegal peasants are a simple-minded, penurious, virtuous, and intelligent people; and coming among them as my husband and I did, in the spring of 1883, for the first time, and finding them in the midst of dire distress, yet self-respecting and independent, begging us only to give them work, we determined to find for them the remunerative occupation which we hoped would lift them out of the debasing depths of pauperism into which they must inevitably fall, if help were not given. Knitting, spinning, and weaving were arts still lingering among these peasants. I set myself to improve their work in these directions; sent yarns and good samples, gave minute directions, and taught them how to find dyes in the native products of their bogs. By paying better prices for good work, and offering bonuses, I have at last succeeded in training the people to execute orders with carefulness and exactness. In proof of this I may say that wherever the goods have been shown they have taken the highest awards, and they won the gold medal at the Inventions Exhibition.

The boon these industries have been to the districts in which they have been planted, has been the burden of many grateful letters. In one large district, long noted for its extreme poverty, into which I have, during the past year, paid nearly £700 for work, the parish priest writes me: "There is great distress here this winter, but the people you have employed are able to make headway." I have had in this district 400 hosiery knitters and fifty spinners and weavers employed; but there are 2000 families in the parish, and much more work could be given out. The tweeds made by these people with the simplest appliances are quite unique, being made entirely by hand, and of pure wool. Anxious also to employ other workers, we have agencies for hand-sewn under-linen, tatting, crochet, white embroidery, and lace. The agents are mostly ladies desirous of doing something to relieve the distress about them, and payments are thus made direct to the people without any intermediate profits. In many instances we find that the workers have never before received cash for their work, the prevalent custom being to pay in kind. The agent or middleman thus makes two profits, and the country is still further drained of money.

As the work grew, and as my knowledge of the conditions of Irish life extended, I found that distress, sometimes as great and often more bitter, was prevailing among those who ought to be the well-to-do—ladies living on their property, but which now brought in no return, on the verge of starvation, and the well educated making desperate efforts to educate and bring up their children decently. To employ these ladies I invented and introduced the "Kells Embroideries," an exhibition of which is now being held at Messrs. Howell & James's Art Galleries, Regent-street. In these, polished flax threads are worked on flax materials from ancient Celtic designs. This embroidery is applicable to every kind of decoration—dresses, curtains, table-covers. It is satisfactory to state that I am able to employ over a hundred embroiderers at this work, thus giving help where, in the present crisis, it is greatly needed. Poor ladies make also the dainty knitted jackets, petticoats, vests, &c., seen at the Depôt, and which look almost as if fingers had not touched them.

Space will not permit me to give a longer account of the work. I wish only to say that it is every day growing; new centres are being formed, and fresh workers added. We only need the support of a generous and kindly public to make this effort of English people to heal some of the sorrows of Ireland a great and permanent success.—I am, yours faithfully,

Alice M. Hart.

MR. CHARRINGTON'S NEW HALL.

THIS fine place of popular assembly, recently described in our columns, was formally opened last week, when the occasion was signalised by a great gathering of friends. The proceedings began with a tea-meeting in the afternoon, when about 1500 people sat down. At the public meeting, in the evening, Mr. John Cory, of Cardiff, presided. After a hymn had been sung, prayer was offered up by Lord Radstock, and the Chairman declared the Hall open.

Mr. F. N. Charrington, speaking of his having been led to take up mission work some sixteen or seventeen years ago, stated that as he was at that time engaged at a brewery close to the spot, he thought that the part he ought to try to do some little good in was the East of London. After he had commenced his mission work he was in the habit of passing a public-house where he saw the name of his brewery firm up, and night after night he saw miserable, wretched wives waiting outside that public-house for their husbands, who were spending the money that ought to have been taken home. It then occurred forcibly to him that whereas he might be trying to do some little amount of good with one hand he was doing ten thousand times more harm with the other hand by remaining in the drink traffic. So he resolved entirely to wash his hands of that traffic. His father gave him an allowance sufficient to live on. On the death of his father the will of the deceased was to the effect that the eldest son should have offered to him the share in the business, and if he refused this share it should be offered to a younger brother, the elder brother to have in that case the younger brother's portion. He declined to go on with the business, and his younger brother undertook it, while he took a younger brother's portion to live on. The total cost of site, frontage buildings, small hall, and great hall amounted to about £32,000, and more than two-thirds of that amount had been already received. He appealed to the public to help in raising the remaining £10,000.

Mr. Kerwin presented a stationery cabinet, accompanied by an illuminated address, to Mr. Charrington. The address, which spoke of the self-sacrificing labours of Mr. Charrington amongst the poor in the East of London, was signed by twenty fellow-workers on behalf of a great number of people who had subscribed to the testimonial. Lord Radstock, Mr. F. A. Bevan, Mr. H. Varley, Mr. W. T. Stead, and others addressed the meeting.

SAVED TO THE UTTERMOST.

By ANNA SHIPTON.

"By Him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses."—Acts xiii 39.

"OH, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Ah, wherefore, Lord?
I looked away from Thee,
No longer trusting in thy faithful word,
Thy tender voice of Love no more I heard,
And wild waves broke o'er me.

And wherefore did I doubt? I saw Thee not,
And curious, looked within,
Where broken laws of awful judgments told
The wrath of God, and like a tempest rolled
O'er the abyss of sin.

Vainly I strove to search Infinite Love,
That waited but to bless,
How far availed for me a Saviour's Blood?—
I fain had measured with an earthly rood
That which is measureless!

Just then I saw One walk the 'whelming wave,
I thought He'd pass me by;
But no! my moan had reached his list'ning ear,
And moved his pity—so I lost my fear,
And told my misery.

He spake: and then my heart lay hushed and still,
Tho' roared the tempest wild.
"I come," He said, "to guard thee through the night,
Not to upbraid, but make thy darkness light,
And cheer my faithless child.

"Thy Saviour paid thy ransom! Be at peace,
Thou canst not count the cost;
God's love extendeth far beyond thy ken,
And his free mercy, measured not by men,
Saves to the uttermost!"

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. John B. Gough has returned to lecturing, after three months' rest.

A Roman Catholic Home for Female Inebriates has been opened at Kilburn.

A Temperance Conference for Day and Sunday-school teachers was held at Pertsmouth in January. About 400 teachers were present.

Professor McIntosh, who recently lectured on "Temperance" to the students at St. Andrew's University, strongly commended total abstinence as helpful to study.

The Crystal Palace Temperance Fête is to be held on July 13. As the Indian and Colonial Exhibition will then be open many visitors are expected from abroad.

The Liverpool Church of England Temperance Society has engaged an educated lady for Temperance work amongst women. Her duties will range from police-courts to drawing-rooms.

The Temperance cause has sustained a severe loss in the death of Mr. Hugh Mason, late M.P. for Ashton-under-Lyne. His efforts for the comfort and elevation of his workpeople deserve a lasting memorial.

Temperance friends at Christiana think the cause would make greater progress and at less expense if there were fewer Societies, or if they worked more together. The advance of one sometimes means decline of another.

At a recent sale of work towards the erection of a Mission School at Great Harwood intoxicating drinks were sold under special licence. In The Alliance News a writer thinks the Church should not be upheld by "the price of blood."

A correspondent of The Daily News gives an interesting account of an interview he had in Paris with Mr. Axel Gustafson. In all the northern countries, especially in Sweden, there is, Mr. Gustafson says, the beginning of a popular movement to get rid of the slavery to alcohol.

Rev. C. F. Adama Van Scheltema, of Arnhem, Holland, desires us to state that the Dutch paper that is to publish his translation of Dr. Richardson's lesson book (as mentioned in a recent issue) is an American paper published in Holland, Michigan, U.S., and not in the European kingdom of that name.

A PRAYER MEETING is held every Wednesday in connection with the employés of the Edinburgh Post-office. During the past year the friends have had reason to thank God for tokens of his goodness to them. A social gathering under the auspices of the meeting was lately held in the Young Men's Christian Association, when earnest and practical addresses were delivered by Mr. John Gifford, Rev. John Smith, &c.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

BOLTON.—Successful evangelistic services have been held here for a fortnight, by F. S. Ball, of the Evangelisation Society.

MR. W. FORBES has been giving evangelistic and Gospel Temperance addresses in connection with Miss Leigh's Mission in Paris.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS has conducted a Gospel Mission in Nottingham. Not a few have professed to find joy and peace in believing.

HEREFORD.—A vigorously conducted nine days' Gospel mission here, by the Episcopolians, has been a time of spiritual decision and revival to many.

CARDIFF.—For fifteen days Mr. F. C. Spurr has conducted a Gospel mission in Longcross Baptist Church. Believers have been quickened, backsliders restored, and many souls, it is believed, have been born again.

MONTROSE, N.B.—Mr. Spencer Walton has concluded a successful mission here. Meetings were held every night for upwards of two weeks. At the closing meeting hundreds testified to their having received blessing through the earnest words of Mr. Walton.

PLUMSTEAD.—A week's Gospel mission, by Mr. Climie, Evangelist, at the Cage-lane Mission Hall, has been the channel of spiritual blessing to many. The workers testify strongly to Mr. Climie's evangelistic gifts, and they are full of thankfulness to God for the success He has vouchsafed.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH have concluded a very successful mission at Broadmead Chapel, Bristol. Notwithstanding the unusually severe weather, large and increasing congregations met daily; at least 250 persons have given in their names as having found peace, or as anxious inquirers.

"GIPSY" SMITH, of Hanley, has conducted a nine days' mission at the Waterloo-road Bible Christian Chapel, London. As the fruit of the effort there have been about ninety admissions to Christian fellowship, and one hundred of the Sunday scholars have formed themselves into a Christian band.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—The title of the organ of this body has been changed from The Battle Axe to The Church Army Gazette, and its form has also been altered. The contents are somewhat similar to those of The War Cry, though less sensational in form. The conductors specially aim at providing a Gospel paper for working-men.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND.—An interesting sketch of the concluding services by this evangelist at the Conference Hall, Clapham, and at the Village Homes, Addleston, reaches us too late for insertion. The manifest blessing has been very great, and many young hearts, it is believed, have been won for Christ. Mr. Hammond is holding services this week at Finsbury-park Hall.

JURSTON-STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL, WATERLOO-ROAD, S.E.—A series of closing services in connection with this school (which is shortly to be pulled down) was commenced on February 2, when Mr. E. Hughes delivered an earnest address at a special service for children. About 250 were present, and at an inquiry-meeting, held afterwards, many professed to give themselves to the Saviour.

EDINBURGH STUDENTS.—A number of students attending the Junior Classes of Humanity and Greek in the University of Edinburgh met together, and formed themselves into an association for mission work in the lowest parts of the city, amongst the poor and the degraded. It is proposed, by tract distribution, house to house visitation, lodging-house and mission-room meetings, to set forth, in as plain a way as possible, the old story of the Cross. Tracts will be thankfully received by William Crockett, 3, Leamington-road, Gilmore-place, Edinburgh.

A MOST SUCCESSFUL WEEK'S MISSION has been held at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel, St. George's-street, London Docks. The mission was conducted by Miss Messer, assisted by Rev. G. Hill, several Thames missionaries, and a special choir. Crowds of British and foreign seamen were drawn together, and filled the chapel every night. At the close of each meeting anxious ones remained to be dealt with, and many signed the pledge. A special Thanksgiving Service was held on Monday last, and again the chapel was filled with sailors. Brief and telling addresses were given by a number of seamen.

BROMLEY EVANGELISTIC BAND.—This band of enthusiastic workers lately had a meeting at Berger Hall. Reports of the services conducted by the band during the past three months were submitted. God was heartily praised for the blessings given, and the great number of souls these brethren have been instrumental in winning for the Master. Short addresses were given by Miss Guinness, Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, Messrs. Heath, Haggar, White, and others. The Band are open to receive invitations to conduct evangelistic services in any part of London or the suburbs. The secretary's address is 53, Empson-street, Bromley-by-Bow, E.

MR. J. W. MOODIE has conducted Gospel meetings in the Free Church, Kirkpatrick Fleming, in the Mission Hall in the neighbouring village of Eaglesfield, and in the town of Annan, all in Dumfriesshire. The meetings were well attended, notwithstanding stormy weather. Mr. Moodie spoke with much power and impressiveness; considerable numbers came from four to five miles distance, and many remained to the second meetings, earnesly inquiring the way of salvation. Promoters of evangelistic work will find Mr. Moodie a devoted and successful evangelist. He makes no high pretentions to learning, but "the common people hear him gladly."

GEORGE MILLS, A.M., Pastor.

MANCHESTER.—During the past eight months the Lord has been giving showers of blessing on the work of the Evangelistic Mission, Upper Ormond-street. It seeks to reach the poorer working-classes. Men who were, not long since, boxers, dog-fighters, pigeon-flyers, drunkards, gamblers, and general disturbers of the peace, and women of the same low type, are now seen sitting clothed and in their right mind. They may be heard testifying to the power of God's grace. Mr. Brain, the Superintendent, has organised a staff of earnest workers, who gather in hundreds of the poor, neglected children, and endeavour, in a loving way, to lead them to the Saviour. I shall be glad if any of your readers will join me in assisting this deserving effort. JOHN WAITE.

69, Bondsall-street, Hulme, Manchester.

THE PRESENT DISTRESS.

MANY grateful acknowledgments reach us from those who have lately appealed through our columns, for the hearty and helpful responses of our readers, which have enabled them to feed the starving and clothe the naked. We have not space for details, but our readers who have contributed may be assured that on them rests the blessing of many a one ready to perish.

We have further appeals for continued help in the same direction, as the severe weather keeps up the intensity of the need. We are only able to give the names and addresses of some not previously mentioned:—

A. E. Moore, 15, Manor-road, Folkestone, writes on behalf of the Y.W.C.A. there, which is giving weekly suppers at the Institute to men out of work.

Mr. H. Shaw, 15, Muston-road, Upper Clapton, appeals for help in the relief operations of the Homerton Ragged-school and Gospel Mission.

Mrs. E. C. Sowerbutts, of the Shaftesbury Mission Hall, 179, Tabard-street, Borough, S.E., asks for help to provide meals, and also for left-off clothing.

Grace Maund, 129, Victoria Park-road, South Hackney, E., pleads for the wherewithal to carry on soup kitchens and other measures of bodily relief in connection with the work at Clapton-park Theatre.

In our notice last week of work among poor School Board children in Bethnal-green, we omitted to give the address of Mr. B. Wire, the Superintendent; it is 25, Church-row, Bethnal-green.

FRENCH AND FOREIGN GOVERNESSES.—The Home in connection with the French Protestant Church in Bayswater has been removed from Powis-terrace to more commodious premises at 3, Colville Houses, Colville-square. On Tuesday week the enlarged Home was formally opened by the Princess Fredrica. Congratulatory addresses were delivered by Sir Harry Vernon, Bart., Dr. J. R. Withercombe, Hon. Mr. Noel, and Baron Von Pawel-Remmingen. A statement by Pastor De La Harpe showed that during the past seven years 2334 governesses, representing eighteen nationalities, were received into the Home, and the demand for such aid has ever been steadily increasing.

REV. H. MOULE AT STAFFORD ROOMS.

THE usual meeting was held on Friday at the above-mentioned rooms, which were densely crowded. The speaker, Mr. Moule, Master of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, delighted his hearers with a memorable address, full of helpfulness and spiritual power.

He first expounded Luke xvii. 7, &c., remarking that this is one of a hundred passages which set forth the Christian's relationship to Christ as that of an absolute bond-slave to his master. This relationship is fundamental, and must never be forgotten by us. Every other—all the tenderer, and to us pleasanter, ones are kept in place by this one. In the passage before us the bond-slave has been at work all day tilling the vineyard, or ploughing, or tending sheep. In any case, he has been engaged all day in his master's interests.

But the day closes, and with it the work of the field. The tried servant goes home. To rest? No, to wait personally upon his master. Take the evening literally as the end of the day, though it might well and profitably be taken as the close of life's brief day. The servant has had various interviews with his master during the day, but now at the end he has a special one—he serves him personally. All this is done in his capacity as bond-slave. He is simply commanded to do, but never thanked for the doing, as though his lord were indebted, or under obligation, to him because of his service.

Does this seem a hard way of setting forth the Christian's relationship to Christ? The explanation is in the fact that absolute ownership, in ideal slavery, involves the further idea of union. The slave has no being apart from the master. He is utterly dependent. To thank him for his service would be to recognise independence and separateness. No thanks implies entire belongingness, and so a kind of unity.

With what shall the master be fed? The Christian bond-slave's day ends with a fresh act of re-dedication. Does not the Lord find his satisfaction in this new self-presentment of his servant? Then the servant himself sups. On what? He to whom the renewal of self-surrender is made now becomes meat and drink to the soul. The obedient bond-slave is fed by the Spirit Himself.

The other passage expounded was John i. 16: "And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace." A river, though always full, is ever displacing itself. The water at any given point is never the same for an instant. There is perpetual fulness, yet constant change, as one drop of water gives place to another. So the grace that flows to the fully yielded heart is new every moment, according to each moment's need. The help for the immediate past gives way to fresh life-energy needed for the present. Thus, "out of his fulness" comes "grace instead of grace."

In conclusion, Mr. Moule put the two passages together as making one whole, showing (1) the service in its never-failing obligation; and (2) grace, not intermittent, but full and fresh for each moment's need.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.—Nearly a hundred ladies and gentlemen met at the residence of the Dowager Lady Dynevor, 94, Queen's-gate, last week, to hear from the Archbishop of Dublin an account of the work which is carried on by the Reformed Churches in Spain and Portugal. The Archbishop said that out of the fifteen congregations he had visited six, and he had had many opportunities of personal intercourse with the converts. He had come back with a profound conviction that the work was a genuine and spiritual one. It is the intention of the Committee to devote a portion of their funds to the work of evangelisation; for this purpose they greatly needed increased help. A meeting for united prayer was held at Exeter-hall last week, when the Archbishop of Dublin presided, and an earnest address was delivered by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston.

The Book World.

Lydia Griffiths, and Some Reminiscences of Missionary Life in India. By a Missionary's Wife. 1s. Hodder & Houghton. A simple record of the beautiful life of a Hindoo widow, a native Christian. It ought to help forward the work of the Mission to the Zenanas to read this life of Kali.

A Cluster of Canaan's Grapes. By the Right Hon. Sir Robert Tichborne, Lord Mayor of London 1657. Shaw & Co., 6d. This little book is full of the sap of the True Vine, and will stimulate and refresh many thirsty souls as only the undiluted strength of the Royal vintage of Canaan can do. Sir Robert was a Christian of a rare and beautiful type.

Silex Scintillans: Sacred Poems and Ejaculations. By Henry Vaughan. 7s. 6d. Elliot Stock. Piety and poetry combined make this quaint little volume a fountain of sweetness. The reproduction of the text of the original edition is perfect even to printer's errors! The book will be valued by many a bibliophile apart from the musical beauty of Vaughan's verse.

The Biblical Treasury of Exposition and Illustration. Old Testament Series, Vol. V. Nehemiah to the Book of Psalms. New edition, revised and rearranged. 2s. Sunday School Union. This Treasury has been a help of the best kind to Sunday school teachers and students of the Bible. In its present form, containing, as it does, incidents of most recent date, its usefulness is greatly enhanced.

A Biblewoman's Story: The Autobiography of Mrs. Collier, of Birmingham. Edited by Eliza Nightingale. 1s. T. Woolmer. This is a touching record of one who amid great suffering and trial was rich in faith and zealous in good works, and whom God honoured to the salvation of many. Many a child of God living in obscurity may be cheered and encouraged by this little story of God's faithfulness, and by seeing what God can do by the feeblest human ministry.

Everyday Life; or, The Uneventful Journey. By C. H. Waller, M.A., Principal of London College of Divinity. 3s. 6d. Shaw & Co. Though bearing very directly on everyday life, this is by no means an everyday book. While Mr. Waller's language is designedly plain, and not infrequently colloquial (to use his own phrase), his thoughts are deep, his subjects varied, his remarks often original, and always interesting and instructive. "Daily Contrarieties" is a powerful description of the life-long struggles between flesh and spirit in believers. The discourse headed, "From the Land of the Enemy," is full of sweet, solid comfort for the bereaved. We should like to see more writers of Dr. Waller's mental fibre, equally desirous and able to comment on God's thoughts and dealings in simple, vigorous language, suited to "all sorts and conditions of men."

The British and Foreign Evangelical Review. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. The current number of this excellent publication contains some admirable papers. The article which is perhaps of the most timely interest is one upon "George Eliot's Surrender of the Faith;" we purpose referring to it specially next week as it bears upon a subject recently dealt with in our columns. A paper upon "Episcopal Life in Ireland," based actually upon the life and work of the late Bishop of Cork, will be read with pleasure, not only on account of its intrinsic literary merit, but also because of the hold which "John Gregg" still has upon the memory of those who knew him. Other articles upon "The Anglo-Israelitish Theory," "Modern Homiletics," and "The Christian Consciousness of a Dogmatic Source," will help to sustain the repute of this Review for sound scholarship.

Doctrine and Doubt. By Rev. S. McNaughton. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. This book is written by a "master of assemblies." The title, which contrasts the fulness of Christian doctrine with the emptiness of doubt, prepares the reader for great things, and no honest mind or inquiring heart will be disappointed. With a fearless pen, and, what is more important, with a competent mind and sympathetic spirit, Dr. McNaughton deals with the chief religious and mental problems, the burning questions of the day. His discourse on the origin of evil is a masterpiece of cool, firm Christian reasoning. His chapter on "Christian Manliness," taking as a text "Behold the Man," ought to shatter every false idea, and stir every young Christian to closer walk with Christ. We would only add that while difficult subjects are really illuminated, the Work and Person of the Saviour are set forth and magnified with great spiritual power.

The Christian Ambassador, 1884-5. Edited by C. Russell Hurditch. J. E. Shaw & Co., 1s. Replete with simple, earnest, and pointed Gospel messages. Among the many illustrations is a good portrait of the late Earl of Shaftesbury.

The Religious Anecdotes of Scotland. Edited by William Adamson, D.D. Hamilton, Adams & Co. Three hundred well-told anecdotes, bearing more or less on religious topics, all relating to natives of, or dwellers in, the North, and many of them in the broad Scottish tongue. Preachers and evangelists will find the book a rich storehouse of illustration, while for the general reader it will yield much instruction presented in pleasant guise.

Wayside Wisdom; or, Old Solomon's Idea of Things. By Rev. John Colville. 2s. T. Woolmer. Those who have found enjoyment and profit in reading the clever, quaint sketches of village life in Daniel Quorm and Mister Horn will be glad to welcome another such book, though not by the same author. We have learnt many a lesson from Old Solomon; we shall not soon forget "Jonny Sparrin's Visit to London" and "Poor Uncle Tim."

Everyday Life in China. By E. J. Jukes. 5s. Religious Tract Society. China is becoming better known to us, especially through our missionary brethren. Here, however, we have not a mission's report, though much that will encourage missionary effort will be found in it. We have details of "everyday life" in China—welcome additions to what we already know of that wonderful land and people. These will especially give pleasure to all who have friends in far Cathay, and who can never hear enough about such matters. By the help of this pleasant book they will be able to picture to themselves their friends and their daily doings. To any who are almost persuaded to go to China we specially commend Mr. Jukes' book. To the general reader it will convey a clear idea of that wonderful people whose importance is rapidly increasing, as nation mingles with nation, and "Celestial" exclusiveness becomes a thing of the past.

A Handbook of Biblical Difficulties. Edited by Rev. Robert Tuck. Elliot Stock. Published monthly. Parts I. and II. 6d. each. This book is intended to furnish the reader with "reasonable solutions of perplexing things in sacred Scripture." Whether perplexities are not, however, unnecessarily raised, may be a fair question. Adoni-bezek's remark (Judges i. 6), "As I have done, so God hath requited me," would hardly strike one as presenting any difficulty, and it seems like creating one to speak of "the opinion of Adoni-zedek that God makes men suffer in the very way in which they have made other men suffer." Adoni-bezek certainly expresses no such opinion, but simply relates his own case as a matter of fact, without any reference to God's dealings with men in general. However, the difficulties raised, though we think not always wisely, are in general fairly explained, but we must take exception to the explanation of the difficulty of "the Imprecatory Psalms:" "Here we find David in a bad mood, and he could not do a wiser thing than just speak out all the dreadful things of his passion to God." A more unworthy treatment of the subject it is impossible to conceive, or one more utterly ignoring that David was an inspired prophet, and that, as our Lord teaches us, the Holy Ghost spake by him. We fear anyone who can write thus must have a very low view of inspiration. Other and sounder views, however, are added, although none seem to come up to the view presented in Acts i. 16, of one of the most imprecatory of the Psalms, "This Scripture . . . . which the Holy Ghost, by the mouth of David, spake."

The Up and Down Line. A Pictorial Chart. By W. O. M. 1s. S. W. Partridge & Co. Our ingenious and inventive friend, Mr. W. C. Miles, has here given us another of his effective pictorial allegories. It is well suited for distribution among railway officials and servants; while it is capable of teaching important lessons to all of us, who are travelling on either of the two lines of life. How many thousands there are, alas! who are hurrying along on the down line! Mayhap some of them will be roused by this chart to stop and think and turn while yet there is time.

PURITY MISSION IN INDIA.—The darkness of heathenism is "a thick darkness which may be felt," as to immorality. We have received the first number of the Indian Purity Trumpet, which contains many sad facts in proof of this. Mr. Gladwin, the conductor of this little paper, enters almost single-handed into the campaign against vice in India. His fourteen years of mission life in that country and in Ceylon had given him a thorough acquaintance with those lands. His first aim is to largely circulate the best writings of the Purity workers of England. Address W. J. Gladwin, "Home of Hope," Grant-road, Bombay

DR. BARNARDO has been addressing audiences of undergraduates and the public generally at Oxford, with respect to rescue work in London among juveniles.

THE BAVARIAN PARLIAMENT is pledged to a motion which proposes to give half the Sunday to all the men employed on the railways. The State proposes a vote of credit for £6000 to meet the expense involved in replacing the employés.

MISSIONARIES FOR AFRICA.—On Wednesday last week, Dr. Theo. E. S. Scholes, medical missionary, and Rev. John E. Ricketts Machanic, both coloured gentlemen, sailed for the Congo, on the African steamship Ambriz. Prayer is requested for these brethren who go to the land of their fathers to preach the Gospel.

ORPHAN APPRENTICE HOME, BATH.—Nine lads are in this Home, which forms a Christian abode for the above class. Mrs. Clarkson, Uplands, Bath, writes to say that a sale of work for the orphanage will be held early in March, and any contributions of work will be welcomed. The boys who have gone to Canada write grateful and interesting letters.

THE SANKEY LIBRARY, Newcastle, Pa.—Mr. Sankey lately had a meeting with the directors of the Y.M.C.A. in this town, where he resided for years, when arrangements were made with respect to the handsome new building and library erected by monies at his disposal. The library, to which friends in England have contributed, will be accessible to the public.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on Gospel services Feb. 13 to 15, at the Workman's Institute, Gloucester, by Mr. Opie Rodway.——For Mr. and Mrs. Edward Trotter and the Hon. G. Waldegrave, who are sailing for New Zealand and Australia, Feb. 11; that great blessing may be granted on the voyage and on their visit to the colonies.——For blessing on a three weeks' mission to be conducted at Falmouth by Mr. Andrews.

ZENANA MISSIONS.—A praise meeting in connection with the Indian Female Normal School Society (Zenana Bible and Medical Mission) was held last Thursday, at the residence of Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, 50, South Audley-street. There was a numerous audience, over which Mr. T. A. Denny presided. Mr. W. T. Paton, Hon. Finance Secretary, said that six months ago pressing needs had led the friends of the Society to lay their petitions before God, that He would incline his people to give liberally to the Society. A meeting at Mr. S. Morley's resulted in several generous gifts. Lady Kinnaird sent out an appeal, in order to be able to claim a promise of £200 from Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, if £1800 could be raised in sums of £100 or more. She has already received eleven promises to meet this challenge, but still needs £700. The Secretaries also made an appeal for £1000, and have raised £400. The Chairman said that such a manifest answer to prayer called forth the gratitude and heartfelt thanksgivings of God's people. Rev. W. M. Paull, Dr. Donald Fraser. Dr. Draper of New York, and Rev. W. R. Mowll afterwards spoke or offered prayer.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, FEB. 14.—NUMBERS V.

"Now that the nation was regularly organized, the sacred tribe dedicated, and the sanctuary built, the tokens of God's more immediate presence provided with its proper place and attendants in the camp, it remained to attest and indicate, by modes in harmony with the spirit of the theocratical law, the sanctity of the people of God. This accordingly is the general purpose of the directions given in this and the next chapter."—Sp. Com.

The three subjects treated of in this chapter are: (1) The removal of unclean persons from the camp (ver. 1—4); (2) The restitution in case of a trespass (ver. 5—10); and (3) The trial of jealousy (ver. 11—31).

3.—That they defile not their camps, in the midst whereof I dwell.—The plural "camps" is not justified by the original, and so R.V. has restored the singular, "their camp." This was to be the ground of the sanctity of the camp, that Jehovah Himself dwelt in the midst of it.

6.—When a man or woman shall commit any sin, &c.—The connection between the restitution in case of a trespass, here enjoined, and the general subject of the sanctity of the camp as Jehovah's dwelling-place, is well pointed out by Keil. "No crime against the property of a neighbour was to remain without expiation in the congregation of Israel, which was encamped around the sanctuary of Jehovah; and the wrong committed was not to remain without restitution, because such crimes involved 'trespass against the Lord.'"

12.—If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him.—It was of the greatest importance to guard against this moral evil, which was so utterly irreconcileable with the holiness of the people of God, by appointing a process adapted to bring to light the guilt or innocence of any wife who had fallen into such suspicion, and, at the same time, to warn wives against unfaithfulness." —Keil.

MONDAY, FEB. 15.—NUMBERS VI.

2.—When either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite.—"The law of the Nazarite is appropriately added to the other enactments, which concern the sanctity of the holy nation. That sanctity found its highest expression in the Nazarite vow, which was the voluntary adoption for a time of obligations resembling, and, indeed, in some particulars exceeding those under which the priests were placed. The term (Nazarite) signifies 'separated,' i.e., as the words following show, 'unto God.' It should in strictness be written Nazirite. The accepted spelling has no doubt prevailed amongst Christians from its being supposed that this vow is referred to in St. Matthew ii. 23."—Sp. Com. (R.V. reads Nazirite.)

7.—The consecration of his God is upon his head. —The special feature of Nazarite consecration consisted (as the history of Sampson shows, Judges xiii.) in the long, unshorn hair, which, as 1 Cor. xi. 15 teaches, concerning the woman, "is given her for a covering." It seems probable, therefore, that the symbolical teaching of this long hair of consecration was the covering up of self. As, according to 1 Cor. xi. 5, the woman was to cover her head as a recognition of the headship of the man, so the Nazarite, by covering his head (symbolically putting self out of sight) owned the headship of the Lord. When this was the case with Sampson the power of God could use him, but when his hair was cut and his covering gone, he became "weak, and like any other man." The popular conception of Sampson as a very large and strong man is altogether wrong. Had this been the case, Delilah need not have asked him: "Tell me, I pray thee, wherein thy great strength lieth?" The whole point of his history is that, being as any other man in himself, the power of the Lord came upon him in virtue of his Nazarite consecration, but when this was gone, i.e., when his hair was cut, he became weak, and like any other man.

24.—The Lord bless thee, and keep thee, &c.—"In these three blessings most of the fathers and early theologians saw an allusion to the mystery of the Trinity."—Keil.

TUESDAY, FEB. 16.—NUMBERS VII.

"This and the two next chapters narrate the closing events which happened during the stay at Sinai. The present chapter describes the presentation of gifts by the princes of the tribes at the dedication of the Tabernacle."—Sp. Com.

9.—But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none.—The waggons and oxen which were presented by the princes of Israel were, by the Lord's direction (ver. 5), given by the Levites to do the service of the Tabernacle—"to every man according to his service." The sons of Merari got two-thirds, the sons of Gershon the remaining third; but the sons of Kohath got none, because they had charge of the most sacred furniture and vessels of the Sanctuary, and these were to be carried on their own shoulders Neglect of this direction brought upon David the "breach of Uzza," described in 2 Sam. vi. 3—8.

11.—They shall offer their offering, each prince on his day.—"The several princes make their offerings in the order assigned to the tribes (ch. ii.). It was doubtless the tribes themselves which presented their gifts through their chiefs. The twelve offerings are strictly alike, and had no doubt been prepared and arranged previously. They were offered, however, on twelve separate days, and the narrative describing each severally at length with unaltered language, reflects somewhat of the stately solemnity which marked the repetition of the same ceremonial day by day."—Sp. Com.

89.—He heard the voice of one speaking unto him from off the mercy seat.—"Thus was the promise of Exod. xxv. 22 fulfilled; and that as an immediate response on the part of God to the cheerful readiness with which the tribes had made their offerings and supplied everything needful for the Holy Place and its service. All being now complete as God had appointed, and the camp purified from defilements, God meets Moses the mediator of the people, not as before on the peak of Sinai far away, but in their very midst in the dwelling-place which He henceforth vouchsafed to tenant."—Ibid.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 17.—NUMBERS VIII.

2.—The seven lamps shall give light over against the candlestick. — "In front of the candlestick" (R V.) The words rendered "over against" (or, more correctly in R.V., "in front of") are the same as those used of the golden plate which was "on the forefront of the mitre" (Ex. xxviii. 37), and of Uriah's being put "in the forefront of the battle" (2 Sam. xi. 15). They evidently imply that the lamps should be so turned that the wicks, which were not, as with us, in the centre but at the end of the lamp, should throw out the light in front of the lamp-stand or candlestick so as to illuminate the other side of the Holy Place. The spiritual teaching of this is best conveyed in our Lord's own words: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven," and in those also of Phil. ii, 15, "shine as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of Life."

10.—The children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites.—"The heads of the tribes here as elsewhere (comp. vii. 2) no doubt acted for their tribesmen. This act, the distinguishing feature of the ceremony, represented the transfer to the Levites of the sacred duties originally incumbent on the whole people."—Sp. Com., or as Keil expresses it, "by this symbolical act they transferred to the Levites the obligation resting upon the whole nation to serve the Lord in the persons of its firstborn sons, and presented them to the Lord as representatives of the firstborn of Israel."

24.—From twenty and five years old and upward. —"But in iv. 3, 23, 30, the limit is fixed at thirty years, instead of twenty-five. The directions there given, however, are temporary, and refer to the transport of the Tabernacle during the journeyings in the wilderness: those of this place are permanent, and determine the ordinary and regular obligations of the Levites with respect to the service. David extended the period of the Levites' service by causing it to commence at twenty years of age (1 Chron. xxiii. 24—28), and this David is expressly said to have done because the Levites had no longer to carry the tabernacle and the vessels; and. consequently, younger men might now undertake the office."—Sp. Com.

THURSDAY, FEB. 18.—NUMBERS IX.

2.—Let the children of Israel also keep the passover at his appointed season.—"From the terms of the institution of the Passover (Ex. xii. 25, xiii. 5—10) it would appear that the next celebration of it was designed to be after the settlement in Canaan. As, however, the anniversary of the Feast occurred before the wilderness was traversed, a special command of God is given to meet the case; and had it not been for the subsequent rebellion of the people, they would have been 'brought into the land of the Canaanites' before this festival came round a third time."—Sp. Com.

11.—The fourteenth day of the second month at even they shall keep it.—This provision for a supplemental passover in the second month for those whose defilement prevented them from keeping it in the first month, was the ground of Hezekiah's great passover (2 Chron. xxx. 2) being kept in the second month. "For they could not keep it at that time (i.e., the right time) because the priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently."

15.—The cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the testimony.—These latter words seem added to point out the part of the Tabernacle on which the cloud rested, namely, the tent, or part of the tent, which contained the ark wherein was the testimony, i.e., the two tables of the covenant, over which the Shekinah or Divine presence dwelt.

21.—Whether it was by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed.—"A striking lesson of the dependence of God's people upon Him for guidance as to every step of their journey, both as to time and direction.

FRIDAY, FEB. 19.—NUMBERS X.

2.—Make thee two trumpets of silver.—Although God Himself appointed the time for removal and encampment by the movement of the cloud of his presence, signals were also requisite for ordering and conducting the march of so numerous a body, by means of which Moses, as commander-in-chief, might make known his commands to the different divisions of the camp. The form of these trumpets is not further described. No doubt they were straight, not curved, as we may infer both from the representation of these trumpets on the Arch of Titus at Rome, and also from the fact that none but straight trumpets occur on the old Egyptian monuments. They were to be blown by the priests alone.—Keil.

29.—We are journeying to the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you.—This whole verse is a beautiful description of the invitation which God's people should ever hold out to those around them —especially to their own kindred after the flesh— and the next is, alas! the answer that is generally returned, and must always be returned, where nature alone speaks: "I will not go; but I will depart to my own land, and to my kindred."

31.—Thou mayest be to us instead of eyes.—Moses now, in his anxiety to gain his relative, proposes to put him in the place of the guide of Israel, that is, in the place of the Lord Himself. How sad a failure!

"It seems evident that Hobab was the brother-in-law, not the father-in-law, of Moses, and the Hebrew word translated in A.V. 'father-in-law,' signifies simply any relation by marriage. Hobab eventually accompanied them, and obtained a settlement with them in the land of Canaan."—Sp. Com.

33.—The ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them, to search out a resting place for them.—Here is Israel's true guide. Keil views this verse as furnishing the key to earlier notices, which seemed to assign the ark its position in the midst of the camp. He holds that the ark, as distinguished from the Sanctuary, went always in advance.

SATURDAY, FEB. 20.—NUMBERS XI.

"This and the following three chapters recount the successive rebellions of the Israelites after their departure from Sinai, culminating in that by which they brought upon themselves the sentence of personal exclusion from the land of promise."—Sp. Com.

1.—And when the people complained it displeased the Lord.—R.V. is more literal, and renders it, "and the people were as murmurers, speaking evil in the ears of the Lord." A sad contrast this to the description of their start on the desert journey, given at the end of the last chapter. Failure is the universal experience as to fallen man in every possible position of privilege with which he may be entrusted.

2.—And when Moses prayed unto the Lord the fire was quenched.—In the midst of judgment grace shines forth in the office of the Mediator. Moses is here "faithful in all his house for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after" (Heb. iii. 5).

11.—Wherefore hast thou afflicted thy servant?—Moses herein shows unmistakeably that he is but flesh and blood, and not the "one Mediator between God and man." Nevertheless as Keil truly says, "This is the language of the discontent of despair, which differs from the murmuring of unbelief, in the fact that it is addressed to God for the purpose of entreating help and deliverance from Him; whereas unbelief complains of the ways of God, but while complaining of its troubles does not pray to the Lord.

29.—Enviest thou for my sake? Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets.—Grace now shines forth as brightly in Moses, as nature had shown itself in ver. 11. "As a true servant of God who sought not his own glory, Moses rejoiced in this manifestation of the Spirit of God in the midst of the nation."—Keil.

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' HOME and INSTITUTE.

President—The EARL of CAVAN.

The Need of our Soldiers in Ireland.

No provision is made by the authorities for lodging soldiers on furlough passing through Dublin to or from their homes. Respectable houses will not admit them. Where shall they go?

The Dublin Soldiers' Institute has for the last three years to some small extent supplied this need, but the demand for accommodation was so much greater than they could meet, an extra wing to their premises (to include a lecture hall) was decided upon early last year, and some funds for the purpose were collected, on the strength of which the new building was commenced. These funds are now exhausted, and the building is unfinished. A sum of nearly £1,000 will be required before it could be fit for use. Night after night during this winter furlough season, numbers of soldiers are being turned away from the Home for want of room: the usual alternative for such, if decent men, is to walk the streets all night, as they find it almost impossible to obtain any respectable shelter without friends in a strange city.

This urgent APPEAL is made on their behalf to the friends of our soldiers everywhere. From Ireland much cannot, under present circumstances, be expected; but it is felt that the Dublin Soldiers' Home is not a mere local Charity, but, as the above facts testify, it is one which must call forth the sympathy and aid of all throughout Her Majesty's dominions who value our British soldiers, and who would seek to do them good and benefit them both in body and soul. It may be added that it is the English and Scotch soldiers who specially and almost entirely take advantage of the Home (although all are welcome). Since the establishment of the Home many have been "born again" at the meetings and classes held there. To God be all the praise.

On Wednesday and Thursday, 17th and 18th February.

Afternoon Meetings at 3 o'clock.
Evening " 7.30 "

Several well-known Speakers are expected to take part.

Rebecca Jarrett.

At the Great Meeting at Exeter Hall, on Monday, January 18, on the occasion of the release of Mr. W. T. STEAD from prison, the Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES said: "Every one in that meeting who had not yet read Mrs. BUTLER's book on REBECCA JARRETT should read it without delay. It was the best book that had yet been produced in the course of this controversy. (Cheers.) It exposed the facts, and explained them, as no other book that he had read. It had put Rebecca Jarrett's conduct in a light in which no newspaper had been able to put it. (Cheers.) Mrs. Butler had not lost her faith in Rebecca Jarrett; and her opinion was worth more on such a question than the opinions of all the lawyers and all the journalists in the United Kingdom." (Cheers.)

HOMERTON RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION.

The distress in this neighbourhood (John-street and College-lane) is very great, on account of the depression in trade. The friends of the Mission are trying to cope with it, and desire to keep all the agencies in working order. But unless generous aid is forthcoming much of the work will have to be curtailed, and the usefulness of the Mission greatly hindered. An urgent appeal for contributions is therefore made, which may be forwarded to Mr. HENRY SHAW, 15, Muston-road, Upper Clapton, N.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

"The moment a man takes hold of the truth that Jesus is coming back again to receive His followers to Himself, this world loses its hold upon him. Gas stocks, and water stocks, and stocks in banks and railroads, are of very much less consequence to him then. LYDIA MAMREOFF VON FINKELSTEIN.

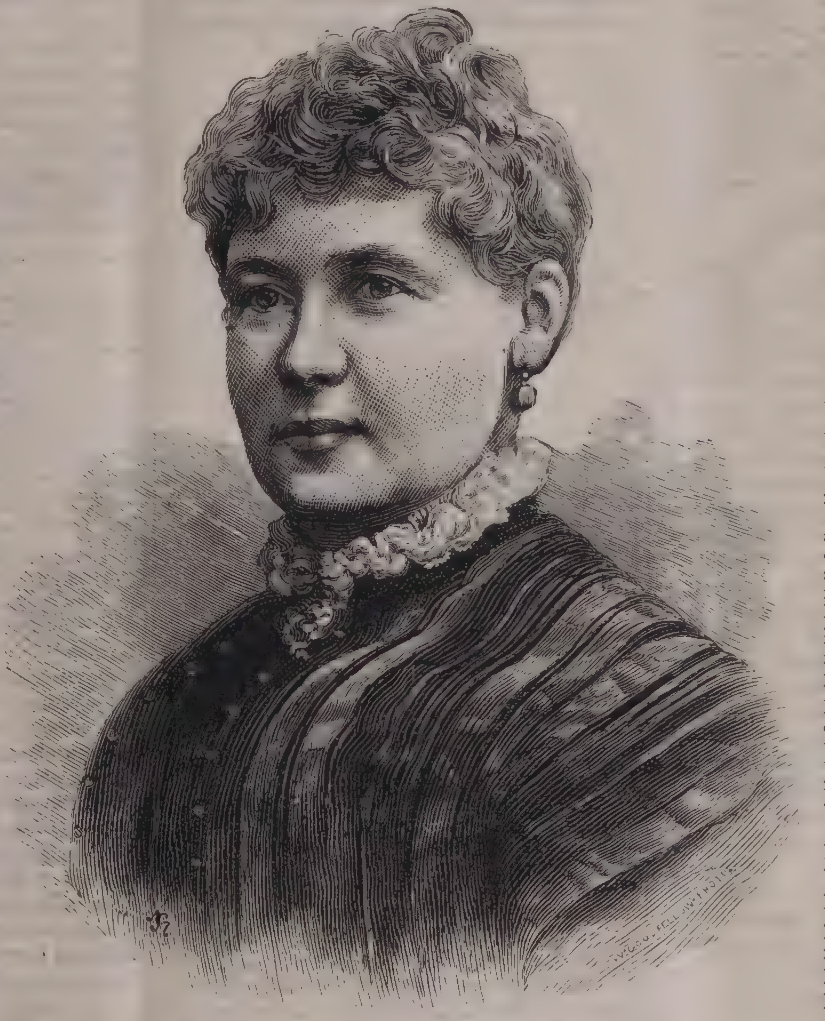
THE Bible is a book for all ages and all climes; as the Saviour, of whom it tells, was the propitiation "for the sins of the whole world." Yet its histories and narratives, and many of the illustrations that occur in its more didactic parts, are so full of Oriental imagery and local colour that very much of their force is lost to those who know nothing of Eastern life. Therefore, passages and references that seem at first sight obscure to the Occidental mind, when they are explained and presented in the light of their immediate surroundings become irradiated with a new beauty, and possess a meaning undreamt of before. It is this fact which has secured for the interesting pictorial addresses of Miss VON FINKELSTEIN, whose portrait we give to-day, such remarkable acceptance with all classes of the community, both in England and America. It is only a few brief months since she landed for the first time on English shores, and yet Mr. Benjamin Clarke (Editor of The Sunday School Chronicle) could truthfully say at a crowded meeting in the North of London the other evening: "I have never known a stranger from a foreign land make such an impression on London as Miss von Finkelstein has done in the short time she has been amongst us." This statement was much more than a tribute to the gifts of the lecturer; it was a signal proof of the undying interest and regard that are cherished in Christian lands with respect to the Book of Books, which is one of the two great standing miracles of these latter days. The other standing miracle, which is equally beyond gainsaying, is the Jewish nation, to whom were first committed these "lively oracles," and whose chequered history is one of the most infallible proofs of the verity of the sacred writings.

We have alluded to Miss von Finkelstein's gifts in presenting to Western audiences vivid and telling pictures of life in the Holy Land. In these gifts, and also in the circumstances of her early life, we can distinctly trace the finger of God, in preparing her for the work which she has been enabled to do (chiefly, as yet, on the other side of the Atlantic) in confirming the faith of the Christian, in confounding the arguments of the infidel opposer, and in projecting side lights on the pages of Bible story. Though not herself of the seed of Abraham, she was, in the providence of God, born in Jerusalem, and there spent the first eighteen or twenty years of her life. While she has none of the prejudices of the Jew, she has such familiarity with the customs and modes of life that were common in our Lord's time, and which prevail to this day, as enables her to understand and expound the many references to these customs with which the Scriptural narratives abound. She is of Russian parentage; and inherits her powers of public address from her father, who was a notable reformer in his day, and, like many other patriots, was exiled from his native land for his efforts in the cause of popular freedom. In Jerusalem he found a refuge and a home, and there his youngest daughter grew up, drinking in the strange sights and sounds of that wonderful city, once described as "the joy of the whole earth," though now stripped of so much of its ancient glory.



(From Photograph by Mr. W. Goodfellow, Regent-street.)

Here we may quote some striking words by one who knows something of Miss von Finkelstein's early experiences:

> Having been born in the Land, having passed her childhood, her girlhood, and years of young womanhood there, she herself necessarily lived the life she describes, in many of its modes and aspects. In the susceptible years of early youth, when there is space for those "hours of idleness" without which the child-life will ever be meagre and arid; in the easy freedom of Eastern life the child could see much that has remained engraven on the tablets of memory. Though she knew it not, then it was she acquired much of that material which she is now able to draw upon and formulate, and give forth for the instruction of the dwellers in distant lands.

It was after she had left the Holy Land and settled in the United States, that Miss von Finkelstein was led into the path of public service she has followed for some years past. It came about on this wise. Platform atheists in the States were growing bold in their blatant attacks on the Scriptures, turning into ridicule passages which seemed to them, in their ignorance, to lend themselves to such treatment, but which were clear enough to those who could view them in their proper setting. She felt moved to acquaint American audiences with such details of Eastern life as would place the abused Scriptures in their true light, and thus cut the ground from under the feet of the infidel. In order that the mind might be assisted by the eye, she arranged to give representations of such Eastern costumes and domestic surroundings as would make her descriptions still more vivid and realistic. In this she was assisted by a brother, who wore the dress of the Bedouin, or the country shepherd, or the city man, as the case might be, while she herself personified female representatives of each of these different classes. The lectures, delivered in many parts of the States, and invariably to large audiences, were received with growing favour. They are, so to speak, a standing dish at the great Chautauqua gatherings, both in the State of New York and in Florida, and other similar assemblies throughout the broad continent of North America.

It was to seek restored health after the strain of continued public work that Miss von Finkelstein came to this country late last autumn. Her successes across the Atlantic have in a measure been repeated here. Wherever she has been announced to speak on some aspect of life in the Holy Land, large and attentive throngs have gathered to hear her well-told pleas for the accuracy of the Bible histories as "the transcript of a nation's life." The attractive features of her addresses are many and varied. Their chief value is, of course, expository; but they are also of the deepest interest, as reproducing in a picturesque and exact fashion the manners and customs of a land and a people that are linked so closely with our holiest memories and associations. The intrinsic fascination of the subject is much enhanced by the graceful and pleasing way in which it is handled. Miss von Finkelstein's dramatic power, fine sense of humour, and her rich, full, resonant voice, constitute accessory charms that add much to the enjoyment of her hearers. We have heard her enchain the attention of a crowded London audience for about two hours "right away," without the least seeming weariness on their part, or any apparent fatigue on her own. In about a month's time she intends to revisit the scenes of her birth and early experiences, hoping at the Easter time, which is one of special interest in Palestine, to have her stores of sacred lore refurnished by fresh contact with the people of the land, and the pilgrims who at that season resort to its capital. After some months' stay she will most probably return to England and resume her addresses, for which she has many calls that cannot at present be met.

It would not be fair to Miss von Finkelstein to report her lectures, though we have been desired to do so. That would detract from their freshness and effect when delivered and redelivered throughout the country. Probably, when she has completed her sojourn in our midst, and is about to return to her adopted country—the United States—we may be able to furnish our readers with selections from her wonderfully graphic and instructive word-pictures of life in the Holy Land.

BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.—The active support hitherto afforded to this Institution by friends in London has been lately in abeyance. Mr. Baghdasarian and his wife are carrying on the Orphanage on the old lines; and all that is now wanting is that the work should be adequately supported. A committee is about to be formed for providing continuous aid; not only former friends of the Institution, but all lovers of the young, are asked to come to their help. According to the last accounts from Broussa the orphans are in want of daily bread. Rev. T. W. Brown, Secretary Turkish Missions' Aid Society, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C., will send further particulars.

QUENCH NOT THE SPIRIT.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.*

(Concluded from our last.)

THEN, again, we quench the Spirit, often indeed, by letting Him alone. Many of you will do this to-night if you are not on your guard. I believe there never was a time when Christians were in such downright earnest about living to God with all their hearts; but there is the awful peril of resting content simply with the desire. Many of you will go home to-night and say: "I do desire, I am sure, to be wholly the Lord's." What good does that do you? People nurse their desires as though they were graces or virtues. Desires won't help you. If desires would do anything, there is not a prisoner to-night who would not at once be free.

People fail in this matter, not for want of wishing, and not even for want of understanding; they fail for want of carrying their wishing into seeking. They quench the Spirit by desiring Him and nothing more. The biggest lie that there is in this world is not the lie a man can tell with his lips. The worst lie that a man can have to do with is the lie that he lives when he is false to his better self; when there is something within him that says: "Thou mightest be a better man if thou wouldest give thyself wholly to it." The man keeps that better self, as Herod did John the Baptist, in prison—taking him out only now and then to listen, until the day comes when the decision must be made, when the Spirit must be obeyed or must be quenched. Now, brother, let yourself go. Let us go on to perfection means, let us be carried on to perfection. Pull up the anchor and let the gale that is blowing bear us. It is the quiet surrender of ourselves to the graces of God's Spirit that is the one condition of progress.

Then people put out the fire by piling rubbish upon it, or dead ashes. There are some fires you cannot put out by water or by letting them alone. Paraffin and petroleum fires are best put out by rubbish. That is the way we often put out the fire of the Spirit.

Honestly and earnestly let us think of this. We begin to talk of the power of Christ to save from sin, and of this life of full surrender to Him. What happens? "Oh!" people begin to say, "my disposition is so unlike that of other people." Exactly—I, I, I; it is just a shovelful of rubbish. Can any of us really believe that the Lord Jesus Christ came to save people with certain temperaments only. Do you think his cross is adapted to some people, but not to save you? Has not the Lord made as much room for you as He has made for anybody? Can He not make as good a saint out of you as He has out of anybody? You dare not limit, thus, the Holy One of Israel. Then some begin to talk of your circumstances. "I am very much tried, I am very much perplexed, I am very much harassed; I am in the world; I am hurried and driven." My dear friends, you are either where the Lord meant you to be or you are not. If you are not, come out of it, for you have no business there. If you are, do not cry out against the circumstances that God has arranged. Is not this rubbish? The Holy Spirit comes to each one of us this night with this gracious message: "Soul, none are more welcome than thou art. God can do as much for thee as He has done for any. He can lift thee up, and show forth his praise in thee, and fashion thee after the image and likeness of his Son."

I should like here to have a minute of silent prayer before God. I should like each one to ask the Lord—"Lord, how do I quench Thee? how wouldest Thou have enriched me, had I not shut Thee out and thrust Thee forth?" [There was an interval for silent prayer, and Mr. Pearse proceeded.] Let us turn to the Word and see how we may not quench the Spirit, how we may go forth to-night fulfulling the purpose of God. Thessalonians v. 16:—

"REJOICE EVERMORE."

I want you to be sad when you look at yourselves, but it won't help you if you only go home sorrowing about yourselves. If I send you away sick at heart that will not avail anything: I want you to look right up to the Lord Jesus Christ and have a strain of joy in your heart. Come, take hold of his hand. Strength for service and holiness lie there. I do like to spell this word "Holiness" with five letters J, E, S, U, S; and I want to show in my next address how it is simply a knowledge of Jesus. So, now, will you come to Jesus: put up the hand of your faith to Him? "Rejoice evermore." Do go home with this feeling: Thou art going to help me. Do not think about holiness as if it implied a great strain of agony and effort. There have been times when I have shut the door and knelt down and consecrated everything and gone through agonies of expectation and desire, but I was so earnest about consecrating myself that I forgot all about the Lord Jesus Christ.

Holiness is this—simply this—the Lord Jesus Christ coming and dwelling in us. This meeting will avail us nothing unless we take Jesus home with us—more of Jesus; closer to Jesus. I care not how much thou dost weep over thyself, but I would that thy sense of failure drew thee nearer to Christ! Do not go home thinking only of the sorrow. Think much of this quenching of the Spirit; the grief for grieving Him is of little worth unless from to-day there be a fresh hold of Jesus. If ever thou art going to be holy, it is only through Christ. Go home quietly to-night, hand in hand with the Lord Jesus Christ, glad indeed that we have Him as our Helper, and rejoicing in what He is going to do for us.

"PRAY WITHOUT CEASING."

You can sigh about that if you like, and say that it is dreadfully hard. You can make it as hard as you like, or as easy. I know people who do not find it hard to grumble without ceasing. They say, "Things are always going wrong." Supposing they were—which is not true—I find it is as easy to look up as down. It is as easy when things go wrong to pray about them as to grumble about them. It means this, I think—such a blessed consciousness of the Lord's presence that we look up to Him for help like little children, and, like little children when the step would slip, the grasp is tightened; when the foot gives way, the hand clasps more firmly that of the Father. It does not mean that a man must always be praying, but that a man must have such a sense of the Lord's presence and interest in him that he finds it just easy to look up to Him and tell Him about everything. That is not a hard thing. Think of the Lord thus with us. It is a miserable thing to have a religion without Christ; to have a salvation without a Saviour; to be saved and yet not to have the abiding presence of the loving Jesus.

* The first of three addresses at Exeter Hall (Feb. 2-4) on the Deepening of the Spiritual Life; we purpose to give them in successive issues.

It is just taking Christ by the hand. Theories and opinions avail us nothing except as they lead us to Jesus. Put your hand in that of the Lord Jesus Christ, and say, "Blessed Saviour, Thou art the One I want: all that I need is in Thee: Thou art come on purpose to help me. I can go home to-night looking up to Thee; and when temptation comes Thou wilt be with me; and when vexation comes Thou wilt come and make me more than a match for it." It is as easy, at any rate, to pray as to grumble; and to a Christian man it ought to be a great deal easier. Pray without ceasing; breathe the atmosphere of God's presence, and let the blessed sense of his Spirit hover around thee.

"IN EVERYTHING GIVE THANKS."

"That is dreadfully hard," you say. Why is it? If you could sit down and ask the Lord for what you like, what would you ask Him for? You would be afraid to say, "Lord, I should very much like gain." The gain that the Lord does not give would be gain that the devil would bring, and you would be afraid to take gain out of his hands; it would be a sort of barter in which he would get the best of the bargain. Should it be high position and prosperity? A prosperity that the Lord did not give you would soon find to be adversity. What would you pray for? Would you not pray that everything should be a development, everything an education, everything an uplifting and enriching, and ennobling and making you more like Christ? Exactly. That is just what the world is put together for. The world is a great machine, and when a man puts himself in God's hand, God gives him grace so to hold himself that everything may shape him after the image and likeness of his Lord. Worry comes, and you can grumble; or you can ask for patience, and be bigger for evermore because your patience has grown thereby. I believe that God has put the world together, and not the devil—that the earth is the Lord's, and not man's, and, therefore, in everything I am bound to be thankful.

"DESPISE NOT PROPHESYINGS."

Do not turn coldly from anybody's theory of holiness. Keep out of the despising; but "prove all things." Turn them over. God has given you reason. Take the theories and opinions to the Word, and see if they are true. I wish there were more doubters than there are, if doubting only drove the doubters to God's Word. Prove all things, then "hold fast that which is good." And what then? "Abstain from all appearance of evil." If there are things that look evil in the sight of other people, stop; have done with them. What then? Why, then "the very God of peace sanctify you wholly." The way to holiness is not flying on wings away up into some vague heights, with hard work; it is quietly going along the way the Lord leads us every day. So we prove the saving power of the Lord, and the very God of peace shall sanctify us. Sanctification is not an act; it is a life. It is not a deed done some time or other; it is a development. I do not think St. Paul would say of Holiness, "I have got it;" he would say, "I am getting it." "And I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." You do not believe in perfection? Well, let us believe in blamelessness. "Blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Now, dear friends, what are you going to do with this Word? Will you to-night surrender yourselves to the Holy Spirit of God? This is his work. He has come to show us what Jesus can be to us and what we can be to Jesus. Some Cornish fishermen found a belt containing diamonds. They considered it worth £20, and sold it for £20. "Ah!" said the buyer, "I expect this is worth money—I think it is worth £1000," and he sold it for I do not know how much. "Ah!" said the man who bought it, "This is worth money: it is worth £3000," and sold it for £3000. I believe eventually it passed into the hands of those who gave £10,000 for it. If you could only have put something at the back of the eyes of those fishermen which would have shown them the truth! That is what the Spirit of God has come for—to show us the worth of Jesus. Oh! it is such a sad thing that He should be to us so little, when He wants to be so much; that we should be poor, when He wants to enrich us with the treasures of his grace. Yield yourself to his promptings. Read the Word. Wait upon him in prayer. This glorious work of sanctification is just the outcome of his grace in our hearts. This is the first step in the deepening of the spiritual life—this reception of the Spirit of God for enlightenment as to the unsearchable riches of Christ.

MISSION WORK IN LUTON.

IN connection with Wellington-street Baptist Church, steps have recently been taken for organising permanent mission work in the town under the direction of the pastor, Mr. F. J. Feltham. A large district in the immediate vicinity of the chapel, containing about five hundred houses, has been selected to commence with, and an earnest Bible woman is at work. When means are forthcoming another missionary will be provided for a second district. It is intended to rent and fit up a room in the district already referred to for mothers' meetings, Temperance work, &c., as soon as possible.

Through sickness, and depression in the staple trade of the locality (straw hat and bonnet making), great destitution prevails amongst a large proportion of the lower classes in the town, and it is hoped that through the kindly sympathy of the Christian public the opportunity may be afforded of wisely administering relief in the area over which the mission extends. A fine opportunity presents itself of hiring a public hall in the centre of the town for Evangelistic services on Sunday evenings, to be conducted by the pastor after the ordinary services in the different places of worship. All this will entail expense, but Mr. Feltham will only proceed as funds will permit. It is hoped that Christian friends interested in such an enterprise will lend a hand. The work will be in every way undenominational in its character. Mr. F. J. Feltham's address is Wellington-street Chapel, Luton, Beds.

BIBLE STUDIES.—5.

THE VISION OF JACOB'S LADDER.

GEN. xxviii. 12—15.

THE Lord Jesus Himself tells us the meaning of this ladder, in John i. 51, "Hereafter shall ye see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man." Let us see how this vision speaks to us of Him who says, "I am the Way."

(1) "Set up on the earth." "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us" (John i. 14). Christ is accessible to everyone; just right where we are, we may come to Him.

(2) "The top of it reached to heaven." Men seek to climb to God in many ways, trying, on different ladders, to cross the gulf that separates them from Him. One determines to turn over a new leaf, another tries to do something to win God's favour, another hopes to reach heaven by penitence and good works; but these ladders are all too short, the top does not reach to heaven. Only Christ, none but Christ, can lead us back to the Father. "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv. 12).

(3) In climbing a ladder we must trust our whole weight to it. There is no progress made while one foot is on the ground and the other on the first rung of the ladder. And there can be no progress in the Divine life till we trust ourselves wholly to Jesus.

"All I am I give to Jesus,
All my body, all my soul,
All I have, and all I hope for,
While eternal ages roll."

(4) "The Lord stood above it," and gave the promises. Christ is the means of communion with God. "Through Him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father" (Eph. ii. 18; Rom. v. 2). Also, "All the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen" (2 Cor. i. 20).

(5) In climbing a ladder keep looking up. If we look down we are apt to turn giddy. "Look unto Me" (Isa. xlv. 22). "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith" (Heb. xii 1, 2). If we keep trying to see how far up we have got, we may have a fall. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" (1 Cor. x. 12).

(6) Take one step at a time. "Patient continuance in well doing" (Rom. ii. 7). "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear" (Mark iv. 28). There will always be sufficient light and power for the next step.

(7) Thus we see the Christian's attitude—both feet resting on Christ, both hands filled with Christ, his face upturned to Christ, bathed in sunlight, "being changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 18).

Streatham. JANET CLARK.

MR. TELFORD has concluded a successful mission of five weeks, in Park-street Chapel, Macclesfield.

THE WASTE OF BRAVE LIVES.—Apart from arguments as to the abstract right, or wrong, of war, under its varying circumstances of defence or aggression, it is matter for surprise that there is not a more general horror of it manifested by the upper and middle classes of society, on account of the cruel injuries which it always inflicts on so many of their bravest relatives and friends. The poor of the community, who furnish the mass of the "food for powder" in every conflict, are becoming increasingly awakened to the unfair pressure which the military system inflicts upon their own class. They have to undergo the maximum of these dreadful calamities and slaughters, with but a minimum of pay and honour. But even the more favoured classes of society, whose members and representatives win nearly all the prizes in the lottery of war, have to pay so very dearly for their privilege that they might well be expected to take a deep and general interest in efforts to prevent, as far as possible, the recurrence of international strife.—Herald of Peace.

HUNGER AND RIOT.

A FEW nights ago "a thousand hungry men were sitting in Holborn Town Hall, drinking in with eager ears the theories and appeals which shattered a great State into atoms less than a century ago, and less than a thousand miles away. . . . Across the faces of many of them the grisly word 'hunger' was plainly written." Such is the simple text upon which a London evening newspaper gave a vivid account of a gathering which, unless there is a miraculous interposition, will, probably become historic.

The few speakers were designated as intellectually able men. One of them is described by the reporter as "a fine handsome fellow," but, like most of his hearers, he had been "out since five in the morning, tramping London in search of work." Nearly every man present declared he had been out of work for a month, most of them for three; and, perhaps, therefore, when we think of the suffering wives and children, whose faces were haunting speakers and hearers alike, it is not to be wondered at that "rabid Socialism" was the order of the night.

"If the fear of God does not move these people," said one speaker, alluding to the rich, and to the holders of high office, "we must put the fear of man in their hearts," and after a torrent of similar speech, so excited was the audience that the reporter adds: "If the leaders had suddenly disclosed a heap of weapons, and called upon their hearers to follow them into the streets, they would have gone, and been incontinently locked up, of course; but they would at least have got something to eat."

That "something to eat" is the key of the position. Hunger, gaunt and grim, forces these suffering ones into this eloquent denunciation of the rich, this desperation which impels an educated working-man to cry: "We know very well that the first persons to be crushed by the car of revolution are those who harness themselves in front of it. We know it, and we do not fear. Better a sudden death than to be dragged slowly to a pauper's grave."

To those who care not to do more than leave everything to the physical force of government, and who overlook the very evident fact that we are rapidly nearing a time when we shall have a government controlled by a majority who own no property, such utterances may seem unworthy of serious notice; but to everyone who remembers that hunger and cold make men somewhat unreasonable, and little inclined to seek for fallacies in Proudhon, these cries of the proletariat, wrung out by suffering, will not be without deep pathos.

At the Trafalgar-square meeting, as at Holborn, most revolutionary sentiments were uttered; there was ample evidence of the same determined spirit to set political economy aside, and to obtain bread by force, if need be; but what followed, deplorable and wicked as it was, may be dismissed as not affecting the question forced upon our consideration; for it was not the work of the hungry, but of the criminal classes who will not work.

To-day, therefore, we have to ask ourselves, What shall we do for our starving people? Can we look upon the outspoken threats as a prophecy of that which is to come, or are they but froth and smoke? Based as they are upon hunger, can we afford to ignore them? Should not the fact that our brethren and sisters and their little ones are perishing for want of food be sufficient to set each of us to work in helping to lighten somewhat the burden of suffering that presses so heavily upon so many? Shall we shut our ears and our eyes to the ominous sights and sounds, as did those thoughtless ones full of the pleasure of the eye and the pride of life, of whom Carlyle wrote:—

> So rolls and dances their procession, steady, of firm assurance, as if it rolled on adamant and the foundations of the world: not on mere parchment. Dance on ye foolish ones! ye sought not wisdom, neither have ye found it. Ye and your fathers have sown the wind, ye shall reap the whirlwind. Was it not from old written: "The wages of sin is death?"

It is upon the waste and luxury and selfishness of society that this Socialism, which is already blossoming for revolution, grows; and the selfishness and waste of society are made up of that of the unit. May we each, in these days of terrible destitution and famine, open our ears to Christ's command, "Give ye them to eat." We have only the seven loaves and a few little fishes, but if we are faithful to hear the voice of the Master, the men, women, and children, will all be filled, for our God will break the bread and give the miraculous increase.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE STAGE.

In a recent number of The Presbyterian Review (3s. 6d. T. & T. Clark) there is a very weighty and well-considered paper by Professor W. G. Blaikie, of Edinburgh, on "Christianity and the Professions." The writer handles in turn the relations of Christian thought and life with the occupation of the soldier, the sailor, the commercial man, the artist, the literatteur, the scientist, the physician, the lawyer, the schoolmaster, and the actor. On every head he has something important and helpful to say. The article as a whole, deserves to be reprinted and widely circulated in popular form. We extract a portion of Dr. Blaikie's remarks on the dramatic profession:—

THE history of the stage is a singular one, both morally and intellectually. It is certain that in the early ages of the Church the stage was counted the enemy of the Gospel. No doubt this was in part owing to the connection between the stage and heathenism,—the inevitable recognition which it involved of the pagan idolatry. But it is certain that very strong objection was taken to it on other grounds: the undue excitement of the passions to which it led, the immodesty and impurity with which it was associated, and the manifest contrast between "God's Church and the devil's, the sky and the stage," as they called it, and between the sights on which the eye was greeted in the one, with those which were to meet it when the angelic hosts should descend on the last day, and the kingdom of the just should spread its glories around! Dr. Donaldson* refers with approbation to Tatian's condemnation of the teachings of the theatre, as "presenting the gods in the basest characters, and contaminating the minds of the spectators with the most fearful pollutions."

That the stage should be condemned very strongly by the Puritans was what might have been looked for. But the Puritans were not its only opponents in their age. Jeremy Collier, whose condemnation of it was as severe as any Puritan's, was a Churchman, unconnected with Puritans. A great storm which prevailed in his day he regarded as a special judgment of God on the open profligacy of the nation, of which the stage was the mirror. He was especially indignant at the acting of "Macbeth," with all its thunder and tempest, on the very day of the storm, and at the audience which applauded with more than ordinary warmth at the mention of chimneys being blown down. Among other opponents of the stage who certainly were not Puritans were Bossuet and Rousseau. Both took the ground of its opposition to morality. Hugenbach's objection is on the same ground—the Church has had a rooted distrust of the stage, not on the general ground of the dramatic representation, but the specific ground of low morality.

Thus we have always had two lines of argument about the stage—one that it is in itself not only harmless, but capable of the highest moral use; the other, that in practice it is the gate of hell. And many an endeavour has been made to redeem it from its blemishes, and to realise its high ideal. Disgusted with the coarse pabulum supplied by the stage in their day, Goethe and Schiller made a strenuous effort to raise it intellectually, by bringing forward plays that were to become standards and models of dramatic literature: the result was a miserable failure.

Henry Irving, like many others, has renewed the attempt, inspired by a high conception of the possibility of noble service through dramatic art; but how little such men have succeeded in elevating the moral tone of the stage is painfully apparent from the recent confessions of actors like Mrs. Kendal, at the Social Science Congress, or of dramatic writers and managers like those who have been recently giving their experience in The Fortnightly Review and The Pall Mall Gazette.

We know as a fact that many have abandoned the stage as an incompatible employment, when they have become earnest Christians; that some who have remained on it have sternly refused to let their children follow their example; and that even humble performers of insignificant parts have told those who have sought their Christian good that they could not continue to read their Bibles because Christianity and the stage could not be combined. Critics may deal as they please with the theoretical question, but meanwhile the practical must carry the day. Between the actual stage and the spirit of Christ there is no fellowship.

FRIENDLY WORDS

TO EMPLOYERS, MASTERS, AND MISTRESSES.

HAS it ever occurred to you that your influence over those in your establishment or household involves your responsibility towards God (Eph. vi. 6—9)?

Are you seeking to help any or all of them a little nearer to Him (Matt. v. 16)?

Do you realise, and endeavour to assist them to feel, that their spirits, minds, and bodies are given them by Him, and designed for his honour, through the grace of Christ Jesus and the indwelling of his Holy Spirit (1 Cor. vi. 19–20)?

Are you doing what God requires of you (especially as to the younger among them), in efforts to promote their interest in self-improvement, Temperance, health, thrift, purity, kindness to animals, sympathy with suffering humanity, the choice of companions and recreations, the observance of public worship and private devotion (Gal. vi. 9, 10)?

Are you desirous that, when your earthly course comes to an end, your spirit may return to God with the happy retrospect of a fruitful love to Him, and of a life not wasted (Daniel xii. 3)? W. T.

THE DEMAND OF THE DAY.

By Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

WHAT is the greatest need of the Church to-day? We answer, with deepest conviction, a consecrated ministry. Should so many of us as these lines may reach know from this hour but one aim, live wholly and only for God, empty ourselves of every desire save to promote his glory, ask only the opportunity and privilege of spreading the good tidings and winning souls for Christ, no limits could be fixed to our possible usefulness, and the whole world would feel the power of our lives. If the Church is to be roused to a true evangelism, God's ambassadors must make a new and more complete self-surrender. Every choice that fixes the soul more entirely and securely on God, is the signal for a new unfolding and unveiling of God to the soul; it opens a new door through which stream into us the light and bliss of God, till our earthly experience is not one of transformation only, but of transfiguration.

What is to hinder this mighty movement of the whole soul toward God, which, with his help and the full consent of our own will, shall carry us forward and upward into the very light and love and life of God? Oh! to abide in the very blaze and focus of God's glory till we burn with red heat and glow with white heat; till our coarse, gross elements are refined away, and we warm into intense ardour and fervour for God, and our very faces shine as the sun—till we live under that sense of the powers of the world to come which is the sole secret of reviving saints and converting sinners. Let such self-surrender and self-dedication characterise God's ministers, and a new era of spiritual life and power would begin for the whole Church of God. Every man who comes near us would feel the thrill of new light and warmth; we should burn our way through obstacles; mountains would be removed and sycamine trees plucked up at the command of our faith; our prayers would open the very floodgates of heaven; we should be like thunderbolts hurled from the hand of God to shiver and shatter the strongholds of Satan. Before men made mighty by yoking with God nothing can stand. Oh, for a holy enthusiasm for God to melt through these icebergs which encase the Church! Oh, for one more great revival of religion to lift the whole race of man as on a great tidal wave!

Such a revival must begin with the ministers of Christ; and then these movements, now so common, for the evangelising of our great cities will spread in every direction like fires on the prairie. One humble, holy resolve should be taken, in favour of a new stand for God. Whatever be the cost to us personally, let us dare to live "out and out for God." Let us part company with the world, hate even the garment spotted with the leprosy of the flesh, cleanse even the outer courts of the temple of the Holy Ghost, and prove our God whether He is not with us in mighty power, when once we are with Him in the undivided choice of a consecrated life. As in the tabernacle of old, if we sanctify ourselves to his glory, He will sanctify us by his glory. In our own souls the Shekinah will shine, till we are fired and filled and flooded with the glory of the Lord.

TRACTS FOR SPAIN.—Sir,—An urgent appeal has come to us from Spain. The Lord's servants there beg us to enable them to reach the upper and middle classes in that benighted land. Who of your readers will help us? We hope to print special tracts in Spain, and have them posted there. Yours truly, J. R. Mackenzie, Secretary.

THE PRESENT DISTRESS.

MARYLAND POINT.

THE distress in the neighbourhood of the Maryland Point Mission continues to be very great. We send out weekly fifteen gallons of soup, instead of seven as formerly, and supply coals, bread and dinners to the destitute. Help is greatly needed for this good work. John Stobb.

MILLWALL.

Mr. William Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N., writes:—We are providing about one hundred unemployed dock-labourers with a good dinner of soup and bread four days per week, at the Millwall Hall of the North-east London Gospel Mission. The number is only limited by the means and machinery available. The distribution of the tickets has become a painful experience. At present our funds will not last more than a few days, even at our present limited supply.

NORTH BOW MISSION.

We have been giving free soup dinners for the children of the unemployed for the past seven weeks. If any of your readers will help us to cover the bare feet of these unhappy creatures I shall be greatly obliged. A woman this morning called upon me, and said that she, her husband, and seven children had not tasted food for two days. The families we relieve are well known to us. John Fletcher Porter.

"EDINBURGH CASTLE."

The last of a series of four dinners, which the benevolence of Hon. Thomas Holt, late of Sydney, had provided for various destitute classes in the East of London, was given last Thursday, in the large hall of the "Edinburgh Castle," at Limehouse. The guests were men out of work, and had been gathered from the lodging-houses and the streets. There were about nine hundred present. About one hundred will probably be drafted into Dr. Barnardo's Labour House, where they will be trained to a course of hard work, and afterwards sent to one or other of the British colonies. Only those, however, whose conduct during their probationary stay in the Labour House has furnished the clearest proof of honesty and industry, are sent out.

LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY.

Dear Sir,—The applications for assistance that are daily, and almost hourly coming in from our workers among the poor in all parts of the metropolis is enough to melt the hardest heart, and make us long to be able to render the necessary help. The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission have organised the distribution of breakfasts, dinners, and soup suppers over the poorest parts of London, but help is needed very badly. The hearts and purses of your generous readers will open I am sure when they know the dire need that exists. The secretary, Mr. H. H. Board, or myself, will gladly acknowledge any sums entrusted to us.

Yours, in the Master's service,
John James Jones.

SERMON-LANE MISSION.

During the nineteen years of my mission labours in Islington I have never met with greater distress than there is at the present time. Many sober, honest, and industrious men, with their wives and children, are in deep distress through lack of work. We have also many poor widows, with young children, in a sad state of suffering. One poor widow, with her child, was without fire or food when our visitor called. Only four years ago this young widow and her little ones enjoyed the comforts of a good home, and bought her coals by the ton, before it pleased God to take from her the prop of her life.

Many such sad cases of destitution are well known to myself and fellow-workers. We have also several men, with their families, suffering through a fire burning down the workshops about seven weeks ago. Since then these poor fellows have not earned one penny. Gifts of cast-off garments and blankets will be gratefully received.
George Fuller, Superintendent.

CRY OF THE UNEMPLOYED.

"If they ask bread, will ye give them a stone?"
Jesus Christ.

THE loafer's cracking laugh may rise,
And breathing oaths burn lips of sin;
Until the wrath of frowning skies
Rebuke the curse inspired by gin!
The Red Commune may plant its flag,
And write bold blood-lines on the rag.

But London's scoundrels, dark with crime,
Are not "the people," lean and cold,
Who watch the mocking hand of time,
And half forget the hue of gold;
'Tis Labour's sigh of sad despair
That trembles thro' the wintry air.

The honest voice of hunger speaks
A sorrow far more deep than loud;
'Tis not the aching heart which breaks
Consuming secrets to the crowd;
'Tis Phrygian-capped and stormy chief,
Would make earth hell, to steal relief.

Oh! ye who dwell in marble halls,
And revel in perpetual spring;
Who live at ease where fortune falls,
Or store the wealth which harvests bring;
Who in the gilded West may feast,
Whilst babes are starving in the East!

Confound not envious lust with cries
Which wasting lungs but whisper low;
Think not the lawless man who lies
Is he who fails through weight of woe!
The city's robbers are not they
Whose vast distress makes no display.

Go, count the inquest list of slain!
Weak, moaning women and their sons;
The white-lipped girls who starve in pain,
The infant—falling as he runs—
In homes all blank and blanketless,
Without a gleam of hope to bless.

Old Homer bought his lunch with songs,
And taught his music to the wind,
And crusts are won by beggar tongues,
When noise intrudes where hearts are kind;
But silent sufferers die of want,—
Get stones for bread, from selfish cant!

Oh! Mother Church and fatherland,
Do judge between the poor and thieves:
Put forth the freighted, helping hand—
The hand which soothes, lifts up, relieves;
Give toil a chance to rise again

Give work: or send to some fat plain,
In austral lands, or western vales,
The unsunned crowd in street and lane,
And end the misery of their tales:
Or death's dire darkness soon will hide
Fair England's workmen in their pride!

Eastbourne. John T. Markley.

THE "LETTERS TO MERCHANT SEAMEN" are sent to many ports in the United Kingdom, and to some foreign ones. During the last year copies were sent to the Rock Lighthouses and Lightships. Many more are required than those now issued. The work is carried on by voluntary help, and the letters are gratuitously distributed. Friends should communicate with Mrs. Jeffery, 15, Lansdowne-circus, Leamington Spa.

INVALID AND CONVALESCENT HOME.—The report for the past eighteen months of St. Luke's Invalids' Home at Ramsgate, gives good proof of its increased usefulness since the premises were enlarged in 1884. The number of patients and visitors for rest show an increase of 33 per cent. on the previous year's attendance. Dr. Woodman expresses his conviction, founded on his experience as the medical attendant, that the Institution does great good. He says:—"I have seen so much benefit result, that I can hardly speak too highly in praise of the Institution. I think it is not generally known that Ramsgate in the winter is a warm place, and well adapted to weak chests." Earnest appeal is made for annual subscriptions. The Report and Rules may be had on application to Miss R. A. Hosking, Hon. Sec., Finsbury House, Ramsgate.

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY'S FEBRUARY SIMULTANEOUS MEETINGS.

LAST week was a memorable time in the history of the Foreign Missions of the Church of England. More than one thousand special services and meetings were held at about 160 centres, and as many smaller places, at the invitation of the Church Missionary Society. That Society usually holds some 4000 meetings in England every year, but they are of the ordinary and somewhat stereotyped kind. A year ago two causes led to the suggestion of a special campaign, not for the collection of funds, but to rouse the conscience of the Church on the question of Missions to the heathen. These two causes were (1) the interest among young men, both in London and at the Universities, and (2) the increasing urgency of the cry for help from all parts of the mission field. Ultimately it was arranged to hold in the present month "February Simultaneous Meetings" all over the country. The idea, at first received with some hesitation, was, after a while, taken up with unexpected enthusiasm; and no difficulty was experienced in obtaining some 200 speakers, the plan being to allot a clergyman and a layman to each centre or convenient group of centres.

A voluminous special literature was produced, which came to be known as the "F.S.M. Papers." Among them were tracts containing suggestions "how to organise the meetings," "how to conduct them," &c.; fervent appeals by the Bishop of Exeter, the Bishop of Sodor and Man, Canon Bell, General Haig, Mr. Robert Cust, and others; and a fac-simile reproduction of the original prospectus of the Church Missionary Society in 1799.

One special feature of the movement was its avowed catholicity. Although arranged by one Society, the promoters expressed their earnest desire that the Master and his cause, rather than the Society itself, might have prominence. The result has been most remarkable. In many places High Churchmen, who took little interest in Missions, have been won to sympathy with the cause; and in many also, hearty good feeling was manifested by the Nonconformists, who gave notice of the meetings in their chapels, and specially commended the whole movement in prayer to the Lord.

The result has been that never before have so many Christian people been gathered together at one time, in all parts of the country, to hear about and to pray for Foreign Missions. Many of the reports are of the most remarkable character. The Record, of last Friday, devoted twenty-one columns to them, and then only succeeded in reporting about half the meetings, many of the most important being held on Thursday and Friday, too late for its issue.

The spirit of prayer evoked was indeed remarkable. London was not included in this effort because it is too large, and is, by and by, to be attacked by itself; but London prayed for the country. In many London parishes special prayer-meetings were held; in others, special petitions were offered at ordinary prayer-meetings; while in one important parish at least (St. Paul's, Onslow-square), the vicar (Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe) requested his people to meet at each other's houses during the week, and join together in little companies to plead with God for a blessing on speakers and audiences all over the land.

America, too, has been joining the concert of prayer. A writer in The Missionary Herald, the organ of the American Board of Foreign Missions, noticing the movement, suggested special prayer-meetings, throughout this month, at different centres in the United States, three or four each day; adding: "If with such public prayer there is also offered the daily secret prayer, may not, must not, the month of February, 1886, become the month of months in the history of the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom in the world?"

Every day last week had its particular engagements. Monday was the special day at Windsor, Birkenhead, Truro, Newcastle, Colchester, Gloucester, Southampton, Hereford, Rochester, Kettering, Louth, Lichfield, Stafford, Ipswich, Bedford, Yeovil, Halifax, Middlesborough. Tuesday, at Newark, Cheltenham, Falmouth, Launceston, Barrow-in-Furness, Plymouth, Sunderland, Bournemouth, Ramsgate, Gravesend, Preston, Leicester, Boston, Shrewsbury, Bath, Lowestoft, Birmingham, Devizes, Great Malvern, Bradford, Ilkley, Chesterfield, Swansea, Ledbury, &c. Wednesday, at St. Albans, Huntingdon, Chester, Liskeard, Redruth, Carlisle, Torquay, Tiverton, Southsea, Ross, Folkestone, Tunbridge Wells, Southport, Melton Mowbray, Lincoln, Lynn, Stamford, Nottingham, Burton-on-Trent, Tamworth, Leamington, Salisbury, Worcester, Huddersfield, Scarborough, Wrexham, Pembroke, &c. Thursday, at Watford, Hertford, Reading, Penzance, Buxton, Ilfracombe, Dorchester, Alnwick, Newport (I.W.), Dover, Peterborough, Chepstow, Redhill, Taunton, Saxmundham, Guildford, Trowbridge, Hastings, Redditch, Harrogate, Leeds, Sheffield, Rhyl, St. Asaph, &c. Friday, at Matlock, Sidmouth, Weymouth, Glastonbury, Bury St. Edmunds, Coventry, Stockton, Bristol, and Clifton, Deal, Blackpool, Northampton, Oxford, Bridgewater, Brighton, Swindon, Kidderminster, York, Hull, Newmarket, Andover, &c.

At several of these places two days were occupied; while at Cambridge, Derby, Exeter, Liverpool, Manchester, Norwich, Great Yarmouth, Wolverhampton, Newcastle-under-Lyme, three, four, or five days were mapped out with various meetings and services. At Cambridge alone there were thirty-five services and meetings during the week. Moreover, even where only one day was set apart, there might be many meetings.

Many of the speakers gave the whole week, moving two and two from place to place. Thus, Rev. Gilbert Karney and Colonel Stewart (the Persian traveller) took Halifax, Bradford, Harrogate, and York; Archdeacon Martin and Mr. C. B. Ker, Great Malvern, Worcester, Redditch, and Kidderminster; Rev. Evan Hopkins and Mr. Sydney Gedge, Devizes, Salisbury, Trowbridge, and Swindon; the Dean of Ripon and and Mr. H. Gibson of Ongar, Louth, Boston, and Lincoln; Canon Tristram and General Touch, Canterbury, Margate, Ramsgate, Folkestone, and Dover. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe was at Cambridge and Eastbourne; Rev. R. C. Billing at Windsor; Rev. Canon Hoare at Derby and Norwich; the Bishop of Sodor and Man at Newcastle and Sunderland; the Bishop of Ossory, Archdeacon Richardson, and General Haig at the Lancashire towns; Rev. G. Everard at Northampton and Peterborough; Archdeacon Perowne at Birmingham and in Suffolk; Rev. W. Hay Chapman at Brighton and Dorking; Captain Chapman in Durham and Northumberland; Mr. H. F. Bowker at Brighton, Hastings, and Dorking; General Field at Tunbridge Wells; Mr. C. Douglas Fox at Maidstone and Reading; Hon. T. Pelham at Norwich; Major Seton Churchill at Oxford; Mr. R. N. Cust at Bath and Eastbourne; Mr. Mitchell-Carruthers in Somerset; Mr. H. Morris, in Yorkshire; &c., &c. Mr. Stevenson Blackwood was to have gone to Colchester, but was prevented by a total loss of voice. The Bishops were able to take less part than had been hoped, owing to an important Episcopal Conference at Lambeth; but the Bishops of Bangor, Liverpool, Newcastle, Norwich, and Salisbury presided at meetings in their own neighbourhoods, and the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and several Bishops, wrote sympathising letters.

It would not be possible in these columns to give any detailed reports. Again and again the expression used is, "Never were such meetings held in ——." The phrase, "soul-stirring addresses," occurs repeatedly. There seem to have been a few failures, mostly at great towns, where the ordinary annual C.M.S. meetings are very large, such as Birmingham and Nottingham. But in the smaller towns there is scarcely a break in the reiteration of language of thankful enthusiasm. As a single specimen we may cite the following from the Island of Anglesey. The Rector of Llangefui writes:—

"I undertook the meetings with serious misgiving; but God be praised, I shall look back to it as the brightest and best day of my life. Hymns were sung in English and Welsh with wonderful warmth and power. The meetings were crowded, many Nonconformists being present, and were intensely solemn and spiritual in tone. The effect upon the large number of young clerygmen present was most remarkable. Such meetings were never held in Anglesey in connection with the Church. The language of every heart is "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

The prayers of God's people are earnestly asked, that this remarkable week of meetings may bear lasting fruit, in increased consecration to the Lord's service, and in men and means in greater abundance for the work of making known his blessed name throughout the world.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

SUNDERLAND.—Mr. Henry Varley has conducted three memorable evangelistic meetings here, and has also given one of his lectures to men to an audience of at least 3000. The workers are delighted at the numbers who have professed to decide for Christ. Many persons have since expressed to me their profound gratitude to God, for giving his servant so blessed a message to them.

Sunderland. JOSEPH J. SPRAGGON.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.—A stirring ten days' mission has been held in the parish of St. Matthew. The addresses of Mr. Israel Sida, the missioner' arrested the attention of the careless, and gave great encouragement and cheer to Christians. Notwithstanding the stormy weather a faithful band of workers succeeded in bringing many to the services, all of which were well attended. Special services were held for children, when the schoolroom was crowded to the door.

RICHARD WEAVER, after being laid aside since December, has been raised up again to commence a mission in Byrom Hall, Liverpool, where he expects to preach for three weeks. He spoke with great power on Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 2, from the words, "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." At the close over 500 sat down to the anniversary tea of Byrom Hall Church, of which Mr. J. Bennett Anderson has been pastor five years. Earnest prayer is desired for this mission.

DURHAM.—The students of Durham University were addressed, on February 6, by Rev. H. M. M. Hackett, Vice-Principal of the Divinity College, Allahabad, who gave an account of mission work in North India, and of the recent revival among the students of Dublin University. On the Wednesday following, Mr. Hackett addressed a meeting in the Town Hall.

MR. PAYSON HAMMOND IN LONDON.

THE CLAPHAM MEETINGS.

In a description of the closing meetings at the Clapham Conference Hall (for which we had not space in our last issue), Mrs Meredith writes:—

Words of tender warning and thanksgiving floated in the air, while the soft notes of the choir sang the lovely "Farewells" of Gems of Praise. How much we owe the hymnology of the revival movement! Not until Jesus comes shall we know the value of those simple rhymes with which we are enabled now to "admonish one another," and to preach with acceptability the Gospel of Christ. Mr. Hammond's hymns, both words and tunes, have been a most welcome change in our meetings: not that we have any fault to find with our old friend Songs and Solos, but that we like variety, and it arouses a fresh interest, and gives new pleasure in the vocal work of our services.

Some little ones could scarcely keep their feet quiet while the well-marked melodies were beating through their ears, and making them feel "like dancing all the while." A boy ventured this parody on Mr. Hammond's well-known—

"I feel like singing all the time,
My sins are washed away."

At first the child's words seemed foolish, but he proved his ground.

"I am so glad. I can't help it. I must stamp a bit. No one can say it is a sin! We do, when we want to show we are glad, jump up and down at school——" "Well, but be quiet here; this is not a playground. You don't jump in schooltime; this is schooltime."

"It is a good schooltime, then; no lessons, but all——" (pause). "What?"

"I don't know—something eternal, never to be over—living with Jesus taking care of us—making us good."

We sympathised with the lad, and wished it was the place and time for an expression of such wild delight as he seemed to be possessed with. David's dance before the ark was not a more natural manifestation of lawful excitement than this shown by a happy boy.

After this case of "excitement" we had a deep sense of the reality of the work in the souls of the children. Some were sad and tearful. One tall fellow came to the platform for his "Covenant Card," and burst out weeping, with his head on Mr. Hammond's shoulder. His unworthiness of the great blessing conferred on him was beyond restraint. "I can't help it," he said, in reply to one who desired to moderate his feelings. It would have been a pity to check him. We have too little of such confession nowadays.

Round the stove, at the end of the hall, were kneeling several boys. Some should be almost called young men, and we had to observe a polite distance of manner, but they had no restraints. One stood up with a sigh of relief.

"It is done!" he said, and seized our hands.

"You! you! I thought you were a Christian before!" we exclaimed.

"No; only half and half. Now I am out and out for Jesus." The big fellow was in tears of pleasure, and he said, "He let me bring in those!" pointing to the still kneeling group. With whispered words of encouragement we passed on to witness a scene in the vestry-room. Between twenty and thirty boys and youths were there engaged in prayer. No leader was conspicuous. They were mutually interested in their soul's struggle. Prayer was giving way to praise, and the room as like a family meeting, where each was doing his best for the other.

During the week the evangelist went down to the Addlestone "Village Homes" on two afternoons, and there was privileged to see much blessing. A visit was also paid to the Nine Elms Laundry, and Mr. Hammond's address to the prison women was one of the most powerful that he delivered during the Clapham Mission.

Mr. Spiers, whom we mention so little, did a great deal among the children. Services for children are arranged in the Conference Hall on Sundays and Saturdays, which it is trusted will form a permanent agency for the salvation of the young in the district.

A STORY OF VILLAGE WORK.

Sir,—About three years ago you brought to the notice of Christians the importance of the much-neglected work of evangelisation in our villages. I felt deeply interested in your remarks, as, with the help of two of my daughters, and a City missionary whom I superintend in London, I had commenced this kind of effort in a village in Kent. We had taken a small farmhouse, furnished, for the summer months. Finding that the greatest ignorance prevailed, and that drunkenness and other vices were practised almost unrebuked, we felt most anxious to do good among the people. My daughters began by inviting the children to classes, and enrolling them as members of the Children's Scripture Union. Soon the parents sent requests to be allowed to come, and we had to hold the meetings in the large farm wash-house, which held nearly eighty people, and which we fitted up for the occasion.

At the end of the first summer, that of 1883, we left the poor people very reluctantly, as their interest in spiritual concerns had been aroused, and some seemed to have taken hold of Christ. What would become of them during the long dark winter months, with no one within reach to care for their souls, and the only place of attraction the village ale-house? Fortunately out of this first summer visit, there arose a small coffee-room, which a Christian man started, and which has been a haven of refuge to many. This we have taken care to supply with some of the best religious publications.

On our return to the village next summer, we found the people far more ready to come to our meetings, which we carried on with increased interest and blessing. Before we left, the largest landowner offered to build me a house, which we might rent and come to, every year. This was done, but before the house was completed we had built in the grounds a mission-room to hold one hundred people, supposing at that time our congregation would only consist of the villagers, and little dreaming what the purposes of God were for the blessing of numbers of the inhabitants of the outlying villages also. Before the room had been used many months it had to be enlarged to hold fifty more.

We are now perfectly overwhelmed with the streams of people, who pour in from all the worst and most neglected villages around us. Among them are the veriest roughs, who have never entered a church or chapel door, who have seldom had a kind word spoken to them—habitués of the ale-house, who have had their place assigned them by the clergy and magistrates, by the gentry, and farmers, and respectable labouring people, as outside every decent circle. Full of levity, often interrupting our meetings by jeers and mockery, always more or less excited or muddled with beer, in their dirty clothes, unwashed, and uncouth in manners, still on they come. They persist in coming, these poor, ragged, worn, unhappy men, who push and squeeze to enter the room when it is already full to suffocation.

A few Sundays ago, when the snow was lying deep upon the ground, many came from villages five and six miles off, trudging through the mud and slush. Though one of my daughters gathered as many as she could into our house for an overflow meeting, still, more than thirty of them had to go back to their villages, or, alas! some to the ale-house, without our being able to speak to them of the Saviour to hear of whom, hardly knowing why, they had come. Such is the congregation, or at least the greater part of it.

To give you some idea of how powerfully the Holy Spirit has been working in the hearts of these people, no less than sixty-seven have come forward in the after-meetings during the last three weeks, most of whom give evidence of true change of heart. I could mention many most interesting incidents respecting these people, for there is nothing so touching as the humbling, softening influence of God's Spirit on wild, rough, ungodly men. One man who had been in prison came. When asked what had brought him, he said: "I had heard that some men as bad as I am had been saved in that room."

The meetings are now carried on every night. For a time my daughters intended to have children's meetings and services of song on some of the week nights, but the demand for evangelistic meetings is so great, and so many are longing for salvation, that they have been obliged to give way.

I appeal to your readers for help to meet our increased requirements. We want to enlarge our mission room still further. It is most distressing to have to send any of these anxious inquiring people away. On a recent Sunday night we had an overflow meeting in the house, and, though the dining and morning-room were filled, the people standing in the hall and on the stairs, it is feared a good many had to go away. I trust that some of your readers will feel it a privilege to contribute to such a work. The expenses attendant upon it and arising out of it are considerable, and now that it is extending to so many villages, and taking somewhat of a public character, there does seem to be a claim upon Christians beyond one's own circle.

I may add that the distress in this and the neighbouring villages is very great, and if any of your readers would like also to send contributions to our Free Soup-kitchen and Coal-ticket Fund, we should be very thankful.

A POSTSCRIPT.

I have been asked by my friend, Mr. Bannister, to add a word of personal testimony as an independent witness, to confirm the account he has so touchingly given in the foregoing letter. I can only say that, interesting as that account is, it decidedly understates the effect produced upon the people by the truly remarkable work that the Misses Bannister are carrying on in their village and the surrounding district. I have seen much of evangelistic effort of every description, in town and country, during the last fifteen years, but a work carrying with it more indubitable proofs of the presence and power of God Himself I can truly say I have never seen than that in which these ladies are now engaged. The depth, the solemnity, the reality of the impression made, and the lasting character of the results secured, in the conversion of notorious evil-doers cannot fail to strike the most careless observer.

Should doubts be lingering in the minds of any servants of Christ, who may read these lines as to the use God still can make of instruments weak and delicate in themselves, and utterly unaccustomed by previous training or surroundings to such a service, but who know what it is really to yield their all to him, they could hardly do better than pay a visit to the mission work at Wrotham to have those doubts dispelled. Y.M.C.A., SHOREDITCH.—Mr. George Williams presided last week at the inaugural meeting of a Shoreditch branch of the association, held at Shoreditch Town Hall. Mr. F. L. Porter, secretary of the Hackney branch, made a statement concerning the necessity for a branch of the Association in the neighbourhood, and pointed out that at least £500 would be required to give the branch a start. Until the branch had established itself, Rev. William Cuff, of Shoreditch Tabernacle, had offered them the use of his mission hall in Kingsland-road. Rev. Septimus Buss, vicar of Shoreditch; Sir W. Guyer Hunter, M.P.; Professor Stuart, M.P.; Mr. R. Burn, Aldersgate-street; the Chairman; Mr. George Howell, M.P., and Rev. J. R. Berry, addressed the meeting.

LITTLE TODDLES.

BY MISS E. P. LEAKEY.*

"He first findeth his own brother."—JOHN i. 41.

LET me introduce this small missionary to you. Does not God say in Acts xvii. 26, "and hath made of one blood all nations of men"? We are all brothers and sisters; let us each see that we seek those who are astray, and do let us each take Little Toddles' resolution to heart—

"I must find him or he will be lost."

"I am sure if little Arthur is a lesser mite than the morsel of a mite that is seeking for him, little Arthur must be a tiny morsel of a mite indeed!" thought I, and so he proved to be. It would have swelled a harder heart than mine to see this exceedingly tiny atom of forlornness in all his misery and wretchedness.

But I must begin at the beginning of my story, and then you will see the aptness of this life illustration to the text quoted above. Picture to yourself, then, the wee-est of little girls whom you could possibly set to run alone. Dress the same little girl in a pretty dark blue frock, a white pinny high up round her throat, a black fur tippet, half hanging off her back; then top it all with one of those extravagantly high poke bonnets, which are so becoming to tiny tots, and you have painted half your picture. Fancy this mite stopping a giant of a drayman in his corduroy suit, his rough barass apron, his band-of-fur cap, his large black moustache, his florid face, his silver-grey hair. Fancy this mite, in the pitiless storm of blinding sleet, half rain and half huge flakes of whitest snow, stopping this Goliath with, "P'ease have 'ou seen my litt'e Art'ur?" With a kindly smile the kindly Goliath replies, "Seen your little Arthur, my little Toddles? No, indeed! I should think you'd better get home to mammy and not think of no little Arthurs out in this biting icy wind!" "I must find my litt'e Art'ur, or he will be lost!" cried the tiny missionary with a sob; and off she ran to seek and to save, not thinking of self in her self-sacrificing love, but thinking only of her little brother, all astray.

I looked at the man, and the man looked at me; we knew each other well by sight. I said, "She can hardly stand herself, and yet her heart is so full of love and care for her little Arthur, that she feels mighty to save. I'll run after her and see what I can do." "Thank you, ma'am," said the Goliath, "and I'll go in to their mother and tell her to look after her babies out this terrible weather." These words took but a second; we parted—I to follow the small missionary, he to warn the parent.

I soon caught up the toddling steps, and, catching her poor little wet hand, I said, "Little Toddles, I'll help you to find Art'ur, and shield you with my cloak." In lovely, artless confidence, the wee creature looked up with her big tearful eyes, but no words came. We ran on. When we had turned corner two, she volunteered: "Billy Bones lives up 'ere; Billy Bones steals Art'ur; perhaps he's 'ere." "But what will you do when you have found him? You can't take him away from Billy Bones." "I am going to t'y; I'll coax him," said the mite. "But you can't carry him," I further said. "I'll 'ead him home to daddy," was the pertinent reply. "Ah, yes," thought I, "this is what we want to do, to try to lead our brothers and sisters home to their Father's house!"

A moment or two after, turning up an alley hill, she quickly withdrew her hand from mine, and darted forward with "I'se found him!" and then, with almost pantomimic acting, the sweet morsel shrieked in the face of the wind that oft-heard sentence, "Come to his mammy, then," and she was instantly hugging a woebegone parcel of filthy garments, from which a dolorous but lusty cry was issuing, as only such-loved Arthurs know how to cry for sympathy and for help. I could not forbear laughing at the motherly instinct which called herself "mammy" to the strayling, in the absence of the real mammy, who speedily made her appearance, with neither bonnet nor shawl, but a huge green umbrella, and taking them in her arms, carried the missionary and her lambkin away out of the fierce storm, to the father's house.

Our brothers, our sisters, are straying, both those at home and those abroad. They cannot find their way to their Father's house. Ought we not to face all difficulties, and seek to save these dear lost human sheep who never can come back unless some dear brothers or sisters seek to try to lead them to Him?

PRAYING CHILDREN IN DAMASCUS.

Perhaps the little ones in England may like to hear a few words about some children in the very old city of Damascus. There, the rain does not come at any time of the year, but only at special times. This year the rain did not come at the usual time, so the corn began to get very dear. The poor were very anxiously thinking how they would be able to buy bread through the winter, if the price was so high. The Jewish people fasted many days and went outside the city to pray for rain.

One day the little children in school were hearing a lesson about "water," and the teacher said, "Do we need any water now?" "Yes," they answered, "we need rain."

"Well, go and tell the Lord what you need."

Then one child stood up and said, "Teacher, how can we go to the Lord?" The teacher told her she had only to kneel down and pray, and God would hear and answer.

So twelve of the children came out from the rest, knelt down, and prayed God to send some rain.

No rain came that day, and in the morning these little ones came to tell their teacher that in the evening they had prayed in their homes, and all day they watched to see if the clouds were coming. We felt sure they would come in answer to this expecting prayer, for the loving Lord likes the little ones to come to Him and ask for what they need.

Did the rain come? Yes. God has said, "Ask, and it shall be given you." On the third day came heavy rain, and on two days afterwards also.

The little ones were very glad and happy, and those who had prayed came apart from the others again, this time to kneel and thank the Lord for his goodness. For we must always remember that, besides praying, we must watch for the answer, and when we get that we must give thanks.

The poor of Damascus are not so anxious now about the corn, because we have had more heavy rain, and the young corn is growing nicely. How good our heavenly Father is to give us blessings for our bodies as well as for our souls. "Pray without ceasing." "In everything give thanks."

ADDITIONAL ANSWERS to Acrostic "I WILL GUIDE THEE" received from A.M.W. E.D. A.F.P. G.H.V.

DIED AT HIS POST.

WE have received from Miss Booth an account of the devoted labours, and death from the effects of a blow, of one of the workers in the Salvation Army in Paris. She says:—

"Hitherto the action of the French Government has been in striking contrast with the Swiss; we have had justice and protection generally from their hands. This makes it all the more deplorable that the Commissioner of Police should have neglected to take a firm stand during the last three weeks, when a band of low, degraded fellows have assembled night after night at the door of our hall in Paris, with the express intention of ill-treating our officers. The most violent, brutal blows have been given to our men cadets, and also to the girls, going to and from the hall.

"Louis Jeanmonod was converted nearly a year ago in one of our Swiss corps, through Captain Kunz, who himself had been converted just two years before at Neuchâtel, in the midst of the most violent persecution. Jeanmonod came to the Training Home last September to be trained for an officer. He was a fine, broad-chested young man, standing six feet, and from the hour we knew him his only desire was to lead others to the Saviour whom he so loved.

"His life in the Home was an example, and his love for the lost was shown in his unwearied efforts to win them. In visiting the cafés he would hold the people breathless, while he spoke to them of Jesus; after the singing his opponents would be softened, and ask him to stay and talk to them longer. He would speak to people in the streets about their souls, warning them to seek pardon there and then; on one occasion, after pleading with two young girls who had stopped him on his way home, he said to his comrade: 'Oh! I would give my life to save them!'

"He received his death-blow on Friday night, January 29. He said nothing about it on Saturday, but went on with his work, and even insisted on going out to continue his loved work of café visitation. Towards evening the pain became so severe that he was carried up to the Colonel's quarters for more comforts. Twelve leeches were applied, and for four days and nights his sufferings were fearful; he took no nourishment. Thursday, an operation was said to be the only hope for removing the accumulated blood, but on seeing him three doctors said it was useless, he was a lost man."

We have not space for the touching details given by Miss Booth of the conversations between this brave though young soldier of the cross and of his comrades in the fight, on his dying bed. He spoke no word of reproach concerning his murderers; but, while wishing he could have remained longer on the field, rejoiced greatly in the happy prospect of soon being with his Lord. When the last moments came "the face rapidly changed and with the words 'It is too beautiful' on his lips he passed away.

"The funeral took place on February 8. The hall was more than crowded. The audience was of the roughest character. Tears flowed on all sides; the most fearful looking men wiped their eyes with their blue blouses. Pasteur Théodore Monod, and Monsieur Louis Saulter walked with us to the cemetery. Here Pasteur Monod spoke, calling our attention to the fact that every day, in the papers, we hear of people assassinating one another for revenge, but here was a man who had truly shed his blood for his fellow-men. He was a true martyr, and he hoped such an example would inspire hundreds to greater devotion and courage. When one member suffers all suffer, and he was there to express his sympathy, first, with Jeanmonod's comrades, and then with his father, who had given his son to France. M. Louis Saulter's warm words also found an echo in every heart."

AN EARLY CONVERT.—One of the first converts to the Gospel in Tuscany, and perhaps in Italy, Dr. Chiesi, has lately died. He openly professed his faith at a time when those who read the Bible were sent to the galleys.

THE LATE REV. E. W. BOARDMAN.

THIS eminent servant of God, formerly of New York State, and late of 3, Highbury-place, London, passed home to glory on the 4th instant, as briefly stated in our last issue. He had reached the goodly age of seventy-five years. Nor were his days, after threescore and ten, "labour and sorrow;" for he was healthy and vigorous, delighting in his unceasing work for the Lord, up to the last. For more than fifty years Mr. Boardman knew the Lord, and for between forty and fifty years of that time walked in the light of his countenance and in an intimacy of fellowship with Him, which those only can know who seek in all things his glory alone.

Wherever Mr. Boardman was known he was deeply loved and highly valued. This love and appreciation were fully shown on Monday, the 9th instant, the day of his funeral. Quite a congregation of Christian friends met at 11 a.m. for a service at 3, Highbury-place. The service was conducted by Rev. Charles Graham, of Shepherd's Bush. Appropriate Scriptures were read by Rev. J. D. Bartlett, of Highgate. Mr. Graham led in prayer, giving thanks for the holy life and bright example of him who had passed away to the presence of the Lord, and also for the grace now given to her who had been his faithful partner and helper in the Lord, asking for her the continuance of that same sustaining power and joyful acquiescence in the will of God under so deep a bereavement. An address was given by Mr. Graham, the substance of which we append, as follows:—

As a Christian, I have known few to equal, fewer still to excel, our venerable and venerated friend—might I not say our father in Christ? Between forty and fifty years, like Enoch, he walked with God. Deep and abiding was his communion with the Lord. His Christian life was a life of victory. He believed in God for victory over his threefold enemy, and he had it. With Paul he could say, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

But our departed friend did more than trust the Lord for victory over sin; he trusted Him also for power for service, and he had that power pre-eminently. Have we not felt how he prayed in the Spirit, and spoke in the Spirit? With what unwearying diligence he pursued his blessed service! In the spirit and demeanour he showed, there shone out the meekness and gentleness of his blessed Master. No Godly soul could be in his company without being edified. His very countenance gave expression to the grace that was within him.

I would speak of him again as a teacher. Two things deeeply impressed me in his teaching. First, his soundness in the truth. I mean more than that he firmly held the foundation doctrines of Christianity, and that in his creed he was thoroughly evangelical; I mean besides, that in his teaching on the normal Christian life he kept strictly to the Word of God, and by it sustained his statements. The second thing which impressed me in his teaching was his clear spiritual perception. This was apparent in his bringing out the deep, spiritual truth of the Word. It was strikingly apparent when he dealt with Christian experience, in meeting the soul's difficulties, and in exposing the subtle and plausible temptations of our great spiritual foe. Truly he was here pre-eminently "a father in Israel." Who can tell the number of souls stimulated and encouraged by his counsels and addresses? The numbers led to entire consecration to God, and to the exercise of faith for continual victory over besetting sin and temptation? Or the numbers delivered from the snares and nets in which the enemy of souls had taken and entangled them?

As a writer, he wrote and published a considerable number of books; yet I am persuaded, from conversation I had with him, that he never wrote a book but to meet, what he believed to be a need of Christians, and when he also believed the Lord had given him a message for them. This is true, likewise, of the many articles from his pen which have appeared in magazines and periodicals. From these products of his pen scores of thousands have received spiritual blessing, and I myself am one of the number. His pen was consecrated to God, as were he, himself, and all he possessed; and God greatly used all for his glory. Wherever the English language is spoken his books have gone, and have been made a blessing. God permitted him to continue his labours up to the very end of his life. And I am persuaded that his holy life will yet reproduce itself in many, who, in their turn, will be blessings to others. Let us thank God for that pure and holy life; and let us follow him as he followed Christ.

Our partings here are only for a brief season. Soon we shall meet again. I am one of those who believe and rejoice in the prospect of the Lord's return. Then "them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." We will then renew our fellowship, and be for ever with the Lord, and with each other. And the Lord, who enjoins us to love one another here, will not grudge us our blissful fellowship with each other there. Meanwhile what our hand finds to do in His service let us do it with our might; while we stand girded and prepared for his glorious appearing.

After Mr. Graham's remarks Lord Radstock followed in earnest and appropriate prayer. Rev. John Allen spoke of the many blessings he had received from the counsels and teachings of his departed father in the faith. After the singing of "The sands of time are sinking," Rev. J. S. Russell, of Notting Hill, concluded with prayer.

In the Highgate Cemetery Chapel, and at the grave, Rev. E. W. Moore, of Brunswick Chapel, Portman-square, read the Service. The Cemetery Chapel was crowded in every part. Many tears of affection were shed on the occasion. Mr. Moore said he should depart from the usual order, and not allow the opportunity to pass without addressing a few words to the assembled friends. After some appropriate and affectionate remarks on the holy life and great usefulness of the eminent servant of God whose mortal remains were about to be committed to the dust, he closed a service conducted with deep solemnity, and felt to be in the spirit of true worship.

A large concourse of sorrowing friends stood around the grave. What was felt, even in sorrow, to be timely and appropriate, a verse of praise, sweetly sung, though with tremulous voices, ended the solemn and hallowed ceremony.

We have not thought it needful here to give any detailed account of the life and life-work of Mr. Boardman, as we understand that a biography will soon be published.

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' HOME.

CHRISTIAN friends who are interested in the welfare of our soldiers are earnestly requested to think of the Dublin Soldiers' Institute, which is sorely needing the erection of an enlarged dormitory for soldiers on furlough, or passing through Dublin, who are exposed to the worst influences from the want of such. The following figures represent those who have been accommodated with beds, and during the furlough season twice the number apply for admission:—Soldiers, 1724; soldiers' wives, 449; soldiers' children, 326; men of the Royal Irish Constabulary, 1404; total for the year, 3903.

It was found necessary to convert the lecture hall into a dormitory to supply even this demand. There is in hand £600, and double the amount is required most urgently, that it may be completed before furlough season begins, when the Home will be almost self-supporting. Major-G. Butler Stoney is hon. treasurer.

Cavan, President.

THE UNEMPLOYED.—Up to Saturday, the 13th inst., the Mansion House fund for the relief of the temporary distress amongst the unemployed in the metropolis amounted to £27,000. Arrangements are being made for the judicious distribution of the fund.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

IN reply to many who are praying for us in this season of prolonged cold, we are thankful to testify, to the praise of our loving Father, that our band have been upheld in the extra strain. The paid sewing-class, the widows' class, and the soup suppers have been kept up; matchbox-makers' families have been helped; bread and coal tickets, socks, comforters, chest preservers, oil, acetic acid, &c., have been distributed, and every available old garment is being used. We have heard nothing but gratitude, from the roughest or the lowest.

Those we come in contact with deplore the disturbances of the past week, and our conviction is, that if more timely help were given in this season of sore want of the necessaries of life, there would be fewer of the dangerous classes. The homes of our people are a disgrace to our rulers, and morality is driven out of them. Whole streets around our Home have been demolished these two years, but no blocks of decent buildings for the poor have arisen. God is watching the grasping capitalists and the oppressors of the poor—the grinding taskmasters who cannot wring another farthing out of the toilers. We weep and sympathise with thousands around us, as they eke out a miserable life. As a man exclaimed last night here, in the midst of 200, each with a jug of hot soup in his hand: "I wish I had never been born!" Alas! with thousands life is a burden. Our compassionate Saviour never intended any of his creatures to be thus crushed down, who are willing to work. He will have mercy and judgment also.

Our hiving off begins in April. Boys' shirts, flannel and cotton, ages eight to fourteen; small woollen socks for eight to ten; girls' print frocks, night-gowns, &c., will be welcome. Send to us for wool, to knit large winter comforters; Messrs. Walker, of Leicester, have given us the wool for that purpose.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. McLagan has secured Monday, June 14, for the second reading of his Scotch Local Option Bill.

Maliki, Emir of Nupe, has sent to Bishop Crowther a touching protest against the introduction of drink into his territory.

On the Guildford-park Estate there is a provision in the conveyance of each plot of land that the premises shall not be used for the sale of intoxicating drinks.

The annual applications for drink licenses in New York City number 16,000, equal to one person out of about twenty-two male residents over seventeen years of age.

Mrs. Lucas has concluded a nine days' Temperance mission in Glasgow under the auspices of the Scottish Temperance League. Her addresses were highly appreciated and many signed the pledge.

The new licensing bill, promoted in the Temperance interest for New York City, proposes to prohibit sale of drink to minors, and that the interior of public-houses should be open to public view.

A Conference on Temperance Legislation, is to be held February 25 and 26, in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly. Representatives of leading liquor as well as Temperance organisations will take part.

A seven days' Temperance mission has just been held at Lambeth Baths. Addresses were delivered by various clergymen, members of Parliament, and by men reformed through attending the meetings at the Baths.

The Indian Witness sorrowfully complains that the revenue authorities n India propose a system which will make rum and opium so cheap that smuggling will not pay. The Witness says "smuggling" is thought a greater crime than "drunkenness."

A Glasgow publican has appealed to his fellow spirit-traders for contributions to a fund for the relief of the prevailing distress. He bitterly complains that to date only five out of the 1700 licensed spirit-dealers in the city had responded, the total amount being £4 14s.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give the first instalment of "Notes from Abroad," by the Editor.

Mr. and Mrs. George Müller, of Bristol, safely reached Australia about three weeks ago.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, accompanied by his wife and daughter, and Mr. R. Cory, of Cardiff, proceeded to the Continent on Monday. They will make a stay at Cannes and will probably visit some parts of Italy. We trust Mr. Radcliffe may be greatly recruited in health by the change. He purposes returning early in April to attend a three days' Missionary Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A.

This Conference, fixed for April 12 to 14, has been resolved upon in response to the suggestions recently thrown out at Manchester and Leicester. It is intended that monthly Conferences shall follow at some half dozen central points throughout the Metropolis, including Mildmay and Exeter Hall. We trust many other large provincial towns will make speed to imitate the good example set by Manchester and Leicester. The Conference at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, will be under the auspices of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society; any suggestions or other communications respecting it should be addressed to the Secretary of that Society, Mr. A. Hall, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

There seems to be ground for the gravest apprehension as to the fate of Bishop Hannington, whose murder in Central Africa was recently rumoured. We still cling to the hope that he has been spared, but if he has fallen it is in a noble cause. The remarkable solicitude now shown in foreign missions in the Established Church, as shown by the simultaneous meetings referred to elsewhere, is noteworthy at this juncture. It may prove true, once again, that the blood of the martyr will become the seed of the Church.

In our issue for November 12, in commenting upon Mrs. Cash's statement that Miss Evans's "repulsion from Christianity" was in a great measure due to the discrepancies which the famous author of "Adam Bede" had observed between religious professions and practical conduct, we expressed surprise that any person of George Eliot's mental calibre should rest satisfied behind so flimsy an explanation. The mere fact that a woman of Miss Evans's great intellectual power felt bound to set aside the faith of her earlier years has had an evil influence upon many weaker minds.

There is a rule of fashion even in scepticism, and a masterly article from the pen of Professor Blaikie in the current number of The British and Foreign Evangelical Review is, therefore, by no means untimely. Dr. Blaikie very forcibly points out that there is nothing in the recently published memoir to show that Miss Evans at any time made "that simple, trustful appropriation of Christ in his priestly function which commonly lies at the foundation of a life of evangelical peace and consecration;" that with her Jesus was more an "object of loving admiration to one seeking a high model," than of trust to one needing and looking for a Saviour. Then the translation of Strauss's "Life of Jesus"—"a repulsive piece of work for any young girl"—followed, her acquaintance with the Hennells, of Coventry, and her study of the book published by Mr. Charles Hennell, "An Inquiry into the Origin of Christianity." It appears that it was the weak work of Hennell, rather than the powerful work of Strauss, that influenced her in the surrender of her faith.

The volume which had such an unhappy effect upon George Eliot, Professor Blaikie describes as "a raw and feeble attempt;" a work assuming points which the most elaborate efforts of great scholars have since failed to establish; accepting explanations which Strauss, Renan, and others have deemed to be inadequate; and altogether a "crude and ill-jointed production." To anyone who thoughtfully follows the line of Hennell's "Inquiry," it will not be difficult to accept Dr. Blaikie's unqualified statement that George Eliot's secession, attributable as it was, in a great measure, to that volume, was "a hasty proceeding based upon false views of the origin of Christianity, and supported by a systematic perversion of fact."

That Miss Evans sold her birthright for a mess of pottage is only too painfully evident; what the effect was upon her life, with its mistakes and errors and its persistent minor tone of sadness, can easily be seen by any reader of her biography. For the sake of many of these readers, and of other students of her works, we should be glad if Professor Blaikie's valuable contribution could be sent out in an easily accessible form, as it is well calculated to remove some dangerous and erroneous opinions.

There is nothing more Christlike than true sympathy. Nor is there anything that gives us greater power with men. Yet how grievously small the compassion of many busy and genuine Christian men and women! How many hard Christians we meet with, who seem to lack humanity to a lamentable degree! Why is this? How can true believers be unlike their Lord in so important a matter? Perhaps lack of teaching explains much. The duty of work for Christ has been taught out of proportion. Sufficient emphasis has not been laid on "loving mercy" and "showing mercy." Perhaps our faith in Him who has promised to "take the stony heart out of our flesh, and give us an heart of flesh," has been at fault. We have not claimed his gift of a compassionate heart.

Perhaps we have been one-sided in our cultivation of the grace of sympathy, forgetting that it is written: "Rejoice with them that do rejoice," as well as "Weep with them that weep." Sympathy with the joy of men is as important as sympathy with their sorrow. "If you would keep up your power of sympathising with sorrow," says Dr. Leckie, of Ibrox, Glasgow, "you must learn to sympathise with joy, the joy even of men you do not know, the joy and success even of those who seem to wish none of your sympathy. You must be intent on sympathising with all real and true success. . . . It must not be said of you that you have sympathy in plenty for those beneath you, or less successful, but very little for anybody above you, or more successful than you. That spirit must be wholly put away. You must hate it. . . . The measure in which you do this is the measure in which your own soul becomes rich and precious."

While distress reigns on all sides at home, it is gratifying to come across a different state of things in our colonies. In the lately published volume by Mr. Froude, the historian, "Oceana" (Longmans), there is the following testimony, written after journeys of some months through Victoria, New South Wales, and New Zealand:—

> I have travelled through lands where I never met a hungry man or saw a discontented face; in an unexhausted soil, the gold with which the earth is teeming converts itself into flocks, herds, and crops of wild luxuriance.

Such an impression, made on an intelligent observer, will be welcomed by many families at home.

A reference occurs in Mr. Froude's volume in relation to the uncertainties of scientific theories that deserves notice. At the Victoria observatory he asked to be shown one of the blue stars of which modern science has written much. He was informed that all the teaching about these blue stars had arisen from an error due to imperfect achromatic lenses. Mr. Froude very wisely asks:—

> How many times must we outsiders learn up ou science and then unlearn it? Each new generation of philosophers laughs at the conclusions of its predecessors.

He might have added: How are we to respect the conceit that calls men advanced thinkers who are swayed by that which "never continues in one stay;" while those whose reliance is on that word which "abideth for ever" are styled old-fashioned?

In The Monthly Interpreter (T. & T. Clark) for February, there is an interesting paper by Professor A. B. Bruce, on the title "Son of Man." He gathers into three groups the occasions when Jesus applied the title to Himself. Those which referred to Him as the Man of Sorrows, which emphasised his human sympathy, and which, out of his present sufferings, foreshadowed his future glory. The tracing of these relations would be a useful Bible study. To the beautiful paper of Dr. Bruce may be added the thought that Jesus, in John v. 27, very significantly connects with the title the judicial authority assigned to Him, and in Matt. xxv. 31, his identification in judgment with his suffering brethren.

The following "Thoughts" are worked out with much ingenuity in The Expositor for the present month (Hodder & Stoughton): Jesus never slept in a walled town—an expression of the fact that He was accessible to all; He never loosed a fetter fastened by man—the evidence of his own spiritual mission, and that among his followers patience was to have its perfect work; He never wrote, except in the dust, because He Himself would not write so that men taught of the Holy Spirit should record his words, and He in heaven be present with his followers on earth.

We would venture to add to the above the suggestion, that our Lord's not sleeping in a walled town may have been to teach men not to rely on the defence of walls but on the protection of God; and that, according to the universal belief of the Church, the "deliverance to the captives," which Christ came to preach, was truly not from any physical bondage, but a loosing from that captivity to evil and to Satan in which He everywhere saw men held.

THE VIGO-STREET NUISANCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE STANDARD."

SIR,—"A Clergyman's daughter, aged nineteen," advertised in The Standard recently for a post as governess, stating her qualifications, &c., and she received an answer from one of those worthless scoundrels who seem to be ever prowling about seeking whom they may devour. He asked her if she "would feel any objection to meet in a friendly way an admirer some afternoon, in the neighbourhood of Cavendish-square, or the Portland-road Underground Railway Station preferred, for a meeting," &c. "He imagines she might, perhaps, think it a piece of fun to meet for a few moments and converse with a gentleman." He encloses a stamped envelope, addressed "Mr. David, 2, Vigo-street (Kelly's Library), Regent-street," and asks her to reply, and "say if she does not care for adventures; if she does not wish to while away half an hour in a chat. She must, if she comes at all, come alone."

Now, there is something almost revolting in the thought that an innocent young girl cannot insert such an advertisement in a newspaper like The Standard, without being insulted by such offensive suggestions from a despicable coward like this. I wrote to the Manager of Kelly's Library, informing him of the nature of this fellow's communication, and asked if he could give me any information as to the man's real name, &c., but have not been favoured with any reply. In answer to a previous advertisement she received a letter from a "gentleman" in Windsor, who said he was en route for London, and wished an answer addressed to No. 2, Hanway-street, Tottenham Court-road.

There is an easy means of repudiating or checking any offensive attentions of those vile fellows in the streets, but it is not so easy to secure protection from their unmanly communications through the Post. I do not know whether the Criminal Law Amendment Bill would enable one to punish those vigilant designers, but I am sure that they are well worthy of the most severe castigation.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
February 12. HER FATHER.

Rebecca Jarrett.

At the Great Meeting at Exeter Hall, on Monday, January 18, on the occasion of the release of Mr. W. T. STEAD from prison,

The Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES said:—

"Every one in that meeting who had not yet read Mrs. BUTLER's book on REBECCA JARRETT should read it without delay. It was the best book that had yet been produced in the course of this controversy. (Cheers.) It exposed the facts, and explained them, as no other book that he had read. It had put Rebecca Jarrett's conduct in a light in which no newspaper had been able to put it. (Cheers.) Mrs. Butler had not lost her faith in Rebecca Jarrett; and her opinion was worth more on such a question than the opinions of all the lawyers and all the journalists in the United Kingdom." The Need of our Soldiers in Ireland.

No provision is made by the authorities for lodging soldiers on furlough passing through Dublin to or from their homes. Respectable houses will not admit them. Where shall they go?

The Dublin Soldiers' Institute has for the last three years to some small extent supplied this need, but the demand for accommodation was so much greater than they could meet, an extra wing to their premises (to include a lecture hall) was decided upon early last year, and some funds for the purpose were collected, on the strength of which the new building was commenced. These funds are now exhausted, and the building is unfinished. A sum of nearly £1,000 will be required before it could be fit for use. Night after night during this winter furlough season, numbers of soldiers are being turned away from the Home for want of room: the usual alternative for such, if decent men, is to walk the streets all night, as they find it almost impossible to obtain any respectable shelter without friends in a strange city.

This urgent APPEAL is made on their behalf to the friends of our soldiers everywhere. From Ireland much cannot, under present circumstances, be expected; but it is felt that the Dublin Soldiers' Home is not a mere local Charity, but, as the above facts testify, it is one which must call forth the sympathy and aid of all throughout Her Majesty's dominions who value our British soldiers, and who would seek to do them good and benefit them both in body and soul. It may be added that it is the English and Scotch soldiers who specially and almost entirely take advantage of the Home (although all are welcome). Since the establishment of the Home many have been "born again" at the meetings and classes held there. To God be all the praise.

CANON WILBERFORCE ON SOCIAL QUESTIONS.

THE TRINITY OF EVIL.

Infidelity—Impurity—Intemperance.

By the Rev. CANON WILBERFORCE, M.A.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster-row.

Under the present order of things we must not too confidently expect literary scepticism to be silenced. Beaten in one direction, its hostility will show itself in another. The genuineness of the Mosaic books has been assailed, but one assailant after another has been confuted; and such books as Colenso's cannot sell now on cheap bookstalls. Nevertheless, one more attack is being formulated in Germany—one more ruthless and revolutionary than preceding ones. Professor Wellhausen is laboriously elaborating another method to account for the Pentateuch, and would thereby discredit all Scripture. The new school will have its following; but this we may be sure of, discomfitures yet more overwhelming await it.

Might not advantage be taken of Band of Hope meetings to disseminate sound views with reference to the evils which result from tobacco-smoking, especially on the part of young people? It is now no uncommon thing to see mere boys taking their seats in the smoking compartments of our morning and evening trains, or smoking their mid-day cigarette. In ninety-nine cases out of every hundred there can be only one result, that of tobacco-poisoning to a greater or lesser extent, the smoking of cigarettes being more injurious than even the pipe or cigar. Fourteen English physicians of the very first rank have testified to the painfully injurious effects which have in thousands of cases come under their own immediate notice. These scientists state positively that in addition to physical evils there are others in their train—weakening of the intellect, impairment of growth, physical degradation, and predisposition to vice.

In France, some years ago, there was an attempt to stop the evil by law, and directors of schools and colleges were required to forbid the use of tobacco. We are not likely in England, however, to reach this point for years to come; for, as in the case of intoxicating drinks, the national revenue is built up to a great extent upon the demoralisation caused by the use of this destructive article. Still, much may be done by Christian parents and Christian workers in checking an evil which seems to be descending day by day to a younger section of the community.

A valued correspondent, who refers to the "starvation wages" of the match-box makers, suggests the formation of a "Lucifer Match Makers' Co-operation Society," the shareholders' dividend to be limited to five per cent., "the surplus to be distributed among the wretched men, women, and children" who in such labour "build up the enormous profits." The idea is a noble one: can it be that it is too noble to be anything but Utopian? Other movements of the kind are succeeding: will anyone, in the mind and spirit of the loving Master, who wept over human sorrow, try this, as another attempt to bridge over, even by a cord, the yawning gulf between the two nations inhabiting England, as Lord Beaconsfield termed our rich and our poor?

Is there not to-day, in much of our spiritual life, too eager a longing for the practical witness of results? And may not there be something essentially unholy in this feverish seeking for a sign? We know that God is behind the circulating juices of the plant, why should we not patiently wait for the flower and the fruit in their due season? "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and it shall be found again after many days," is a command that needs no dissection or analysis, for the promise is part of its being, and in the shall is all the power of God. The sign, after all, like the miracle, is only manifested glory.

The following touching request for prayer reaches us:—

> Will your readers in pity pray earnestly for a husband, to whom the drink is again a terrible snare, after a long season of total abstinence; and that his wife may be able to still patiently love him?

How long is this foul fiend of drink to lead captive our people, and spread domestic misery and ruin in its path? Our Premier once admitted that the destructive forces of the drink were equal to the combined evils of famine, pestilence, and war. We would not needlessly add to his many and heavy burdens, but surely if Mr. Gladstone had had an adequate apprehension of the verity of his own statement, he would, ere now, have attempted to do something more than he has for the legislative repression of this gigantic evil.

It really seems to be true, as Mr. Stead remarked in Exeter Hall last week, that Parliaments and Governments will only introduce beneficent reforms by compulsion from without. Surely the Temperance party in the House of Commons might make their power felt as much as the Irish party has done; have they not as good a cause? To encourage them in this, let Temperance reformers apply the proper stimulus to their representatives. Perhaps local control, or even prohibition, may then come within measurable distance of realisation.

A tried friend and subscriber to many of the good works mentioned in our columns, sends the following hint. We hope it will be heeded and carefully attended to by those whom it specially concerns:—

> It is frequently found that a donation given in aid of the Lord's work is not acknowledged until after needless delay and a letter of inquiry has been written to the receiver. This tends to discourage donors, and is much to be regretted. If service for an earthly king ought not to be performed in a loose, careless, slovenly way, much less service for our glorious Heavenly King, whose servants we are.

Spending an evening with a few friends, on the coast of Africa, we were reading that part of Mr. Stead's letter to Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in which he said, "It is not enough to be Christians, we must be Christs." The expression was objected to by some as too strong, and unauthorised by Scripture. Our mail next morning showed that the same discussion has been taking place in England. We think, however, that it is but an emphatic way of saying what we all mean. The word "Christian" has largely lost its meaning since, under the pastorship of Barnabas and the teaching of Paul, the disciples at Antioch became so Christly that in that Gentile city, and not, as might have been expected, at Jerusalem, they were first called Christians.

Now, the term, in its widest sense, only distinguishes the nations of Christendom from heathens, Mohammedans, and Jews; or it describes those who profess personal faith in Christ. It is almost obsolete in its original sense of being eminently Christlike. Therefore Mr. Stead, as we understand, using a form of speech common in all languages, substituted the substantive for the adjective; and, instead of saying we must be Christian, said we must be Christs—anointed ones—sent ones. Just as we might say we must be a Paul—a more emphatic way of saying we must be like Paul. It would be a quite intelligible form of speech to say, We must not be Pauline, we must be Pauls; and so Mr. Stead said, " W must not be Christians, we must be Christs.'" The Apostle John, guided by the Holy Spirit, says, "As He is, so are we in this world;" and we do not think Mr. Stead's expression was intended to convey more than this.

We do not believe that the esteemed and able Editor of The Methodist Times intends to be unjust, or to have false witness borne against his brethren, but when the reviewer of Rev. E. Storrow's book on "The Millennium," speaks of "the material, retrogressive, unscriptural character of Millennarianism," we wonder whether he is aware that a large number of the most prominent workers for Christ and winners of souls, at home and abroad, are Millennarians, i.e., believers in the personal pre-millennial coming of the Lord Jesus. The reviewer affirms that "in India, where the author has laboured, the practical influence of millennarianism, which is extensively held in certain circles, is very 'mischievous,' and trusts that the book 'will do something to counteract the mischief.'" It would be well if we were told what the mischief is, and whether it is "Millennarianism" which is really the cause of it. Those who have observed how the "looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ" has grown upon the saints of God in recent years, concurrently with the wonderful increase of evangelistic work at home and missionary enterprise abroad, will ask for proof and evidence of the mischief which has thus been charged upon it.

A generation has passed away since the expectant hope of the Lord's return came like a revelation to a large number of Christians, some of whom described it as a second conversion. We do not like this term, but it is certain that the reception, in a very vivid way, of any truth, may impress the mind of a believer even more strongly than when he first believed; and this has been the case with respect to the "blessed hope," as well as other truths. But, in the course of time, those who had received this hope began to discuss the details of his coming, and to form schemes and systems defining the manner and order of events. When this took place the joy of the hope was almost lost, whilst profitless and vexatious discussion was often the result. In view of the approaching Conference on this subject at Mildmay, it is most desirable that the speakers may themselves "abound in hope," and impart that hope to their hearers, and not set before them schemes of fulfilment, concerning the merits of which a large and promiscous congregation will be quite unable to judge.

We are authorised to say, with reference to a paragraph that has appeared in many English and American papers, stating that Mr. C. T. Studd had invested his fortune of £100,000 for the benefit of the China Inland Mission, that the statement is entirely inaccurate. As to the amount of Mr. Studd's fortune, or his disposal of it, the Mission are quite without any information.

DR. HEYWOOD SMITH'S INVALID'S HOME.—We are glad to learn that £1500 has been paid or promised towards the founding of this Home for Invalid Ladies; £500 is still required, however. before the scheme can become practicable. The hon. sec. is Mr. C. S. Read, 4, Austinfriars, E.C.

THE SHELLUHS OF MAROCCO.

I CANNOT say how much we have been gladdened on hearing of the recent widely increased interest in our own beloved country on behalf of foreign missions. Tribes and peoples hitherto neglected may now have their opportunity of hearing of Christ's salvation. Many a young and ardent Christian may be looking for a field where Christ has not been named. I would direct such an one to a virgin soil, to an interesting, honest, industrious, quiet and peaceable people, following pastoral and agricultural pursuits, and most accessible—the Shelluhs of South Central Marocco. They inhabit a large district on the slopes of the great Atlas and its vicinity, and contrast favourably with the turbulent Riffs on the Mediterranean. Together they may amount to about three millions.

The most recent information we have respecting them is given in an interesting lecture by Mr. G. Maw, F.G.S., delivered before the Birmingham and Midland Institute, narrating his visit to the Shelluh country in 1871, with the view of ascending the highest point of the great Atlas, and observing the geology and flora of the country. To accomplish this he obtained from the Emperor his autograph permission for himself and his companions, Dr. Hooker and Mr. Ball, to penetrate the country under the escort of soldiers. Proceeding to Mogador, they started thence for a five days' journey to the city of Marocco. After staying a week, entertained by the authorities, they obtained a guard of nine soldiers and two captains; with their fifteen baggage and riding mules, making in all thirty-three men and twenty-two beasts, they started for the Atlas, attired in Moorish costume. This immense range rises at Cape Guer, near Agadir, on the Atlantic, where it ranges about 4500 feet, and rises to 11,500 feet at Djebel Tezah, south-west of Marocco, then it presents a long ridge for thirty miles of 12,000 feet and upwards.

To get access to the Shelluhs the proximate place would be the town of Agadir, on the coast, but it is doubtful if a European could make a long sojourn there. Mogador promises everything likely to afford a centre of operations for reaching these interesting people, and a move into the interior might be made as it pleased God to open the way. A medical missionary would have greater facilities for entering than any other. The Shelluhs flock into Mogador, and soon a wide and important field would doubtless present itself. It is highly desirable that two missionaries should be associated in the work.

The climate at Mogador is very favourable for Europeans. The strong north-east winds in the summer give a very pleasant temperature and make the climate healthy. The thermometer varies little—68 degrees in summer and 57 degrees in winter. The steadiness of the temperature, and the fact that the town is built either on sand or rocky ground, makes Mogador the healthiest climate in the world. This is the verdict of all medical men; there are no native diseases, and in fact no sickness at all, unless imported from abroad, or caused by excesses. The scenery is good in the vicinity. The residents there are a British Consul, a missionary to the Jews, several English families, two or three French, and as many Germans and Italians. There is no difficulty in procuring a house, and the market is better provided here than any place on the West Coast.

For communication with the outer world there is a French steamer (Paquet Aîné & Cie., Place Central, Marseilles) leaving Marseilles for Mogador nominally on the 7th and 22nd of each month, leaving Gibraltar the 8th and 26th. There is an English steamer (Forwood & Co., Crown-court, Old Broad-street, E.C.) once in five or six weeks, and a Spanish land mail leaving Mogador every Saturday.

The Shelluhs daily come into Mogador to the markets. Though they have Arab schools, few can read. It would not be impossible to find a suitable interpreter on the spot, a proselyte, so that missionary work could be commenced at once. The language to be acquired would be Berber-Shelluh; it would be desirable to add to this the Arabic, and to have at all events enough knowledge of medicine to treat simple cases. Added to this a burning love to Christ, and a boundless sympathy for our fellow-men, and there would be instruments ready to the Master's hand.

The latter particulars I have just received from Rev. J. B. Ginsburg, missionary to the Jews, of the London Society, who has been many years there with his English wife. He would doubtless be willing to afford any further information; his address is simply Mogador, Marocco.—Yours sincerely,

L'Agha, Algiers. George Pearse.

OUR RAILWAY SERVANTS.

THE work of the Railway Mission has made great progress during the past year. Nearly thirty new branches have been opened, making a total of over a hundred, at which about two hundred and fifty services of different kinds are held weekly. Many of these meetings are crowded by the men themselves, others by ladies and gentlemen resident in the neighbourhood. The evangelists, missionaries, and colporteurs, visit the places from time to time for special work. Thousands of railway employés are on the Lord's side, and are very earnestly seeking to bring their mates to the same knowledge. About three thousand belong to "The Railway Men's Christian Association" alone, and this is only a fraction of those who profess faith in Christ. Characters of all descriptions almost have been turned into the narrow way. Happily, most of these become total abstainers, for, an out-and-out change is the rule among them.

A great move was made in Scotland last autumn, and the result has been most satisfactory. Mr. George Clarke and Mr. Eliot Walton are to evangelise in North Britain for two months this spring, if God will. Doors are open on every hand, and though the staff has been slightly increased, it is yet far too small. We need colporteur missionaries who can deal personally with the men. Most of the Companies are recognising the importance of this effort, and are lending their aid in many ways.

But we have only as yet touched the fringe of this great work. Appeals come to us from India, South Africa, and Australia, as well as from the large centres of Great Britain. Alas! we have done but little for poor Ireland; now that our president, the Earl of Aberdeen, has been appointed to the Irish Viceroyalty, a move may be made there also. Temperance work is a part of our advocacy, for we believe many of the troubles on our lines are caused by drink. The lives of travellers are in the hands of the men to a great extent; it is not too much, therefore, to ask the co-operation of such, while we endeavour to enhance their safety. We should like to hear from ladies and gentlemen willing to take up work at any station.

We are formulating a scheme for getting Christian railway-men in this country to go to India and the Colonies, in order to take positions on the railways and become missionaries among their fellow employés. This is especially needed in India, and there are many men ready to go. We shall be glad to hear from any who would like to support a missionary colporteur, or help us in our Colonial and Indian scheme.

Communion Wine. By Rev. James Smith, M.A., Tarland, N.B. 6d. 337, Strand. The chief design of this pamphlet of sixty pages is to show that unfermented wine should be used for sacramental purposes by all the Churches. Certainly the instances here given of the relapse of reclaimed drunkards through taking alcohol at the Lord's table are most appalling, and demand the unprejudiced attention of all pastors and deacons.

DISTRESS IN THE "HAUTES ALPES."

DEAR SIR,—I have just received a very sad letter from M. Brunel, pastor of Freissinières, half a century ago the scene of the apostolic labours and successes of Felix Neff. Kindly allow me space for one or two brief translated extracts:—"A great misfortune has happened to Aiguille. Half the village has been destroyed by a frightful fire. I am trying to collect a little money for the unhappy sufferers. But, alas! my parish is so poor that as yet I have not been able to raise more than nine francs and a half."

I may mention that Aiguille is the last considerable village in the valley of Queyras before you begin the ascent of the Alpine ridge that separates the French from the Italian Protestant valleys. A quiet evangelical mission has been carried on there by my friend Pastor Nicot, to whom the next extract refers. I have visited in his company the simple and now suffering people of Aiguille. They are always poor, and their poverty will be greatly aggravated by the calamity named.

"From his bed of terrible sickness our friend M. Nicot charges me to write to you. Our rigorous climate, and the severe foot-journeys on the mountains which he had to make, have broken down his strong constitution. Before this reaches you I fear his spirit will have returned to God, who is his strength, his joy, and his hope. . . . It is sad to tell also that Madame Nicot is rendered incapable of helping him. A glimmer only of intelligence remains to her. She is wholly unconscious of her husband's danger . . . With their five children—one of them an infant—without father, without mother, what are we to do? I should like to go often to Guillestre, where the sufferer lies. Unfortunately the road is blocked with an exceptional depth of snow. On my return from Guillestre yesterday I had extreme difficulty in ascending from La Roche to Pallous. But happily I was succoured by a man sent by my wife to my relief."

The picture is a sorrowful one and needs no added touches from my pen. I know well the dwellers in those valleys and have visited them and preached the Gospel to them in almost every corner of these last mountain retreats to which persecution drove their fathers. Should any of your readers like to send a little help to the sufferers of Aiguille, or the children of the pastor of Guillestre, I shall gladly be the medium.—Yours truly,

(Rev.) R. H. Lundie.

AFRICA.—In our paragraph last week respecting the departure of Dr. Scholes and Rev. J. Ricketts, two coloured missionaries, for Africa, a mistake was made in the name of the latter. The former is a graduate of Edinburgh University, and is highly commended for professional skill, as well as evangelistic zeal. Mr. Ricketts is a carpenter by trade, but has for years been actively engaged in Gospel effort both in England and Jamaica. They proceed to the Congo in connection with the African Mission for sending coloured men to that continent as Gospel labourers. Mr. T. L. Johnson is the agent of the Mission in this country.

A Y.W.C.A. FLOWER MISSION.—An appeal last year for flowers for distribution in houses of business was so generously responded to, that I would again ask the help of friends in the country in this work. The flowers are an immense help, especially in gaining an entrance into new houses of business, which we find it almost hopeless to attempt without them. Wednesday is the day of distribution, and we shall be most grateful for any flowers sent off in time to arrive on Tuesday evening or early on Wednesday morning. Branches are to be started at the Belgravian and Finsbury Institutes, where flowers will also be gratefully received, if addressed Secretary of the Flower Mission, 58, Elizabeth-street, S.W., or 14, Finsbury-square, E.C. ENGLISHWOMEN AND REPEAL.

"I HAVE always regarded the question of repeal as essentially a woman's question." So wrote Mr. Stansfeld in a letter expressing regret that, through indisposition, he could not preside on Wednesday evening last week at the annual meeting, in Exeter Hall, of the Ladies' National Association for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice. The evening was one of the foggiest and most forbidding of the whole winter season, but the ladies proved that it was their question of a truth by attending in considerable force. The hiatus in the Parliamentary programme caused many M.P.'s favourable to repeal to be out of town, and the platform was somewhat meagrely filled.

In Mr. Stansfeld's absence the chair was taken by Professor Stuart, M.P., who had no difficulty in proving to the audience that the suspension of the objectionable Acts ought at once to be merged in their complete repeal. While false statements and arguments, advanced by permanent officials and by a certain portion of the Medical Press in the country, have still to be met, the balance of opinion is with the repeal movement. Two hundred and seventy members of the House of Commons are pledged to it, and all the members of the present Cabinet are favourable to the abolition of the hateful system. [This last item was news to us: we understood that the present Home Secretary, Mr. Childers, was dead against repeal.] The provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, said the Professor in closing, are quite incompatible with the continued operation of the C. D. Acts.

A resolution calling for their immediate repeal was moved by Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., who described the Acts as a system for ministering to the worst passions of the worst men. He quoted from a recent Indian Blue Book which lets in a good deal of light on the statement that lately exercised the minds of some of our military readers. In this Blue Book complaints are made of the insufficient supply at certain stations of "registered women." The same phraseology is used to describe "the strength" of the troops and the proportionate "strength" of these unhappy women. Mr. Percy Bunting said we must not rest till the Acts are off the statute book, and the possibility of restoration is gone. On the other hand, Mr. Carvell Williams, M.P., did not believe in the possibility of a revival of the system. Ignorance and indifference, its two great friends, have fled, and the power of public opinion is now so strong that even legislators who secretly approve of them are not courageous enough to row against the current of public feeling.

In a pathetic and impassioned address, Mrs. Ormiston Chant pleaded not only for the removal of the legislative bondage under which the sinning woman has been held (while the sinning man goes scot free), but for more tenderness of feeling and reclamatory effort with respect to these unhappy sisters, not of our own nation only, but wherever they are the victims of the cruel passion of the stronger sex. She urged the friends of righteous dealing and equal justice to pester M.P.'s and the editors of the daily papers with letters, demanding the removal of the offending laws from the statute book.

Mr. W. T. Stead's speech was the event of the evening. It was given in his usual plain, blunt, straightforward style. We must not count, he said, on the improbability of the Acts being again made operative. Public enthusiasm is intermittent while the forces of selfishness and depraved appetite are permanent. This Parliament must therefore make a clean sweep of the Acts. But the House of Commons never does what it ought; it only does what it must. It is our part, therefore, to make ourselves an increasing nuisance till they do what we want. We cannot rest satisfied even with repeal at home, while the young nationalities of the world, under British rule, are having the same infernal system foisted upon them. Before closing his speech Mr. Stead made a stern and solemn appeal to the Prime Minister. It was time, he exclaimed, that Mr. Gladstone put his foot down on this question. All power now centred in him, and therefore on him lay the responsibility. Woe be to him, if he ended his career without having wiped off the statute-book of England an infamous Act which was placed upon it during his own Administration! He remembered how Mr. Gladstone made Britain ring with the horrors of outrages inflicted on Bulgarian maidens, and he wanted to know whether he cared the toss of a farthing for the outraged girls of England. He was not saying that Mr. Gladstone did not care; he only said that he had not shown that he did. He would tell Mr. Gladstone that those who recognised most fully the services which he had rendered his country, had seen with shame and confusion of face his indifference to this subject. No one could say that Mr. Gladstone knew nothing of the sorrows, the wrongs, and the tragic histories of the outcasts of our streets. To his honour be it spoken, he had ever been warmly interested in the welfare of individuals, but to that of the class he seemed indifferent. Before he went down to his grave Mr. Gladstone had better sweep away the Contagious Diseases Acts, or he might have to stand before the judgment seat of the Eternal carrying those Acts in his hand as his contribution to the honour of English womanhood.

GOSPEL WORK IN THE STATES.

REVIVALS

of an extensive and thorough description are reported from the States of Indiana, and Illinois, and the city of Princeton, N.J.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

According to latest accounts these brethren were at work in Knoxville, Tennessee, so that they have fairly entered on their southern campaign. The Knoxville Daily Journal reports overflowing assemblages on the opening days.

MR. MOODY AND CHICAGO.

During his recent visit to Chicago Mr. Moody managed, as usual, to "strike while the iron is hot." He proposed at an immense and influentially attended meeting in Farwell Hall that a quarter million of dollars (£50,000) should be at once subscribed, a fifth part of it to be expended in erecting small churches for the people in the crowded parts of the city, and the rest to be invested for the support of evangelistic preachers. Mr. Moody's magnetic power once more prevailed; a large proportion of the sum was promised on the spot, and it is understood that the project will be carried through.

A MISSION IN DETROIT.

The City of Detroit has been having special religious services during January, in which, besides the larger evangelical denominations of Christians, the "Disciples," "Brethren," and other sections of the one Church have participated. In some cases these daily services continued but for a week or so, while in others they seem likely to last far into February. While, speaking in a general way, the definite results are regarded as disappointing, there cannot fail to be good and lasting results in the future from such unusual and combined Gospel effort.

The principal feature, in a popular sense, was the visit of the English mission preacher, Rev. Mr. Rainsford, now of New York City, early in the month. His daily ministrations at noon and evening filled the largest Episcopal churches, often to everflowing, and provoked an interest in spiritual matters that temporarily "demoralised society," as the newspapers put it, and threatened to rob that portion of the community of some of its brightest stars. Judging from appearances, the restraint has already worn off for the most part, and dances, sleighing parties, rinking, &c., are as much patronised as before. The unconstrained manner of the young mission preacher, quite as much as his fluent and telling addresses, served to interest the careless and fashionable throngs. Most of his discourses seemed intended for professed Christians, and the sharp, Scriptural line of demarcation between the false and true, summed up in the oft-repeated axiom of the Lord Jesus, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of heaven," undoubtedly surprised not a few who had supposed that church-going, ritual observance, and almsgiving alone constituted Christianity.

The Methodists and Presbyterians are still carrying on the crusade, the former in a very vigorous and persistent manner. One result has certainly followed the mission, and that is, one is more readily listened to now, even in hotels and by the wayside, when speaking for Christ, than was the case previously. E. S.

Detroit, Mich., U.S.

REV. W. H. AITKEN'S MISSION.

Mr. Aitken returned to England per steamer Baltic early last week, after a favourable voyage. During his American sojourn a great work has been done which must largely affect the future of the Episcopal Church in that country. Hitherto that church has been regarded as a standing protest against revivalism and all its works; now it is fairly committed to evangelising work done in a sober and rational fashion. There were so many calls for his presence and speech that Mr. Aitken might have stayed on the other side for years.

He took public leave of his American friends on the night before he sailed, January 29, at a mass meeting held at East Orange, New Jersey, some ten miles from New York. It was a miserable drenching night, yet the great skating rink was crowded with upwards of 3000 persons, and the meeting was a most impressive one. The Bishops of New York and New Jersey were both present, and spoke in very kind and sympathetic terms of the work; the Bishop of New York pointing out that amongst other effects of the mission it had tended to bring sections of all denominations nearer to each other, and to induce a more cordial feeling between them. Many friends went down to the ship to see Mr. Aitken and his party off next day, and took a most affectionate leave of them.

UNEMPLOYED IN NORTH WALES.

It may interest your readers, in connection with the recent riots in London, to hear of the marked contrast shown by the Christian quarrymen, who are now out of work owing to the unhappy dispute between Mr. Assheton Smith and his employés. I append an extract from a letter received by me from a friend a few days ago. After speaking of the prevailing distress, my correspondent writes :—

"There are good holy men suffering, who from circumstances, and ill-health have not been able to save; it would do you good to hear and see these people; to hear the prayers in our prayer meetings—the wrestling with God, and their great faith that all will work together for good. There has not been a single case of bad behaviour in this trying time. When I go to the little village, the men are so quiet, taking their children out, big men carrying their little babies, or working in their gardens. Of course, there are exceptions to this rule, but I have never seen them; they are too weak to face public opinion, to do anything openly.

"It is the same at Llanberis. I am told all the mass meetings, which are held under a rock called 'Craig yr Undel' (rock of unity), are begun and ended by singing some of the grand old Welsh hymns, thousands of men congregating. They are fighting for principle; indeed we all think so. My cousin (an M P.) told me that there never was a nobler fight for religion, political rights, and morality. There are a number of men who were employed in connection with the quarry who are not in any union and consequently do not get any help in that way. In the little village referred to, there are eight noble men who have lived thriftily all their lives, and saved a little money (out of 15s. to 18s. per week). They now come in for the benefit of the fund, but have given up their portion to these their brethren who are needing it more."

Some money was sent from a friend in England with the request that loaves of bread might be bought and given to these Christian sufferers; but, as the wives always bake their own bread, flour was distributed instead. Will not some of your readers out of their abundance send to their relief? Any further information will be gladly given by Mrs. R. Roberts, Crüg, near Carnarvon, North Wales.

Letters to the Editor.

IRISH PROTESTANTS AND SOCIAL PURITY.

Dear Sir,—In your paper of January 28, an Irish correspondent truly says the tone of The Daily Express, of Dublin, on the purity agitation was "absolutely intolerable." I must, however, protest against the inference that the tone of Protestant opinion finds its real expression in that journal. The special efforts now being made to advance the movement have the approval of the bulk of Protestant Irishmen. I believe the Protestant Archbishop of Dublin has presided over meetings to promote the purity crusade, and the Synod has given its sanction to a society within the Episcopal Church for the promotion of the same good work.

At the same time, many here, as well as in England, condemn some of Mr. Stead's methods of investigation, as well as what they conceive the unnecessary publicity given to revolting particulars.

MISSIONS IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of December 3, you print a letter with the heading, "Spiritual Famine in India," sent to you by my friend Mr. Norton. I write to correct the facts on which Mr. Norton bases his assertion, that in the Central Provinces and Berar there is a population of three million souls without a resident missionary or Christian labourer. The Sambalpúr District is mentioned as not having a single missionary. This district has for the past eight or ten years been worked by the General Baptist Mission of Cuttack, and has two resident missionaries and a staff of catechists. In the adjoining district of Raipúr a German Lutheran Mission has had its headquarters for eighteen years at Birrampúr, with a missionary station at the headquarter town, viz., Raipúr. Further west we have the two districts of Bhandara and Nagpúr, which are under the care of the Free Church of Scotland Mission, and a very good work this mission is doing in both districts. South comes the district of Chanda, attached to which is Mr. Norton's so-called Upper Godavery District as a subdivision. This large area is under the charge of the Chanda and Central Indian Mission, and has been so for over fifteen years.

In the Betul district the last-named mission began work twelve years ago, and withdrew on the arrival of the missionaries of the National Evangelical Mission of Sweden. In the adjoining district of Chindwara the Free Church of Scotland has had a missionary working for nineteen years; and this district, owing to the death of its pastor, is likely to come under the care of the Swedish Mission. East of the Chindwara is the Seoni district, which has for about fifteen years been subject to the mission labour of some reverend gentlemen who, I believe, belong to the original "Seceders" from the Church of Scotland. North-east of Seoni is the Mandla district, for some years past always visited by the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society stationed at Jabalpúr, but now possessing a resident missionary of that Society. West of Mandla is Jabalpúr, for years the head-quarters of a branch of the Church Missionary Society.

Proceeding westwards down the Narbada Valley, we find at Narsinghpúr a missionary of the Swedish society. At Hoshangabad the Society of Friends have been working for ten years or so. In Minar we find a mission conducted by an American missionary. This district was originally under the care of the Indore branch of the Society of St. John the Evangelist (Cowley Fathers). It was given up on the death of Rev. S. W. O'Neill. In the north, in the Sangor district, the aforesaid Swedish society have a missionary at work.

There are eighteen districts in the Central Provinces, with a population of over eleven millions, and fourteen of these have at least heard in part the Gospel news. The remaining four districts contain a population of under one million, and in two of these there are, I think, resident catechists. Of the five districts in Berar, three—viz., Bassein, Akola, and Ellichpúr—have, I believe, missionaries belonging to the Episcopal Methodist Church. Small as is the number of workers in this large field, it is large in comparison with the two Scotch missionaries at Najpúr, and the one Church Missionary Society labourer of Jabalpúr of twenty years ago.

A word now about Mr. Norton's work among the Korkos. I would commend it to the notice of all earnest Christians. Mr. Norton is unconnected with any society or church. He with his family reside in a large village, thirty miles from any other European. Through faith he has worked and been maintained for four years past. He has succeeded in winning his way among a wild and timid race. He has had it in contemplation to settle on the high plateau of Khámla, some fifteen or sixteen miles south of Bhaisdehi, overlooking the fertile plain of Berar. Here, though he will be will be in a healthier climate, the elevation being 3500 ft. above sea level, he will be still more isolated, the plateau being situated in a very wild but beautiful country, the home of the Korko, and acccessible only by footpaths known to the Korko alone. He will require funds to build a house and out-offices. About £70 would see him comfortably settled in this new tract. Are there none to give this sum, or a part of it?—Yours faithfully,

J. W. Macdougall,
Betul, C.P., India. Deputy Commissioner.

We have also received a letter from Rev. Hector Macduff, Chaplain of Upper Sindh, stating that the Church Missionary Society is at work in Aurangabad, C.P. Mr. Macduff is labouring among the Eurasians, efforts for whom, he says, have an important bearing on the spread of the Gospel amongst the heathen.

THE LATE WAR IN BULGARIA.

In a recent letter from Mrs. Tongoroff, Philippopolis, she writes:—"We have had the joy of hearing from several who have left the hospital that they have been blessed both body and soul, and that by God's help they have decided to live for Him. Others write telling of persecution and trial. Thousands of soldiers left our town last week to make room for those coming in from Sophia. Our hospital is quite full. We have three, four, or five deaths daily. The doctors say I have saved the lives of many.

"I do thank God that the way has been opened for us. All we need is the means to carry on the work. I wish it were possible for me to carry on the hospital and prison work permanently. I have such a desire to do it, and I do feel called to it. It could be done in both places for four pounds a month. I dread the thought of giving it up; the hospital has been in such a fearful condition, and no one seems to take any interest in the sick here."

Writing some days later Mrs. Tongoroff says: "Your most welcome letter arrived safely with the cheque for £10. We have also received from Constantinople fifty Bibles and one hundred Testaments. I cannot tell you how very thankful we are. When I wrote to you last, we hoped many thousands of the poor soldiers would return to their homes and families, and be able to do something for them until March; however, it is not to be so. This is the cause of much suffering. We find now that the hospital is damp in the lower storey, and we think this is the cause of so many deaths; and the drainage is in a very bad condition, but I fear nothing will be done until after March.

"We have much to encourage us in our work. Many of the poor sufferers have been much blessed. To-day we received news that more soldiers are coming to Philippopolis, and an officer has just been to our house wanting us to take in fourteen. But we have no place, except my husband's study, and that we cannot well spare as he needs the room, so many call to see him upon different affairs. Everyone seems troubled, and dreading the future. Please thank all our dear friends most sincerely for the help they have been so kind as to send to our poor sufferers."

M. Braithwaite, 312, Camden-road, N., will be happy to be the medium of forwarding help to these workers among the sick and wounded.

WOMENS' MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.—A meeting was held on Monday, 8th inst., of the medical branch of this work, in the hall of the Institute, Clapham-road. Mrs. Meredith's statement of the progress of the mission was cause of much thankfulness; she told of its success under Dr. Annie McAll, whose branch has become a school of midwifery in connection with the Lambeth Infirmary. The accommodation afforded by the premises is far too small, and preparation for the work requires extended building operations. Mrs. Meredith asks for help in this important service.

AN EAST-END MOTHERS' HOME.

The Lady Violet Greville has told the simple and touching story of a Mothers' Home in Juniper-street, Glamis-road, Shadwell, London, E. We are rejoiced to learn that the Institution, intended for women in the hour of their direst need, has been greatly successful in its "humble and tentative fashion." Only funds are needed to enable its kind-hearted promoters and managers to extend to hundreds of poor creatures that help and assistance which so often they are unable to obtain, either in the dingy and comfortless "one room," which constitutes the home of so many industrious and deserving families, or in the dreaded workhouse from which so many of the worthy poor recoil in dread.

In this Mothers' Home "each woman enjoys the privacy of her own little room," instead of feeling herself "only a stray unit in the ward of a large and crowded hospital;" and, contrasted with the necessarily squalid place from which most of them are taken for a little while, with its impossibility of rest, silence, comfort, or seclusion, the fact does, indeed, speak for itself. "Each one of us," says Lady Greville, "needs a brief breathing space in her life, a little rest, a little standing apart from the busy and anxious turmoil of existence, a little of the silence and peace that brings the soul nearer to God." Such peace and silence can be found by many of our poor sisters only when they can get away from the crowded one room; and we are not surprised at the statement that at the Shadwell Home "the patients recover quickly, and in most cases find themselves far better able to bear the heavy burden of life than before their entrance."

Patients have eagerly begged for admission, but for want of space they have had to be refused. Clothes for the shivering little ones, or blankets for the mothers are required, and the noble work is hampered and limited for want of funds. We are sure that very many happy mothers, around whom there is everything refined and luxurious, will send thank-offerings in support of the institution either to Lady Greville, or to Mrs. Ashton Warner, the lady superintendent, at the above address. The work is one of a keenly economical and practical kind, but it has its spiritual side, and in that direction has been greatly blessed.

LORD MOUNT TEMPLE is seriously ill with inflammation of the lungs, at his town residence, in Great Stanhope-street, Mayfair.

DEATH.—On the 14th inst., at Stamford-hill, Mr. Philip Robinson, formerly resident for many years in Singapore. "For ever with the Lord."

HEBREW CHRISTIANS.—Last week a social gathering of Hebrew Christians was held at the Mission Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel. Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, delivered an earnest and practical address. He hoped his friend Mr. Ehrlich, the missionary, would continue to persevere, as he had done in the past, in the winning of souls to Christ. Revs. Mr. Machin, J. B. Barraclough, A. Bernstein, and others also gave addresses.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.—An interesting meeting was held last Thursday evening, at 186, Aldersgate-street, when addresses were given by Misses Davis and Tatchford, who were to sail on Saturday for China, to join the staff of the Inland Mission. Mr. Broumton (who, with Mrs Broumton, is returning after furlough) also spoke. Mr. Drake, who has just arrived from China, dwelt forcibly on the tremendous spiritual needs of China's millions. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe powerfully exhorted to the exercise of faith in God, who has linked his promise with our obedience to his command.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, FEB. 21.—NUMBERS XII.

1.—He had married an Ethiopian woman.—"This can hardly be Zipporah, who was not an Ethiopian but a Midianite (Exod. ii. 21. . . . It is far more likely that Zipporah was dead, and that Miriam in consequence expected to have greater influence than ever with Moses. Her disappointment at his second marriage would consequently be very great. The Christian fathers note in the successive marriage of Moses with a Midianite and an Ethiopian, a foreshadowing of the future extension to the Gentiles of God's covenant and its promises; and in the murmuring of Miriam and Aaron a type of the discontent of the Jews because of such extension."—Sp. Com.

3.—Now the man Moses was very meek.—"The words are inserted to explain how it was that Moses took no steps to vindicate himself, and why consequently the Lord so promptly intervened. The Hebrew word occurs frequently in the Psalms, is usually rendered by 'meek' or 'humble,' and is frequently applied by the writers to themselves and their associates" (comp. Ps. x. 17, xxii. 27).—Ibid.

7.—My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all mine house.—"The prophets were simply organs, through whom Jehovah made known his counsel and will at certain times, and in relation to special circumstances and features in the development of his kingdom. It was not so with Moses. Jehovah had placed him over all his house, had called him to be the founder and organiser of the kingdoms established in Israel through his mediatorial service, and had found him faithful in his service."—Keil.

4.—If her father had but spit in her face, &c.—If her earthly father had so treated her that she should feel a sense of humiliation for seven days, how much more when God had humbled her thus.

MONDAY, FEB. 22.—NUMBERS XIII.

16.—And Moses called the name of Oshea the son of Nun Jehoshua.—This latter name was subsequently contracted into Joshua, or, in Greek form, Jesus. Its origin, as here described, is therefore peculiarly interesting. The original name Oshea, or Hoshea, or Hosea (the names of the last king of Israel and of the first minor prophet being the same) means "deliverance" or "salvation." The addition of the prefix "Je," the first part of the sacred name of Jehovah, adds to it the thought of God's salvation, or "Jehovah shall save." This change of name is appropriately connected with Joshua, who was afterwards to lead Israel into the promised land, being sent thither as one of the spies. It may be that the very name given to him taught him where to look, and sustained his faith, and thus enabled him to say with Caleb, "If the Lord delight in us, then He will bring us into this land, and give it us" (xiv. 8). When, however, this name, expressive of God's salvation, was given by Divine direction to the incarnate Son of God, it was pointedly added, "for He shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. i 21), identifying Him thereby with Jehovah Himself, and so justifying the fulfilment of the prophecy that He should be called "Emmanuel," i.e., God with us.

30.—We are well able to overcome it.—This was, no doubt, intended to be an expression of faith on Caleb's part, but it was not so intelligent or distinct an expression as that of Joshua, in the next chapter (xiv. 8), in which Caleb also joined. It left out the most important part of all, viz., that their ability to overcome was not in themselves, but in the Lord. Its want of definiteness may have partly prepared the way for the other spies, looking only at themselves, giving way to unbelief. "How forcible are right words!"

32.—A land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof.—"The land was an apple of discord, because of its fruitfulness and situation; and as the different nations strove for its possession, its inhabitants wasted away."—Keil.

TUESDAY, FEB. 23.—NUMBERS XIV.

1.—All the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night.—What in any other nation might have been described as a panic of fear, was, in the case of Israel, a panic of unbelief, well meriting the reproachful expostulation of Jehovah in ver. 11: "How long will it be ere they believe Me, for all the signs which I have showed among them?" The transition was easy from this distrust of the Lord to open rebellion against Him, expressed in the words: "Let us make a captain; and let us return into Egypt." The connection between "the fearful and unbelieving" (Rev. xxi. 8) is very close. On the other hand, we have the exhortation in 2 Pet. i. 5: "Add to your faith virtue (or courage)," exemplified in the language of Joshua and Caleb (ver. 7—9), whose words of faith and courage only drew forth the hatred of unbelief and cowardice: "But all the congregation bade stone them with stones." The first unbeliever (Gen. iv. 1; see Heb. xi. 4) soon became a murderer.

13.—Then the Egyptians shall hear it.—This zeal of Moses for the honour of the Lord, and also for the preservation of the people entrusted to his care, as mediator, gives us a faint picture of the intercession of the Lord Jesus, of whom he was the type, the One who is "faithful to Him that appointed Him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house."

17.—Let the power of my Lord be great, according as Thou hast spoken, saying, The Lord is long suffering and of great mercy, &c.—This is, indeed, a striking mode of pleading. Power in punishing could be easily supposed, but power in pardoning is to many a strange thought; but Moses grounds it on the Lord's own revelation of his name (Exod. xxxiv. 6), from the words of which he here quotes.

21.—Both "Speaker's Commentary" and R.V. translate, As I live, and as all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord, because all those men, &c.

34.—My breach of promise.—A most unfortunate translation. R.V. renders it "My alienation;" "Speaker's Commentary," "My withdrawal, my turning away;" "Jewish School and Family Bible," "My estrangement from you."

44.—But they presumed to go up unto the hill top.—They had had fair warning (ver. 25) that as they had refused to go up trusting to "the Lord is with us, fear not" (ver. 9) they would have to face in their own strength "the Amalekites and Canaanites." Deut. i. 42 throws light upon the passage, and should be looked at.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 24.—NUMBERS XV.

2.—When ye be come unto the land of your habitations, which I give unto you.—This is a strange contrast to the words of the last chapter (ver. 30), "doubtless ye shall not come into the land," but that was spoken to those who "could not enter in because of unbelief" (Heb. iii. 12); this, to the two exceptions amongst the adults, Joshua and Caleb, and those under twenty years who now formed the nation that had inherited the promises. "For what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect? God forbid" (Rom. iii. 3).

5.—For a drink offering.—No mention is made in Lev. ii. of a drink offering; yet from scattered notices (Exod. xxix. 40, Lev. xxiii. 13) it appears to have been at least an occasional accessory to the meat offering. In the wilderness it was not prescribed as a necessary accompaniment to the meat offering, but now, in anticipation of their soon entering the land of vineyards, it is.

30.—But the soul that doeth ought presumptuously (margin, "with a high hand") . . . shall be cut off from among his people.—Gesenius explains the Hebrew phrase, "with a high hand," to mean "openly, proudly, with defiance." It is used of the way in which Israel left Egypt (Num. xxxiii. 3, 4): "Israel went out with an high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians, while the Egyptians were burying all their firstborn" (R.V.). The case of the Sabbath-breaker which follows is no doubt inserted as a practical illustration of sinning "with a high hand."

38.—A ribband of blue.—Blue was the heavenly colour, intended to remind them of God. The connection seems to suggest that this was a divinely appointed remedy to keep Israel from sinning "with a high hand." It was a sort of livery to remind each one of Him whose servant he was.

THURSDAY, FEB. 25.—NUMBERS XVI.

10.—Seek ye the priesthood also?—Although Moses and Aaron are addressed together in ver. 5, it is manifest from the whole context, as well as from the next chapter, that the revolt here recorded was especially against Aaron; see ver. 11, "and what is Aaron, that ye murmur against him?" Moreover, these words of Moses show that Korah and his company not only questioned the divinely appointed priesthood of Aaron, but also claimed to assume its functions themselves. Their sin consisted in this, that, having been as Levites invested with ministerial functions (see ver. 9), they laid claim to what belonged to Aaron, viz., priestly functions. This has been also the sin of Christendom. Not content with ministry, priesthood has been assumed, which is as much a rebellion against Christ, who alone discharges the priestly office, as Korah's was against Aaron. No wonder, therefore, that a prophetic intimation in Jude 11 leads us to expect that the closing scene of Apostate Christendom is shadowed forth in this account of "the gainsaying of Korah."

"Who are justly chargeable with the sin of Korah? . . . Those who assume a priestly office and work which only belong to Christ Himself."—C. H. M.

13.—Thou hast brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and honey.—"With perverse contempt for the promises, Dathan and Abiram designate Egypt by the terms appropriated elsewhere to the land of Canaan."—Sp. Com.

33.—Went down alive into the pit.—Comp. Rev. xix. 20, where of the beast and the false prophet it is said, "These both were cast alive into a lake of fire."

48.—He stood between the dead and the living; and the plague was stayed.—"The priesthood which the company of Korah had so wickedly usurped, had brought down death and destruction upon himself, through his offering of incense; but the divinely appointed priesthood of Aaron averted death and destruction from the whole congregation when incense was offered by him, and stayed the judgment which had broken forth upon it."—Kurtz.

FRIDAY, FEB. 26.—NUMBERS XVII.

"Whilst the Lord had thus given a practical proof that Aaron was the High Priest appointed by Him for his congregation, by allowing the High Priestly incense offered by Aaron to expiate his wrath, and by removing the plague, He also gave them a still further confirmation of this by a miracle which was well adapted to put to silence all the murmuring of the congregation."—Keil.

8.—The rod of Aaron . . . yielded almonds.—The spiritual significance of this is very interesting. The word for almond tree in Hebrew means the "waker," because it is the first tree to wake up after the winter's sleep (see Jer. i. 11). It thus becomes a striking figure of resurrection. Now, it was by resurrection that the priesthood of Christ was declared, as we learn from Heb. v. 5: "Christ glorified not Himself to be made an high priest; but He that said unto Him, Thou art my Son: this day have I begotten Thee." But that these words refer to the resurrection Paul shows in Acts xiii. 33: "He hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son: this day have I begotten Thee." Aaron, therefore, thus shown to be God's priest, typifies Christ being declared God's priest by resurrection.

10.—To be kept for a token against the rebels.—"The preservation of the rod before the ark of the covenant, in the immediate presence of the Lord, was a pledge to Aaron of the continuance of his election, and the permanent duration of his priesthood."—Keil. So "Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more: death hath no more dominion over Him" (Rom. vi. 9). "This man, because He continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."

SATURDAY, FEB. 27.—NUMBERS XVIII.

1.—Thou and thy sons and thy father's house with thee shall bear the iniquity of the sanctuary.—"That is, the guilt of the offences which an erring people would be continually committing against the majesty of God, when brought into contact, through the ordinances, with the manifestations of his presence."—Sp. Com.

2.—That they may be joined unto thee.—"An allusion to the name of Levi, which signifies 'being joined.' The old name is, in fact, taken up with a new meaning; the Levites became, by virtue of their office, a Levi indeed."—Ibid.

7.—For everything of the altar, and within the vail.—Such was the sphere of priestly service, marked off by its two extreme limits, from the altar where the priesthood met the people and presented for them their offerings and sacrifices at the door of "the tent of meeting," to the innermost sanctuary, where once a year, and not without blood, the high priest entered in even into the immediate presence of Jehovah.

12.—All the best of the oil, and all the best of the wine, and of the wheat . . . . have I given thee—The Lord had said (ver. 7) in reference to Aaron and his sons, "Ye shall serve." This verse shows that the Lord takes care of his servants.

20.—And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land . . . . I am thy part and thy inheritance.—"Inasmuch as not only the whole land of the twelve tribes but the whole earth belonged to Jehovah (Exod. xix. 5), He was necessarily to be regarded as the greatest possession of all. Hence it was the greatest privilege and highest honour to have Him for a portion and possession."—Keil.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

A SERMON

On Behalf of the CHURCH PASTORAL-AID SOCIETY will (D.V.) be preached in

The LORD BISHOP of SODOR and MAN.

PRAYER FOR HOME MISSIONS.

It is felt by the Committee of the Church Pastoral-Aid Society to be highly desirable that a day should be set apart for special Prayer on behalf of Home Mission work. The Committee therefore offer the suggestion that SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, should be so observed as widely as possible, both in Devotional Meetings and in private.

It is hoped that the Church Pastoral-Aid Society, which is just about to commence its second half-century of Home Missionary Work, may not be forgotten at such meetings or in private.

YIELD not to temptation, for yielding is sin,
Each victory will help you some other to win;
Fight manfully onward, dark passions subdue,
Look ever to Jesus, He'll carry you through.

Ask the Saviour to help you, comfort, strengthen, and keep you;
He is willing to aid you, He will carry you through.

JAMES SCOTT: A LABOURER FOR GOD.

By Rev. Andrew A. Bonar, D.D., Author of "Memoir of R. M. M'Cheyne," &c., &c.

"The sketch of the life of James Scott, by the Rev. Andrew Bonar, D.D., is interesting and full of pathetic beauty. Mr. Scott seems to have been a man of intense Christian enthusiasm. His life work, so early closed, began when other young men have scarcely realised responsibility, and was carried on with eager earnestness through the recent wonderful period of religious revival in Scotland. Side by side with Mr. Moody, Mr. Scott laboured till strength broke down and consumption closed the active, useful life at the age of thirty-eight. A helpful book for Christian workers."—Christian World.
